PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Rangoon High Court

February 21, 1935

LORD TOMLIN, LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN AND SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON

DAWSONS BANK, LIMITED—APPELLANTS

NIPPON MENKWA KABUSHIKI KAISHA (JAPAN COTTON TRADING COMPANY, LIMITED)—RESPONDENTS

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Conditions for operation of the rule—Estoppel and waiver—Distinction—Estoppel by waiver, if possible—Statement to ground estoppel must be clear and unambiguous—Letters "O. K." on delivery orders and bills—Construction—Whether operate as estoppel—Company—Claim against Company—Liquidation—Subsequent termination of liquidation—Company, how to be represented—Parties—Pleadings.

Estoppel is not a cause of action. It may (if established) assist a plaintiff in enforcing a cause of action by preventing a defendant from denying the existence of some fact essential to establish the cause of action, or (to put it in another way) by preventing a defendant from asserting the existence of some fact the existence of which would destroy the cause of action. It is a rule of evidence which comes into operation if (a) a statement of the existence of a fact has been made by the defendant or an authorised agent of his to the plaintiff or some one on his behalf, (b) with the intention that the plaintiff should act upon the faith of the statement, and (c) the plaintiff does act upon the faith of the statement. On the other hand, waiver is contractual, and may constitute a cause of action; it is an agreement to release or not to assert a right. If an agent, with authority to make such an agreement on behalf of his principal, agrees to waive his principal's rights, then (subject to any other question such as consideration) the principal will be bound, but he will be bound by contract, not by estoppel. There is no such thing as estoppel by waiver.

Held, that the letters O. K. on certain delivery orders and bills meant that the details contained in those documents were correctly given and that the statement being one which the maker was entitled to make, it bound his principal; but as it was not a representation that in fact the goods covered from the documents were free of all encumbrances, it could not ground an estoppel so as to prevent the principals from asserting and proving their rights as encumbrancers. [p. 5, cols. 1 & 2.]

A statement to ground an estoppel must be clear and unambiguous. Low v. Bouverie (1), referred to. [p. 5, col. 2.]

Where a limited Company is defendant in a suit, the liquidation of the Company cannot make any difference. The change brought about by the liquidation in regard to the suit is merely that in the conduct of its defence, the Company before liquidation will act through the directors but during liquidation through the liquidators and after the termination of the liquidation through the directors once more. [p 5, col 1.]

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and Pennell, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., and A. M. Talbot, for the Respondents.

Lord Russell of Killowen.—The appellants are a limited Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act. They carry on the business of bankers in Burma through the head office at Pyapon and various branches, one of which was at Bogale. They may be conveniently referred to as the Bank. The respondents to the appeal are a trading Company incorporated in Japan. They carry on business in Burma, and in the course thereof they purchase rice from paddy traders. They may be conveniently referred to as the Japanese Company, or as the plaintiffs.

In the neighbourhood of Bogale are to be found rice mills to which the traders bring their paddy for the purpose of having it milled. One of these mills, the Natchaungwa Mill, had been mortgaged by its owner to the Bank, and at all times relevant to this appeal, the Bank were mortgagees in possession of this mill and were milling paddy there for various paddy traders. For brevity's sake this mill will be referred to as the N. mill. It was managed by one Ba Maw, under the general supervision of the Bank's branch manager at Bogale, one Pya Cho.

Paddy traders are, not unnaturally, desirous of anticipating to some extent the realisation of the value of the produce which they bring to be milled; and in order to do so they obtain advances from the Bank on the security of the produce, the advances being re-paid when the produce is sold as rice.

The procedure was as follows:—When a trader desired an advance on the security of his produce, the mill owner or his manager would fill in a printed form (called warrant of goods) showing the amount of paddy held on behalf of the trader and its value. The warrant of goods recites (anticipatively) that the Bank has granted to the trader an advance, and contains undertakings to hold the produce with the consent of the trader (who had to sign the document), on behalf of the Bank as security for the advance not to deliver up possession of the produce except under the written directions of the Bank and to affix lables on or near the produce so as to identify it as the Bank's security. On receipt of this warrant the Bank manager would visit the mill and verify the quantity of produce. If satisfied, the Bank would then make an advance to the trader, the trader signing in favour of the Bank (1) a letter of hypothecation which after acknowledging the warrant of goods as constituting a security for the advance, authorised the Bank in default of payment to sell, and (2) a promissory note for the amount of the advance. Before the mill-owner or his representative (in this case Ba Maw) parted with any rice to a purchaser he would require authority from the Bank manager so to do which would only be given after the security had been cleared.

The facts which gave rise to the present litigation may now be stated. One of the traders who brought his paddy to be milled at the N. mill was one Saw Kai. On April 18, 1930, a contract in writing was entered into between Saw Kai and the Japanese Company by which the former sold to the latter 1,200 bags of Ngasein big mill special rice at a price therein mentioned, to be delivered on May 15, 1930, and to be milled at the N. mill. This contract was witnessed by Ba Maw, describing himself as manager of the N. mill. It is not in dispute that Saw Kai's produce at the N. mill was in fact subject to securities (of the nature hereinbefore described) in favour of the Bank for advances made to him, though it is denied that that fact was known to the Japanese Company. All Saw Kai's produce at the N. mill was noted in the paddy register kept at the mill as being under security to the Bank.

By April 30, 1930, the milling of Saw Kai's produce had proceeded so far as to have produced 700 bags of the contract rice which lay at the N. mill subject to the Bank's security. On that day two documents were signed by Saw Kai. One was a delivery order addressed to "the Godown Master" at the N. mill requesting him to deliver to the Japanese Company or order "700 bags Ngasein big mill special rice, each bag weighing 224 lbs. nett." The other was an invoice or bill to the Japanese Company for Rs. 8,310 6-6, the price of the 700 bags, and stating that each bag weighed 224 lbs. net. Each document had on it a reference to the identifying mark which was on the bags containing the rice, viz, "Mark B.M.S.—B4." On each document were placed the letters O. K., and Ba Maw signed his name underneath those letters.

It would seem that those two documents were handed to R. D. Patel, the agent of the Japanese Company, by their vendor, Saw Kai, and that thereupon the Japanese Company paid to Saw Kai the amount shown on the invoice. This document has written on it the words and figures "Checked and paid. R. D. Patel. 30-4-30."

A further block of 350 bags was the subject-matter of a similar delivery order and invoice dated, respectively, May 1 and 2, 1930, payment of the invoice price (Rs. 4,155-3-0) being made to Saw Kai on the latter date. The final block of 150 bags was the subject-matter of a similar delivery order and invoice dated May 10, 1930, payment of the invoice price (Rs. 1,780-13-0) being made to Saw Kai on May 11, 1930.

Saw Kai, having received the money, absconded without having paid off the Bank's security, with the result that Ba Maw received no authority from Pya Cho to release the 1,200 bags of rice. On May 26, 1930, Ba Maw wrote Patel a letter refusing to deliver the rice. On June 5, the Bank telegraphed to the Japanese Company that as Saw Kai had not cleared his produce loan, they could not deliver. This was followed by a letter of the same date, asserting their security but making alternative suggestions to relieve the situation. These suggestions were not acceptable to the Japanese Company, and on June 25, 1930, the plaint in this suit was issued by the Japanese Company as plaintiff against Saw Kai and the Bank, as co-defendants.

The claim was for Rs. 14,905-7-0, made up as follows:— (1) Rs. 14,449 7 0 being the contract price with interest at 12 per cent. from May 15, 1930, to the date of the plaint, and (2) Rs. 456-0-0 the value of bags and twine supplied for bagging the contract rice. The cause of action alleged was, as against the Bank, wrongful conversion, the Bank having sold the rice; but the vital issue between these parties was whether the Bank was entitled to assert its security against the claim of the Japanese Company to delivery of the 1,200 bags.

In view of the divergent allegations made by or on behalf of the Japanese Company in the course of the litigation, their Lordships think it advisable to examine the plaint and the evidence with some care.

The plaint alleges (paragraph 2) that the contract of April 18, 1930, was made with the approval of Ba Maw, and that it was agreed that the Japanese Company on payment of the contract price would be given delivery of the rice. Particulars delivered allege that this agreement was made between Ba Maw and Patel at the same time as the contract for purchase, that it was oral, and that as evidence of it. Ba Maw attested the contract for 1,200 bags. The whole of this appears to be fiction, for Patel, according to his own evidence, was not present.

The plaint further alleges (paragraph 5) that when the delivery order and invoice of April 30, 1930, were signed by Saw Kai and signed by Ba Maw with the letters O.K., Ba Maw gave the Japanese Company "to understand" or "an undertaking" that the 700 bags would be delivered on presentation of the delivery orders. It would seem as if a similar allegation is intended to be made in paragraph 6 in relation to the later delivery orders and invoices. These are allegations of contracts made on those respective dates by Ba Maw, presumably on behalf of and binding the Bank.

In paragraph 7 the allegation is made that Ba Maw represented that delivery would be made in terms of the delivery orders; and in the alternative, that Ba Maw's conduct led the Japanese Company to believe that on making payments they would be receiving delivery according to the delivery orders without any claim being made by the Bank. Finally, in paragraph 8 it is pleaded that the Bank's claim to security had been "waived," or that the Bank were estopped from asserting the claim, the representation alleged to ground the estoppel being thus defined: "that on payment of the several sums aggregating Rs. 14,246-6-6, delivery of the 1,200 bags in suit would be given."

Patel in his evidence had a very different story to tell. According to him, Ba Maw, on behalf of the Bank, guaranteed the due performance of all contracts entered into with the Japanese Company by traders whose paddy was milled at the N. mill: Ba Maw was to countersign the trader's contract "because if the contract was not fulfilled by the trader, he would fulfil the contract." He added that he would not have entered into the contract with Saw Kai if Ba Maw had not guaranteed its due performance. He gave no evidence of any such verbal representation by Ba Maw as to delivery as is referred to in paragraphs 7 and 8 of the plaint, or of any such contract or waiver as are alleged in paragraphs 5, 6 and 8 of the plaint.

Although some of the other witnesses for the Japanese Company gave evidence supporting the story of a guarantee by Ba Maw of the due performance by the traders of their contracts, no one gave evidence of any such verbal representation or contract or waiver as aforesaid.

Ba Maw denied the story of the guarantee of the contracts. He further denied that by words or conduct did he guarantee that the rice would be delivered.

The District Judge who tried the case, dealt with a multitude of issues, some sixteen in number. He rejected the whole story about the alleged guarantee. He found that there was no agreement by Ba Maw to deliver the rice on payment of the contract price of the 1,200 bags. He found that Ba Maw did not represent to the plaintiffs that the rice would be delivered in terms of the delivery orders or lead the plaintiffs by his conduct to believe that such delivery would be made. He found that the Bank had not waived their claim by way of security, nor were they estopped from asserting the same by the conduct of Ba Maw. He dismissed the suit as against the Bank.

The Japanese Company appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, which varied the decree of the District Court by directing that there should be a decree in favour of the Japanese Company against the Bank, the exact details of which need not be set out. It is sufficient to say that the decree proceeds upon the footing that the Japanese Company was entitled to recover from the Bank the full amount claimed in the plaint.

The learned Judges of the High Court allowed the appeal upon (to quote the language of Cunliffe, J.) "a point of estoppel, what may be termed a double estoppel." The learned Judge, in the first place, held that whatever might have been the real authority of Ba Maw, as between himself and the Bank, in regard to parting with rice which was still subject to the Bank's security, persons dealing with the mill assumed that Ba Maw had the full power of an ordinary mill manager, which would include the power "to deliver rice and to deal with delivery orders." Accordingly, he held the Bank bound by the consequences of Ba Maw's representations and precluded from denying his apparent general authority.

It is unnecessary for their Lordships to say whether this ruling fits in with the actual facts of this case; but they understand it to mean that as between the Bank and the plaintiffs, the Bank were bound by and estopped from denying the truth of representations made to the plaintiffs by Ba Maw. The learned Judge having established the first limb of "the double estoppel," then dealt with its second limb. This part of the judgment is crucial, and as their Lordships read it, it depends entirely upon the meaning and effect of the letters O.K. which Ba Maw placed upon the delivery orders. Cunliffe, J., holds that they amount to a statement "that there will be no insistence upon any check on delivery;" and he then proceeds thus :—

> "In this connection the only check ... was the operation of the lien, the effect of which is waived by the letters O.K. In other words, I take the view that the second part of the estoppel consists of an estoppel of a principal by the waiver of his agent, in this case the estoppel of Dawson's Bank by the waiver of Ba Maw."

These words, which are the true foundation of the judgment, disclose, in their Lordships' opinion, a confusion of thought upon the subjects of estoppel and waiver.

The question of estoppel is governed by s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, which for the present purpose seems to their Lordships not to differ from the law in England in regard to estoppel in pais.

Estoppel is not a cause of action. It may (if established) assist a plaintiff in enforcing a cause of action by preventing a defendant from denying the existence of some fact essential to establish the cause of action, or (to put it in another way) by preventing a defendant from asserting the existence of some fact, the existence of which would destroy the cause of action. It is a rule of evidence which comes into operation if (a) a statement of the existence of a fact has been made by the defendant or an authorised agent of his to the plaintiff or some one on his behalf, (b) with the intention that the plaintiff should act upon the faith of the statement, and (c) the plaintiff does act upon the faith of the statement. On the other hand, waiver is contractual, and may constitute a cause of action; it is an agreement to release or not to assert a right. If an agent, with authority to make such an agreement on behalf of his principal, agrees to waive his principal's rights, then (subject to any other question such as consideration) the principal will be bound, but he will be bound by contract, not by estoppel. There is no such thing as estoppel by waiver.

Baguley, J., bases his judgment also on estoppel, but upon a different estoppel, which he established thus:—A firm called Tata's had been in the habit of buying rice milled at the N. mill. Tata's banked with the Bank and paid the traders through or at the Bank, with the result that the Bank's security was always discharged and the rice was always delivered to the purchaser. At some time Ba Maw is said to have told Tata's agent that if he put O.K. on the delivery order "Tata's were certain to get the rice free of lien." The learned Judge, accepting the view that the arrangement was that the plaintiffs "should do business with Ba Maw on the same lines as Tata's did business with Ba Maw;" held that because Ba Maw did not tell the plaintiffs that the letters O.K. on their delivery orders bore a different meaning from the meaning which they bore on Tata's delivery orders, the Bank were estopped from denying that they had the same meaning.

Their Lordships think it unnecessary to consider whether the actual circumstances of this case could justify the grounding of an estoppel upon this alleged omission on the part of Ba Maw. It will, however, be seen that both judgments ultimately depend upon the meaning of the letters O.K. on the delivery orders.

Without some assistance in the way of evidence their Lordships might have found themselves in a difficulty, and all the more so since the origin of this commercial barbarism (which, according to the Oxford Dictionary, was already in use as far back as 1847) is variously assigned in different works of authority. The general view seems to be that the letters hail from the United States and represent a spelling, humorous or uneducated, of the words "All correct." Another view is that they represent the Choctaw word okeh, which signifies "So be it."

The evidence in this case as to the meaning of the letters O. K. is sometimes confused with the witness's contention as to what Ba Maw intended them to denote. Thus Patel says, "The words O. K. were put to indicate that payment had been made . . . and that he was bound to make the delivery mentioned in the delivery order." He added later, "I think the meaning of the letters O. K. is 'all correct,' because these letters are in general use. The initials O. K. are in general use by all sorts of people, and it is not limited to any trade." Prabhulal, one of the plaintiffs' rice brokers, said, in regard to other transactions, "By the letters O. K. Ba Maw meant that the number of bags specified on the delivery orders went over into the safe custody of the mill, and that we would have sole lien over the bags—so much so that not even a sample would be given out of those bags to anybody else" : which, if true, would indicate a triumph of conciseness. Ba Maw explained the meaning of the letters O. K. thus: "The letters O. K. signify the existence of the seller's rice at the mill. . . . I meant to signify that the bills had been checked and found correct. I put the letters on the bills and delivery orders to show that it is more business-like and also for the satisfaction of the buyers and the sellers regarding the existence of the rice and the correctness of the calculations." Later he said, "I simply meant that the particular quantity of bags was in existence in the mill."

The question is not what Ba Maw intended to represent by placing the letters on the delivery orders, but what the letters mean when placed there.

The only conclusion at which, in their Lordships' opinion, it is possible to arrive, is that the letters O. K. on the delivery orders and bills mean substantially what Ba Maw said that they meant, viz., that the details contained in those documents were correctly given; in other words, they constituted a statement by Ba Maw that there was at the N. mill the specified number of bags of the supecified rice with the specified mark, and of the specified weight, the property of Saw Kai. This was a statement which Ba Maw was entitled to make, and it therefore binds the Bank; but it is in no wise a statement that the rice is unencumbered. It is certainly not a representation that in fact the rice is free of all encumbrances, and it therefore cannot ground an estoppel so as to prevent the Bank from asserting and proving their rights as encumbrancers. A statement to ground an estoppel must be clear and unambiguous. [Low v. Bouverie (1)].

But even if their Lordships were to accept the meaning attributed to the letters O. K. by the plaintiffs and the High Court, it would be impossible to hold that they constitute a representation which could ground an estoppel : for the meaning so attributed, is not a representation of an existing fact, but a representation of a future intention, which might or might not be enforceable in contract. "The words O. K. must mean that the actual delivery of the goods would not be opposed, and that the Bank would waive their lien upon the goods so that the purchaser could obtain delivery" : that is the High Court's statement of the plaintiff's contention : and in his judgment, Cunliffe, J., states that the letters O. K. imply "that there will be no insistence upon any check on delivery."

But the difficulties of the plaintiffs on this appeal do not end there. There is complete absence of any evidence that Patel, when he paid the money to Saw Kai, relied upon the presence of the letters O. K. on the delivery orders or bills, and this is an essential element in establishing the plaintiffs' plea of estoppel. Indeed, it is difficult to see how Patel could have given any such evidence, for his contention throughout was that the Bank, through Ba Maw, had guaranteed the due fulfilment by the traders of all their contracts with the plaintiffs; and if that were so, there could be no reason for Patel to place any reliance upon the letters O. K., whatever their meaning, in parting with the purchase money. According to him, the Bank were liable for any default by Saw Kai.

It was conceded and properly conceded, by Counsel for the Japanese Company, that as the case had developed at the trial, they could only successfully resist this appeal if the Bank were estopped from asserting their rights under their security. For the reasons given, their Lordships are of opinion that the estoppel has not been established, with the result that the appeal must succeed.

Before indicating the order which their Lordships think should be made, they desire to call attention to a series of mistakes which have occurred in the course of this litigation as regards joinder of parties, due apparently to a misapprehension on the part of all concerned as to the legal position of a limited Company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, which has gone into liquidation. The plaintiffs sued to enforce causes of action against Saw Kai and a limited Company, viz., the Bank, and these two were rightly made the only two defendants to the suit. The plaint adds in the title of the suit after the name and description of the Bank, the words:— "by its General Manager, E. A. Heaton." This addition may perhaps be necessary under the local procedural rules; but it does not make Mr. Heaton a party to the suit. The second defendant is the Bank and the Bank alone.

Issues were settled on September 29, 1930. Subsequently the Bank went into voluntary liquidation, and Mr. Laurence Dawson and Mr. Heaton were appointed liquidators. Thereupon the plaint was amended by striking out the name of the Bank as second defendant, and inserting the name of Mr. Laurence Dawson as second defendant and the name of Mr. Heaton as third defendant, but being jointly described as "Liquidators of Dawson's Bank, Ltd. (in liquidation), Pyapon." The Bank thus ceased to be a defendant to the suit. The only defendants then, were first defendant Saw Kai, second defendant Mr. Laurence Dawson, and third defendant Mr. Heaton; and so constituted the suit was tried, the suit being dismissed against the second and third defendants with costs by a decree dated October 6, 1932. There had been no fresh settlement of issues; these had been framed, and were answered by the Judge, on the footing that the second defendant to the suit was the Bank. After the trial, as their Lordships were informed, the liquidation of the Bank was stayed or otherwise put an end to, so that the limited Company was able to carry on its business as before the liquidation.

On January 4, 1933, a memorandum of appeal was presented by the plaintiffs and an application was made by them praying that the cause title might be amended. This was acceded to by an order of the High Court, and the title of the proceedings on the hearing of the appeal disclosed the Japanese Company as appellants against the Bank by their Secretary, Hugh Dawson, as sole respondents: in other words, an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decree in a suit to which the Bank were not parties, is brought by the plaintiffs against the Bank as sole respondents. The decree made by the High Court on the hearing of the appeal is thus entitled:—

"NIPPON MENKWA KABUSHIKA KAISHA (The Japan Cotton Trading Company, Ltd.) Incorporated in Japan, 554, Merchant Street, Rangoon, represented by their Manage, Mr. T. Saito ... .APPELLANT (PLAINTIFF)

DAWSONS BANK, LTD., a public company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act having its Head Office at Pyapon by its Secretary Hugh Dawson... ..RESPONDENTS (2ND & 3RD DEFENDANTS)"

By its operative part it provides for a decree, "against the respondents the second and third defendants" for a large sum; it further orders "the respondents, second and third defendants" to pay a sum for the appellants' costs of the appeal; and finally it orders "the respondents second and third defendants" to pay the plaintiffs' costs in the lower Court.

Their Lordships feel grave doubts as to the exact effect of such a decree. The second and third defendants in the suit were Mr. Laurence Dawson and Mr. Heaton; but they were not respondents to the appeal. The only respondents to the appeal were the Bank, who were not parties to the suit when the decree which is appealed from was pronounced. Mr. Laurence Dawson and Mr. Heaton cannot be the victims aimed at by the High Court decree; yet if "the second defendant" referred to in the High Court decree means the Bank, it would seem that the Appellate Tribunal is exercising original jurisdiction over a Company which was not a party to the suit when the decree appealed from was pronounced, and is even ordering that Company to pay the costs of the original hearing. Further, if "the second defendant" means the Bank, then "the third defendant" can only mean Mr. Hugh Dawson, who is no party either to the action or the appeal, and against whom no claim has ever been made.

Here, indeed, is a comedy of errors, all of which might have been avoided if the Bank had remained throughout the sole co-defendant with Saw Kai. The liquidation could make no difference in this regard: the claim of the plaintiffs was a claim against the Bank, and not against the liquidators. The change which was brought about by the liquidation in regard to the suit was merely this, that in the conduct of their defence the Bank would, before liquidation, act through the directors, during liquidation through the liquidators, and after the termination of the liquidation through the directors once more. If these considerations had been kept in mind, the present tangle could never have arisen.

Their Lordships have thought it right to call attention to these errors in order that in the future such mistakes may be avoided. In the present case these mistakes might well have made it difficult to proceed with the hearing of the appeal, but for the fact that, as their Lordships were informed, the decree of the High Court had actually been enforced upon the footing that it was an effective decree made against the Bank as sole co-defendant to the suit with Saw Kai; and that the Bank were willing to waive any irregularity and treat the decree as an effective decree, as indicated above.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the High Court set aside, and the decree of the District Judge restored without variation. The respondents must pay the appellants' costs of the appeal to the High Court, and of this appeal.

A suit for partition of certain undivided property between two widows was compromised and the main term of this settlement was that each widow should have absolute power to dispose of her own share in the suit property subject to her giving the other widow the right of making the first offer for it. A decree followed in the terms of the compromise, but no reference to a shop which was kept undivided was made in the decree. Subsequently one of the widows adopted the plaintiff The other widow mortgaged her share in the shop for 999 years to defendant No. 1 but on the day after the mortgage both the widows took registered rent note from one tenant for three years. The adopting widow then sued on behalf of the adoptee to recover the possession of the shop from both the tenant and the mortgaging widow. The suit was dismissed for multifariousness and misjoinder of parties. The plaintiff (adoptee) next sued to set aside the mortgage and to evict the tenant. Defendant No. 1 contested the suit on the ground that the mortgaging widow under the compromise had absolute authority to dispose of her property as she liked. He further contended that the previous suit was conclusive against plaintiff as regards his title to the property and that it was not open to him to raise that question again in this suit. Lastly, he contended that the alienation to him was justified by legal necessity and was, therefore, binding upon the plaintiff:

Judgment.—In the action which has given rise to this appeal the plaintiff sued for a declaration that a deed of mortgage executed in 1921 by a widow Bai Muli in favour of defendant No. 1 is not binding upon him as reversioner, and for possession of the suit property after the eviction of the person who is in possession of the property as tenant of the mortgagee of 1921. The property in suit is a shop. This property and several others belonged to one Balgovind, who died many years ago leaving a widow Kashi, and three sons, Chimanlal, Himatlal and Maganlal. After a suit for partition between the sons in the year 1894, certain of the properties were divided but certain other properties including the suit property were left undivided. The eldest son Chimanlal died two years later (in 1896) and left no heirs. The second son Himatlal died in 1905 leaving a widow Muli and a daughter Shivlakshmi. The third Maganlal died in 1917 leaving a widow Divali. A month after Maganlal's death Kashi also died. Muli's daughter Shivlakshmi was married in 1910 and died in 1920.

In 1918 Muli brought a suit against Divali for partition of such of the family property as remained undivided except the property in the present suit. That suit was compromised as the result of a settlement, Ex. 23. The main term of this settlement was that each widow should have absolute power to dispose of her own share in the suit property subject to her giving the other widow the right of making the first offer for it. A decree followed in the terms of the compromise; but, as the property in this suit was not concerned in that suit, naturally no reference to the suit shop was made in the decree. On July 21, 1919, Divali adopted the present plaintiff. In October 1921, Muli mortgaged the suit property for 999 years to the present defendant No. 1; but on the day after the mortgage both Muli and Divali are said to have taken registered rent note from one Kalidas for three years. This appears to have been in continuation of a previous rent note for three years admittedly executed by Kalidas in favour of both the widows in 1918. In 1922 Divali on behalf of the present plaintiff sued both the tenant Kalidas and Muli, claiming that the plaintiff was owner of the whole shop and not only of half, and also stating that the tenant was holding over under the previous rent note of 1918. The second rent note purporting to have been executed jointly in favour of the mortgagee and Divali was repudiated in that suit by Divali. The suit was, however, dismissed for multifariousness and for misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court did not go into the merits. In 1923 Muli died, and towards the end of 1929 plaintiff has brought this suit to set aside Muli's mortgage of her half share and to evict the tenant.

Defendant No. 1 contended that the plaintiff's adoption was not proved, or, if proved, was not valid and that by the arrangement of 1918 between the two widows Muli had absolute authority to dispose of her property as she liked. He further contended that the suit of 1922 was conclusive against plaintiff as regards his title to the property and that it was not open to him to raise that question again in this suit. Lastly, he contended that the alienation of 1921 by Muli to defendant No. 1 was justified by legal necessity and was therefore binding on the plaintiff. The question of adoption was decided in the plaintiff's favour, and so were the other three defences raised. In the present appeal by defendant No. 1 the question of adoption is not pressed, and we are concerned only with the last three contentions. On all three points we uphold the findings of the lower Court.

The first question is as to the validity of the agreement of 1918 and whether the plaintiff is bound by it. Admittedly, if it was a settlement of a bona fide dispute, or if it was a compromise by the widows for the benefit of the estate in a matter where the widows were representing the estate, then it would be binding upon the reversioner. But that does not seem to be the case here, because the property in suit was definitely not in dispute in that case; and, although this by itself would not necessarily preclude an arrangement regarding the suit shop from being a bona fide settlement, still in the present case it cannot be taken to be a bona fide settlement because that part of the agreement which deals with the suit shop finds no place in the decree which purports to have been based upon the agreement. The decree in fact was confined to the other properties, and the present suit property was excluded. Again, the arrangement, in so far as it purported to give each widow the powers of a full owner over her share of the property, went beyond the capacity of either of them, since under the law they were only limited owners. Lastly, the effect of the compromise was not in any way to enlarge the estate or to benefit the estate; its only effect was to increase the powers of the widows themselves adversely to the reversioner. It cannot, therefore, be recognised as binding upon the reversioner.

judicata. The suit of 1922 brought by Divali on behalf of the plaintiff was regarded by the Judge who tried the suit as primarily a suit between landlord and tenant. The plaint in that suit says that Muli has been impleaded because she is obstructing the plaintiff in recovering possession from the tenant. It has been contended before us that it was open to the plaintiff in that suit to raise the question of his title to the property as against Muli's title to the property and to raise the further question of the validity of the alienation of 1921. But it appears from the judgment in the suit that this suit was dismissed for misjoinder of causes of action and for misjoinder of parties. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried it held that it was not open to Divali or the present plaintiff to claim reliefs both against the tenant, in a suit of landlord and tenant, and against Muli, in a suit which would really involve the determination of the plaintiff's right as between himself and Muli. The Court, therefore, advised that Muli's name should be omitted as a defendant and that the suit should be confined to the question of landlord and tenant alone. But the plaintiff refused to omit Muli, and the result was the dismissal of the suit without going into the merits at all. There is authority to show that s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, is not exhaustive, and a matter constructively in issue can be as much res judicata as a matter directly and substantially in issue. It has, therefore, been argued that plaintiff's title as against Muli or her successor-in-title was a matter which ought to be regarded as having been directly and substantially in iesue in that case, inasmuch as it was open to the plaintiff as heir presumptive to sue at that time for a declaration that the alienation was void beyond the lifetime of Muli. It was held in Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Bakhsh Singh (1), that where a matter which might and ought to have been set up in a former suit was not set up, that matter could not be taken in another suit because it was res judicata. But on reading the judgment in that case it can be seen that the former suit was really decided upon the merits. The plaintiffs had come to Court claiming certain property on the ground of their relationship. It was contended that the defendants were nearer relatives; and the plaintiffs then wanted to set up a family custom which would make the plaintiffs the nearer relatives. It was held that this made out a new case and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to proceed. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs then brought a further suit alleging the new custom. When the matter went to the Privy Council, it was held that they ought to have based their former suit upon the family custom and that was not open to them to do so now. But here the facts are very different. Here we have a Court refusing to consider the merits of the case at all, it dismissed the suit upon the threshold. Moreover, we do not see how in the circumstances it was possible for the plaintiff, in a suit which was primarily a suit between landlord and tenant, to raise the question of his rights as against the rights of Muli or the mortgagee. To do so would have made the suit bad for multifariousness, and again it would have been dismissed without being considered on the merits. This question was therefore not constructively in issue in the suit of 1922, and on that ground we hold that there is no substance in the contention as regards res judicata.

The last question is the question of legal necessity. Much has been said to us of a widow's right to alienate property for her husband's spiritual benefit; and it has been argued on the other side that there is nothing on the record to show that the various expenses in which the widow is said to have indulged for her husband's spiritual benefit were really for her husband's benefit at all. But it is not necessary to go into the question of spiritual benefit; that is a question that would arise only if the alienation took place in order that spiritual benefit might be conferred in the future, and here the spiritual benefit (if it occurred at all) was complete before the alienation took place. The justification for the alienation must, therefore, be based upon actual debts contracted for purposes of spiritual benefit. On this point the mortgage deed itself Ex. 19 merely mentions as a necessity for the alienation, "caste dinner, etc." But in the examination of defendant No. 1, we find that the items which are said to justify the sale are debts incurred in consequence of the death of Muli's husband in 1905, of the marriage of her daughter in 1910, of the death of that daughter in 1920 at a time when she was already married, of Muli's own jivatkriya or funeral ceremony performed in her own lifetime, and lastly of a minor matter, the distribution of brass pots among Brahmins. Whether these acts were indeed for spiritual benefit or not, the fact remains that there is no reliable evidence upon the record to show that they gave rise to any debts; and if no debts were incurred for these purposes, then it is difficult to see how they could justify the mortgage.

On the question of debts the evidence of defendant No. 1 himself is vague in the extreme, and his three witnesses take us very little further. The first witness (Ex. 66) is a nephew of Muli herself, and he professes to give details of some of the expenses to which Muli was put. But he was dismissed from Government service as a Talati, and a criminal case was brought against him at the same time. He is clearly an unreliable witness in so far as he is testifying in favour of the defendant; but he admits that Muli's late husband was possessed of ornaments worth Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 4,000, and there is nothing on the record to show that those ornaments were not still in Muli's possession. He also admits that he has no personal knowledge of the expenses to which Muli was put. His evidence proves nothing. Another witness (Ex. 68) gives evidence as to the existence of debts, but he admits that he knew nothing of those debts until, he says, defendant No. 1 came to ask him about them about a week before the execution of the mortgage deed. He further admits that he never knew how much those debts amounted to. The last witness (Ex. 72) admits that he does not know of any debts incurred on account of a caste dinner for Himatlal and he knows nothing about the marriage expenses of Himatlal's daughter. Clearly this evidence is not enough to establish the existence of debts.

It might be possible nevertheless for defendant to resist the suit if he could show that he had made all proper inquiries before concluding the alienation. But he does not seem to have done so. He admits that he did not inquire as to whether Muli herself had any land or ornaments. It is true that Muli would not have been required to spend her own money for her husband's spiritual benefit; but if she had land or ornaments, then it is all the more unlikely that she incurred debts for these purposes and defendant No. 1 would have been on his guard. Nor did he ask when she gave a caste dinner to her husband's memory, or how much that dinner cost; and he says that he does not remember how much she told him that she still owed upon it. His evidence was vague as to his inquiries regarding the marriage and funeral expenses of the daughter; and it also appears that he asked for no details as to the date or the amount of the expenses incurred by Muli on her own jivatkriya, except that he was told that Rs. 3,000 was owing on that account to some one whose name he does not remember. He does admit, however, that he was never told by Muli that the creditors were pressing. If his inquiries had been really thorough, it is probable that he would have made a note of them or seen that they were incorporated in the deed of mortgage itself. The defence fails on all points. The order of the lower Court must, therefore, be upheld and this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The A. P. L. Firm in execution of a decree against Maung Po Htin and Ma Shwe Pu in Exection Case No. 142 of 1932, of the Township Court of Pyapon attached a house and site belonging to the judgment-debtors. The A. K. R. M. S. Firm, put in an objection that the property was subject to a mortgage in their favour. In reply the A. P. L. Firm stated that granted that the property had been mortgaged, the mortgage had been redeemed. I notice also that subsequently in the proceedings both Maung Po Htin and Ma Shwe Pu stated that the property was free from mortgage. The Township Judge directed that the mortgage should be mentioned in the proclamation of sale, and this was done. He has also recorded in his Diary on August 30, 1932 (the date on which the A. P. L. Firm put in their objection), that that firm stated that the said mortgage was a sham mortgage. It is, in my opinion, quite clear that the A. P. L. Firm cannot have been deemed to have admitted the mortgage as being a valid mortgage of the property. Their objection was based on information received. The property was not sold subject to the mortgage and the auction purchaser could dispute its validity: see Kalidas Chaudhuri v. Prasanna Kumar Das (1):

"Where, however, the purchaser merely buys an estate which is under mortgage, but does not take it subject to the encumbrance or undertakes to discharge it, he is not precluded from impeaching the validity of the mortgage. The distinction between the two classes of cases depends upon the question, whether the property has been sold subject to the mortgage or whether mere notice of the alleged mortgage has been given in the proclamation of sale The former contingency is provided for by O. XXI, r. 62, the latter is contemplated by O. XXI, r 66."

It cannot be shown in the present case that the decree-holder agreed to have the property sold subject to a mortgage. Compare also Roshan Lal v. Lallu (2). In effect, when the Judge refrained from directing a sale subject to the mortgage he was passing an order against the A. K. R. M. S. Firm. The A. K. R. M. S. Firm then brought a suit, Civil Suit No. 125 of 1933, of the Township Court of Pyapon, impleading Maung Po Htin and Ma Shwe Pu and the A. P. L. Firm as defendants, (the A. P. L. Firm having purchased the property at the Court auction), for recovery of Rs. 1,000, due on a mortgage-bond. There were several adjournments before the case was heard. On October 17, 1933, the Township Judge noted that the parties were present with all their witnesses and the that the Advocate for the plaintiff stated that would not adduce any evidence whereupon the Advocate for the defendants stated that in that case he also would not adduce any evidence. Arguments were heard and the Judge decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff, A. K. R. M. S. Firm. He framed the following issues: (1) Was there a valid mortgage existing at the time the defendant bought the house at the auction? (Maung Po Htin and Ma Shwe Pu had admitted the allegations in the plaint, but the A. K. R. M. S. Firm had put the plaintiff to strict proof of his allegations and averred that the suit was a fraudulent and collusive one); (2) If so, what amount was due on it? (3) To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?

The Township Judge had held that the A. P. L. Firm had admitted in the execution case that there was a mortgage and therefore had notice of the mortgage at the time it purchased the house. It was for it to show that the mortgage-deed was a fraudulent one, but no evidence had been adduced in support of that contention. On the second issue the Judge found that there was no evidence of payment towards the debt due and he therefore decided that the plaintiff was entitled to his original claim. Against this order the A. P. L. Firm appealed to the District Court of Pyapon. The learned District Judge also held that the A. P. L. Firm had bought the house with full knowledge of the A. K. R. M. S. Firm's mortgage. He therefore dismissed the appeal. The A. P. L. Firm now comes before this Court in second appeal.

It is quite clear that the lower Courts have erred in law in holding that the A. P. L. Firm made an admission of the mortgage in the execution case and are estopped from now disputing its validity. The learned Advocate who appears for the A. K. R. M. S. Firm does not attempt to argue that the A. K. R. M. S. Firm need not have produced any evidence of the mortgage. He asks that the case be remanded for trial inasmuch as the A. K. R. M. S. Firm has been misled by the advice of the Advocate who appeared for it. It is also urged that the issues framed were ambiguous. For instance, on the first issue it was not clear whether it had to be proved that there had been a mortgage or whether the existence of the mortgage was accepted and it had to be shown that it was still effective. I am unable to see that the parties could have been in any way confused by the form in which the issues were framed. It was clearly incumbent on the plaintiff to prove his mortgage and prove that what he stated to be due thereon was due on it. He had all his witnesses present in Court, and if he chose to examine none of them nor even to go into the box himself, the natural conclusion to draw is that he did not feel it safe to do so and was prepared to risk success on the contention that the mortgage had been admitted by the A. P. L. Firm. It was not for the Court to insist that the plaintiff should produce evidence. The plaintiff has only himself to blame if it now turns out that this was a fatal course to pursue. The pleadings and the issues were clear and in my opinion the parties could not have failed to appreciate what the real issues were that fell for determination in the suit. I, therefore, do not think that this case is similar to R. M. A. R. M. Chettiar Firm v. U Htaw (3), where the case was remanded to the trial Court in order that the suit might be re-heard.

For these reasons this appeal is allowed with costs. The plaintiff's suit against the A. P. L. Firm is dismissed with costs throughout. Maung Po Htin and Ma Shwe Pu having admitted the plaintiff's claim, the decree so far as it concerns them is valid, but the A. P. L. Firm must be deemed to hold the property free from the alleged mortgage.

Hindu Law -Mitakshara—Joint family—Guardian —Co parcenary consisting of an adult and minor members — Only adult co-parcener, if can appoint guardian of co-parcenary property of minor.

It is not competent to an only adult co-parcener of a Hindu Mitakshara family to appoint by will or otherwise, a trustee, guardian or manager of the co-parcenary property of a minor co-parcener during his minority. Chidambara Pillai v. Rangasami Naicker (3), followed, Harilal Bapuji v. Bai Mani (1), approved, Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2), overruled.

Beaumont, C. J.—The question referred to a Full Bench is,

"whether it is competent to an adult co-parcener of a Hindu Mitakshara family to appoint by will or otherwise a trustee, guardian or manager of the co-parcenery property of a minor co-parcener during his minority"

The facts which gave rise to the reference are that there was an adult member of a joint family, his co-parceners being a minor son and a minor nephew, and the question is whether on the death of the adult he can appoint a guardian or manager of the co-parcenary property. The question should, I think, be confined to the case of an only adult co-parcener, because there could be no suggestion but that, if there were surviving adult co-parceners, the deceased co-parcener could not appoint a guardian of the joint property. The question has been referred to a Full Bench because of a difference of opinion in this Court between the decision in Harilal Bapuji v. Bai Mani (1) and Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2). On principle the question would seem to admit of no doubt. It is of the essence of Hindu Law, in cases governed by the Mitakshara school, that on the death of one co-parcener the joint property vests in the surviving co-parceners, and the deceased co-parcener has no interest in the property, and no power of disposition over it. If that is so, it is difficult to see on what principle he is to be at liberty to appoint somebody to manage the joint property. That was really the basis of the decision of this Court in Harilal Bapuji v. Bai Mani (1) where it was held that the adult member of a Mitakshara family could not appoint a guardian of the joint property on his death. It was also the basis of the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Chidambara Pillai v. Rangasami Naicker (3). The latter case is really on all fours with the present case, because there the surviving members of the joint family were minor sons and nephews of the deceased co-parcener. The view to the contrary, which prevailed in this Court in Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2) was frankly based on convenience. The Court expressed the view that it was very convenient that on the death of a father leaving only minor members of the joint family of which he was a member, he should have a power to say who was to manage it during the minority; and to meet this convenience the Court held that the father had the power. No doubt there is some force in the view that it would be a convenient power for the father to possess, but if the law is to be altered in order to meet the convenience of the public or any section of it, it is for the legislature to make the alteration. The argument as to convenience, and the answer to it, were expressed very pithily by Coutts Trotter, J. in Chidambara Pillai v. Rangasami Naicker (3) in language which I cannot hope to improve upon. What he says is (page 572*)

"... his argument seemed to come merely to this. The thing is convenient, it is consonant with all right notions of what a father ought to be able to do for his children; it is nowhere expressly prohibited; therefore it can be done. To me on the contrary it seems that to put a person in a definite legal relation to property of which he is not the owner, is a step which cannot be taken unless there is legal authority for taking it. Its convenience and justice may be admirable reasons for the legislature to take action. They cannot in my opinion suffice to set in motion a Court of law."

That seems to me to dispose of the case of Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2) and apart from that case, there is really no authority in support of the contention that this power exists. Certainly there are some cases which deal with the right of a Hindu father to appoint a guardian of the person and property of his son, but we are not dealing here with a case of that nature. In my opinion, therefore, the question should be answered in the negative. We amend the question by substituting "the only adult co-parcener" for "an adult co-parcener."

Rangnekar, J.—The question raised—and which we have slightly amended—is referred to this Bench as there is some conflict of judicial opinion on it, not only in this Court but in the other High Courts. So far as our Court is concerned, two different views are expressed in Harilal Bapuji v. Bai Mani (1) and Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2). In Harilal Bapuji v. Bai Mani (1) it was held that a Hindu father who had a son living with him is not competent to appoint trustees to administer ancestral properties until the son should reach the age of 21 years, on the ground that at the moment of the testator's death the whole of the property was and became the property of the son by right of survivorship. In Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2) it was held that a dying adult Hindu might appoint a manager and trustee for the minor members of the family without interfering with the succession to the family. In this case Sir Basil Scott, C. J., went upon firstly, the decision of the Privy Council in Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gakool Chunder Chowdhury (4) and, secondly, upon the ground of practical convenience. As regards the first point, it may be pointed out that the case of Raj Lukhee Dabea v. Gakool Chunder Chowdhury (4) was under the Dayabhaga under which it is competent to a Hindu to dispose of the property even if he has a son. The law in this respect under the Mitakshara is different. As to the ground of practical convenience, all I need say is that it might well be left to the legislature to deal with. The only question before us is to see if there is any principle of Hindu Law which would justify us in answering the question referred in the affirmative.

The question we have to answer arose in the Full Bench decision in Chidambara Pillai v. Rangasami Naicker (3), and the answer of the Full Bench was that it was not competent to the only adult coparcener of a Mitakshara family consisting of himself and his minor co-parceners to appoint a testamentary guardian of the co-parcenery properties of the minor co-parceners. The judgment proceeds upon the ground that as it is not competent to a Hindu to dispose of co-parcenery property by will, he cannot make arrangements for the management of that property by will after his death or appoint a guardian to manage the property. It has been conceded by the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellants that that case is on all fours with the present case.

It is said that there are no texts of Hindu Law dealing with this question and that, undoubtedly, is true. According to Manu, however, the duty of protecting the person and property of a minor vests in the sovereign as parens patriae, and that duty is now discharged by the Courts:

(4) 13 M I A 209; 12 W R 47; 2 Suther 275; 2 Sar 518 (P C).

Although there is no text of Hindu Law which precisely deals with the question now raised, the principles of the law of joint family governed by the Mitakshara are too clear to give rise to any doubt as regards the answer to the question before us, and I can do no better than refer to a passage in Gharib-ullah v. Khalak Singh (5). This undoubtedly was a case under the Guardians and Wards Act, but, I think, what Sir Arthur Wilson said with regard to the principle underlying the system of joint family under the Mitakshara correctly embodies the spirit of the Hindu Law on the subject. This is what his Lordship said (p. 170*).

"It has been well settled by a long series of decisions in India that a guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family. And in their Lordships' opinion those decisions are clearly right, on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such a family is not individual property at all, and that therefore, a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property."

In this view it is not necessary for me to refer to the various decisions to which our attention has been drawn by Mr. Coyajee, but as far as I can see, the balance of the authorities referred to by him is certainly against him, excepting the decisions in Soobah Doorgah Lal Jha v. Rajah Neelanund Singh (6), Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2) and Deba Nand v. Anandamani (7) In Soobah Doorgah Lal Jha v. Rajah Neelanund Singh (6) the question was disposed of on the mere ground that the appointment of a guardian was not shown to have been prohibited by any texts of Hindu Law—a ground which, in my opinion, is not convincing. Apart from that, the case has, I think, been properly distinguished by Sheshagiri Aiyar, J., in Chidambara Pillai v. Rangasami Naicker (3). As to Deba Nand v. Anandamani (7) all I need say is that the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges of the High Court nor were the two Bombay cases referred to. This has been pointed out in Venkataraman Mukund v. Janardhan Baburao (8), by Marten, C. J., who, it may be stated, seemed to favour the view which we are taking here. Finally, Mr. Coyajee relied on the referring judgment of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., in Chidambara Pillai v. Rangaswami Naicker (3), but the view expressed by him was negatived by the Full Bench. For these reasons, I think the question must be answered in the negative.

Divatia, J.—I agree. Section 6, Guardians and Wards Act, expressly saves, in the case of a minor who is not an European British subject, the power to appoint a guardian of his person or property or both, which is valid by the law to which the minor is subject. In order to test whether there is a valid power given under the personal law of the minor we have to look to the positive test as to whether it is expressly granted, and not whether it is not prohibited. Judged from that standpoint, the answer, in my opinion, to the question should be in the negative, because it is quite clear on the texts as well as authorities, and it is also conceded, that under the Mitakshara school of Hindu Law, in the case of a join family with the incidence of survivorship, there is no such express power given to the only adult co-parcener with regard to the appointment by a testamentary instrument either of trustees or of guardians of property of the minor co-parceners as is sought for on behalf of the appellants. Therefore, the only test being whether there is such express power, any question of convenience or expediency would be irrelevant, and for this reason, I think, the decision in Soobah Doorgah Lal Jha v. Rajah Neelanund Singh (6), which proceeds on the ground that there is nothing in the Hindu Law to prohibit such an appointment, and the decision in Mahableshwar Krishnappa v. Ramchandra Mangesh (2), which proceeds only on the ground of convenience, do not correctly lay down the law as it is, and that the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Chidambara Pillai v. Rangasami Naicker (3) follows the right principle to be applied to a case like the present one. I, therefore, agree that the answer to the question as amended should be in the negative.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Accounts settled—Some amount paid in cash, some given up and hundi for rest—Receipt stating no accounts left except liability on. hundi—Hundi, inadmissible not being stamped—Held, original cause of action was put to an end to.

When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold or for money lent or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may sue for the original consideration ; but when the bill or note is the only existing contract between the parties and for want of proper stamp or some other reason it is not admissible in evidence, the creditor must lose his money. It is a question of fact to be decided in each case whether the parties intended the bill or note to be an absolute or a conditional payment of the original debt.

The parties settled their accounts, and a sum of Rs. 834-3-3 was found due by the defendants to the plaintiffs. Of this sum, Rs. 234-3-3 were given up by the plaintiffs, and the balance of the liability was discharged by the defendants paying Rs. 100 in cash and executing a hundi for Rs 500 in favour of the plaintiffs; they executed on that very date a receipt making it clear that there remained no other account between them except the liability arising upon the hundi. The plaintiffs brought the present action for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of the hundi, and it was found that the hundi being unstamped could not be admitted in evidence:

Shadi, Lal, C. J.—The plaintiffs were commission agents for the defendants. On August 29, 1924, the parties settled their accounts and a sum of Rs. 834-3-3 was found due by the defendants to the plaintiffs. Of this sum, Rs. 234-3-3 were given up by the plaintiffs and the balance of the liability was discharged by the defendant paying Rs. 100 in cash and executing a hundi for Rs. 500 in favour of the plaintiffs. On March 19, 1926, the plaintiffs brought the present action for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of the hundi and it has been held by the Courts below that the hundi being unstamped cannot be admitted in evidence. The question, however, arises whether the plaintiffs are entitled to fall back upon the original transaction namely, the account between the parties, which resulted in the balance of Rs. 834-3-3. The rule of law is firmly established that when a cause of action for money is once complete in itself whether for goods sold or for money lent or for any other claim and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may sue for the original consideration but when the bill or note is the only existing contract between the parties and for want of proper stamp or some other reason it is not admissible in evidence, the creditor must lose his money.

It is a question of fact to be decided in each case whether the parties intended the bill or note to be an absolute or a conditional payment of the original debt, and the learned Single Judge, from whose judgment this appeal has been preferred under cl. 10 Letters Patent, in view of all the circumstances of the case, has reached the conclusion that there was a novation of contract and that the transaction entered into on August 29, 1924, put an end to the original cause of action. It will be observed that on that date, part of the money was given up by the plaintiffs, and it is futile to suggest that they can fall back upon the original transaction which would entitle them to sue also for the money which was expressly given up. Moreover, they executed on that very date a recepit which makes it clear that there remained no other account between them except the liability arising upon the hundi.

Upon the facts of the case I have no hesitation in endorsing the conclusion of the Single Judge. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE FLOUR AND OIL MILLS Co. LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION)—RESPONDENTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 112—Company in liquidation—Liability of member to pay calls which are barred under Art. 112—Companies Act (VII of 1913), s 156.

A member of a company in liquidation is liable in respect of unpaid calls even though the calls were made by the company before it went into liquidation and the suit of the company for its realization had become barred by time under Art. 112 of the Limitation Act. The principle is that when a company goes into liquidation, s. 156, Companies Act, creates a new liability on the share-holders in respect of such calls, which is distinct from and independent of the rights which the company had against them before the winding up. Sorabji Jamsetji v. Iswar Das-Jugjvandas (1), In re Vaidiswara Aiyar (2), Jagannath Prasad v. U. P. Asthana (7) and In re Whitehouse & Co. (8), referred to.

M. F. C. A. from an order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated July 29, 1933.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bhagwat Dyal, for Mr. Kishen Dyal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The Flour and Oil Mills Company, Ltd., Sonepat, went into voluntary liquidation on June 20, 1928. Subsequently an order was passed by this Court that the winding up be done under the supervision of the Court, and it was ordered under s. 164 that all further proceedings be taken in the Court of the District Judge, Karnal. It is admitted that the Company has made calls from the share-holders, which were payable on February 28, 1925, and November 30, 1925. It appears that the appellants did not pay the amount due on these calls and, as already stated, the Company went into liquidation in June 1928. In 1930 and 1931 the liquidators issued notices to the appellants requiring them to pay the amount of the above calls for which they were shown liable in the books of the Company. The appellants objected, (1) that the claim was time-barred under Art. 112 of the Indian Limitation Act and (2) that they were not liable as their shares had been forfeited in 1925.

The question of limitation is concluded by authority. It is settled in a long course of decisions that a member of a company in liquidation is liable in respect of unpaid calls even though the calls were made by the Company before it went into liquidation and the suit of the Company for its realization had become barred by time under the Art. 112 of the Indian Limitation Act: Sorabji Jamsetji v. Iswar Das Jugjivandas (1), In re Vaidiswara Aiyar (2), Jagannath Prasad v. U. R. Flour and Oil Mills Co. (3), In the matter of Panalal (4), and Prayan Prasad v. Gaya Bank and Trades Association Ltd. (5), Delhi Woollen Mills Co. v. Durga Prasad (6). The principle of these decisions is that when a Company goes into liquidation, s. 156 creates a new liability on the share-holders in respect of such calls, which is distinct from and independent of the rights which the Company had against them before the winding up: Hansraj Gupta v. Asthana (7) and In re Whitehouse & Co. (8). Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant has not been able to cite any authority to the contrary. The decision of the lower Court on this point is therefore correct.

The second objection urged is that the appellants are not liable because in the notices issued to the appellants by the directors in 1925, before the Company went into liquidation, it was stated that if the amounts called were not paid on the dates specified, their shares would be forfeited. It is, however, admitted that no resolution was passed by the directors actually forfeiting the shares as was necessary under Art. 52 of Articles of the Association of the Company. There was, therefore, no valid forfeiture of the shares: Prayan Prasad v. Gaya Bank and Trades Association, Ltd. (5).

No other point was raised. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. A judgment-debtor is not a necessary party in a suit by the claimant under O XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code. Maryam Bibi v. Ram Das (2), followed. Ghasi Ram v. Mangal Chand (1), explained.

In a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, by an unsuccessful claimant where the claim petition is dismissed after investigation, the onus is on the plaintiff.

[Case-law referred to.]

The plaintiff was not a creditor. He had bought property consisting of the whole of the judgment-debtor's immovable properties and no provision was made for payment of the decree debt. The Court found that only a portion of the consideration was genuine:

Held, that an alienation having been made to defeat or delay creditors was wholly invalid even though consideration might have been given for some part and must be set aside in its entirety. The purchaser could however be given a charge on the property to the extent of the encumbrance which he has discharged. Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrigal (16), Polamalai Mudaliar v. South India Export Co. (17) and Ponnuswami Pillai v. Quadir Mohideen Rowther (18), relied on. Deoki Nandan Singh v. Jawad Husain (14), distinguished. Judgment.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this second appeal. The suit was to set aside an order dismissing a claim petition. The defendants were the decree-holders. They obtained a decree in O. S. No. 204 of 1925 on the file of the District Munsiff's Court of Coimbatore and attached the properties of the judgment-debtor Pachianna Pannadi. The plaintiff then preferred his claim under a sale deed Ex. A, dated May 13, 1925, from Pachianna Pannadi. This sale was after the decree but about two months before the date of the attachment. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's suit but its decree was reversed in the lower Appellate Court which, however, gave the plaintiff a charge with regard to a certain mortgage Ex. C which it held that he had discharged. Against this decree the present second appeal is filed.

The trial Court found that the land purchased comprised the whole property of the judgment-debtor. The purchase price was Rs. 3,500. It is not contended that this was an under-estimate and in fact the decree-holders refused to take the land from plaintiff for Rs. 4,000 and transfer the decree to plaintiff. The consideration under Ex. A was stated to be made up as follows: Rs. 2,000 to discharge a mortgage to one Subbiah Pillai (Ex. C); Rs. 1,168 to discharge a mortgage in favour of one Veera Pannadi; Rs. 100 received in cash; and the discharge of a promissory-note for Rs. 200 executed by the vendor in favour of the appellant. The trial Court found that all the consideration as per terms of the sale deed was paid, that the plaintiff got delivery of the documents on the date of the sale deed and also got possession of the property, and that the decree-holder was not entitled to proceed against the land. The Subordinate Judge found that as far as the first mortgage Ex. C in favour of Subbiah Pillai was concerned, it had been discharged by the plaintiff and that the consideration was good. As regards the second mortgage Ex. C-1 he found that the debt was not genuine. The mortgagee under Ex. C-1 was the father-in-law of the judgment-debtor. With regard to the payment of Rs. 100 in cash and the promissory-note debt of Rs. 200 alleged to be due to the plaintiff, he found that this was a fictitious consideration. He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit except that he gave him a charge to the extent of Rs. 2,000 in respect of the mortgage, Ex. C. These being the findings of fact, it is clear that the plaintiff was not a creditor of the judgment-debtor, the vendors at the time of the sale. I shall first deal with the objection which was raised in both the lower Courts and is also raised here and which, if correct, would suffice for dismissing the appeal. The objection is that the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable because the judgment-debtor-vendor was not joined as a party. For this, reliance is placed on a remark in Ghasi Ram v. Mangal Chand (1), where it was said:

"If an unsuccessful claimant brings a suit and he seeks to establish his claim against both the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, the latter is of course a necessary party."

The trial Court found that this remark does not apply to the present case because the plaintiff did not claim any relief against the judgment-debtor. Assuming for purposes of argument that he can be held to have claimed relief against the judgment-debtor, it is to be observed that the remark in Ghasi Ram v. Mangal Chand (1), is obiter. Besides it was a case decided under the old Code. Section 31 of the old Code which corresponds to O. I, r. 9, did not contain the words "or non-joinder" which were introduced for the first time in the Code of 1908. Moreover, in a later decision of the same Court, Maryam Bibi v. Ram Das (2), the learned Judge dissents from the view that the judgment-debtor is a necessary party in such a suit. In that case the matter was directly in point and the learned Judge, after observing that the dictum was obiter and was passed under the old Code says:

"It is sufficient for the purposes of to-day to hold that O. I, r. 9, covers the case and distinguishes it from the dictum relied upon by the Courts below".

I have been shown no decided case where it is held that the judgment-debtor is necessary party and I must, therefore, dismiss this objection. The next matter with which I should like to deal is the question of onus. It has been argued that the lower Appellate Court has wrongly thrown the onus upon the plaintiff. This being a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, by an unsuccessful claimant, it is unnecessary to discuss what the position would be if the suit were simply by the plaintiff under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act. The recent Privy Council decision in Mohammad Ali Mohammad Khan v. Bisimilla Begum (3), is clear on the point that the onus is on the defendant-claimant to establish by cogent evidence that the deeds in question were bona fide and it was held in Perayya v. Venkayamma (4), that it was not sufficient for him to rely merely upon the deed which shows his ostensible title. The Privy Council decision in V. E. A. R. M. Firm v. Maung Ba Kyin (5), is quoted in the opposite sense, but as observed in Appathurai Chettiar v. Vellayan Chettiar (6), there is nothing in the judgment about onus and the headnote is misleading in this matter. This Rangoon case was also considered in Maha Deo Misir v. Ram Prasad (7), and the same conclusion was reached that no proposition of law casting the onus upon the defendant was laid down in that case. The learned Judges make some observations on the matter of onus in Appathurai Chettiar v. Vellayan Chettiar (6), which may be quoted. They say:

"In cases under O. XXI, r 63, Civil Procedure Code, the burden of proving the validity of the alienation is on the plaintiff The defendant, however, cannot escape the burden at some stage or, other. If the plaintiff produces his deed, and swears that it is genuine and for full consideration and the defendant has nothing to say to the contrary, the plaintiff will succeed, and where the burden of the plaintiff is so light, it is scarcely worth arguing whether it is more correct to say that the burden is originally on the defendant, or on the plaintiff. But where the defendant has something substantial to say to the contrary, the real burden must inevitably fall on the plaintiff to establish the right which he claims."

It has also been ruled in Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (8), overruling a previous Full Bench decision, that the contention that an alienation is not valid may be put forward by way of defence in a suit and need not be made the subject of a separate suit by the decree-holder. In Elaya Perumal Thalainar v. Vellaikannu Thevar (9), Sundaram Chetty, J., held that when a claim under O. XXI, r. 63, was rejected as time-barred and was not investigated, the onus in the suit subsequently instituted by the claimant would fall on the defendant. That decision is alluded to in Appathurai Chettiar v. Vellayan Chettiar (6). As the claim petition in this case was dismissed after investigation, it is unnecessary to discuss its correctness. I hold, therefore, that the onus was on the plaintiff in the present case. It was argued that the lower Appellate Court was confused with regard to the payments under Ex. C and Ex. C-1 but whatever may be said about the correctness of the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge, there was no confusion. The plaintiff withdrew on May 12, 1925, a sum of Rs. 2,000 from a deposit account some months before it was due to mature. Exhibit A was executed the next day and on the date of Ex. A Rs. 1,168 are endorsed as paid towards the mortgage, Ex. C-1, which the lower Appellate Court has found to be a sham transaction. Ten days later Rs. 1,035-10-0 was paid towards the mortgage, Ex. C, which the lower Appellate Court has found to be genuine; and a year afterwards on May 18, 1926, another sum of Rs. 1,160 was paid towards Ex. C and the mortgage was discharged.

The learned Subordinate Judge feels some doubt about the truth of this second payment on Ex. C, but in the end he gives the plaintiff the benefit of it. It is not permissible to argue here that the payment towards Ex. C-1 of Rs. 1,168 on the date of the sale deed was out of the sum of Rs. 2,000 withdrawn by the plaintiff. However much the dates may support such a view, the learned Subordinate Judge has in fact held that only Rs. 1,035-10-0 under Ex. C was discharged at that time from the Rs. 2,000 drawn out. Therefore, there is no confusion in this matter in this finding of the lower Appellate Court and I am bound by that finding of fact. The next objection is that the learned Subordinate Judge has failed to keep in mind the distinction between a sham transaction and a benami transaction. There is of course a distinction between the two things. A sham transaction is one in which no title passes or is intended to pass and the title still vests in the transferor. In a benami transaction title passes for certain reasons to the name of a third party who could bring a suit, give a discharge, etc., on his title, vide Rangayya v. Rangaswami (10), at pp. 1007 and 1008*, a Privy Council case and Gur Narayan v. Sheolal Singh (11), at p. 574† another Privy Council case. This distinction it not disputed on behalf of the respondents but it is argued that the learned Sub-Judge clearly meant that the transaction was benami as he observes in para. 4:

"Taking advantage of the circumstances that Ex. C is a real transaction, the judgment-debtor Pachianna Pannadi seems to have got up Ex. A nominally in favour of the plaintiff to screen his properties from the creditors in view of his impending insolvency"

It is very easy to use incorrect terms in a matter of this sort, and I may point out that in Appa Dhond v. Babaji Krishnaji (12), a case quoted for the appellant to show that a document cannot be partly genuine and partly benami the learned Judge has applied the term "unreal" in describing an alleged benami transaction, while one of the objections to the lower Appellate Court's judgment in this case is that he says:

"Even assuming that the plaintiff is in possession it does not establish the reality of the transaction in his favour."

I do not think there is any doubt that the Court really regarded Ex. A as a benami document for which there was genuine consideration to the extent of the discharge of the mortgage, Ex. C. It is objected further that when the Subordinate Judge says:

"Pachianna Pannadi (the vendor) has now absconded and his whereabouts are not known. Therefore it cannot be said that plaintiff has really become entitled to the suit properties by reason of purchase under Ex. A."

and that while, admitting that Ex. E series, the kist receipts show that the plaintiff did get into possession of the properties, he says that these are of very little value as they are subsequent to the claim but has failed to notice that the plaintiff got patta for the property on May 29, 1925, (Ex. E 8), and that in the remarks column of the patta it is stated that "the old pattadar Pachai's name has been removed according to the petition for transfer filed by him."

It appears from the evidence that Pachianna Pannadi stabbed his wife and absconded and that he was also adjudicated insolvent. It must be admitted that as regards this objection the learned Subordinate Judge has certainly failed to mention with regard to possession the important evidence of the patta and of its having been obtained on the application of the vendor. But a more serious objection is that there is no definite finding as to whether the plaintiff did make the payment of discharge under Ex. C-1. If he made this payment thinking the debt to be really due then he would still be a transferee in good faith even though the debt was a fictitious one and the mortgage got up by the vendor with his father-in-law. The debt for which the mortgage, Ex. C (1), was executed was due under the promissory note Ex. C (7). The learned Subordinate Judge observes that Ex. C (7) was not produced at the time of the claim enquiry, and that P. W. No. 7, the mortgagee, was not, as found also by the trial Court, in a position to lend such an amount; and he says :

"Therefore there can be no doubt that Ex. C-1 is a sham document for which no consideration passed and which was apparently got up to screen the properties of Pachianna Pannadi from his creditors."

He goes on then to deal with the endorsement on Ex. C-1 and he says on that matter that

"P. W. No. 4 admits that he does not know whether the mortgage in favour of Veera Pannadi is a true or a nominal transaction though he himself has written the endorsement of discharge thereon."

But he does not say expressly whether the endorsement is true or not. For a proper decision of the case the matter will have to go back for a finding as to whether the plaintiff paid the amount entered on the mortgage, Ex. C-1, as having been paid by him. The lower Appellate Court will therefore submit a finding on the following issue : "Was the discharge on Ex. C-1 genuinely made by the plaintiff". (Onus on plaintiff). Time for finding, one month. Objection 10 days. In pursuance of the directions contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore submitted the following

Finding.—I am asked by the High Court to submit a finding on the following issue, placing the onus on the plaintiff. "Was the discharge on Ex. C-1 genuinely made by the plaintiff". * * * *The suit is to set aside an order dismissing a claim petition of plaintiff, Defendants are the attaching decree-holders. Plaintiff bases his claim upon a sale deed Ex. A, dated May 13, 1925, executed by the judgment-debtor Pachianna Pannadi in his favour for Rs. 3,500. The consideration consists of Rs. 2,000 reserved for the discharge of a prior mortgage bond, Ex. C, dated January 9, 1924, in favour of one Subbiah Pillai for Rs. 1,700 Rs. 1,168, reserved for the discharge of another mortgage debt, Ex. C-1, dated February 23, 1924, in favour of Pachianna Pannadi's father-in-law Veeran Pannadi for Rs. 1,000, Rs. 232 adjusted towards a pro-note, Ex. C-2, executed in favour of plaintiff himself on February 12, 1923, and Rs. 100 received on the date agreement for sale of the Ex. C-3, dated May 10, 1925. There is an endorsement of discharge Ex. C-1, dated May 13, 1925, to the effect that Rs. 1,168 being the principal and interest due under that bond was paid by plaintiff and the bond was completely discharged. This endorsement purports to bear the mark of Veera Pennadi and to be signed by his son Vyapuri and to be written by Muthukumaraswami Pillai, P. W No. 4. It is this discharge which is now in question. * * * *

On the whole, I am not able to say that the discharge of Ex. C-1 is satisfactorily proved to be genuine. The oral evidence is quite incoherent and full of discrepancies. The amount mentioned in the endorsement is not correct according to any calculation. The provision for interest in Ex. C was more onerous than in Ex. C-1 and there is no sufficient reason why Ex. C-1 was discharged before Ex. C. In both cases the time for repayment fixed in the bonds had not expired. It is true that there is no reason to doubt the genuineness of the account, Ex. G. But the withdrawal of the money was a day prior to even the purchase of the stamp paper for Ex. A, and long before the expiry of the one year for which period the deposit was made. The payment for Ex. C-1 is also said to have been made even before the registration of Ex. A and Ex. A appears to have been presented for registration by the vendor Pachianna Pannadi. The production of Ex. C-1 by plaintiff is a circumstance in his favour, but I cannot attach the usual importance to it on account of the other suspicious circumstances in the case. I find that the discharge of Ex. C-1 is not genuinely made by the plaintiff. (This second appeal coming on for final hearing after receipt of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

Judgment.—The lower Court has now returned a finding that the discharge on Ex. C is not satisfactorily proved to be genuine. This finding is well supported by evidence and it is not open to me to canvass a finding for which there is evidence. I may, however, say that I should come to the same conclusion myself. Even the fact that the mortgage deed Ex. C-1 is with the plaintiff, which would be a strong circumstance otherwise to prove that the discharge was real, loses all its force when we find the mortgagee, the uncle of the mortgagor, deposing that it was the mortgagor who got the document registered and kept it himself. Now Ex. C-1 being shown to be a sham transaction and when we find plaintiff making a false entry of discharge on it when in fact he did not pay anything, nothing more is needed to prove want of consideration and good faith on his part as regards this branch of the transaction specially when as noted above the onus lies heavily on him to prove good faith and consideration.

The plaintiff was not a creditor of the judgment-debtor at the time of Ex. A. Consequently all cases dealing with a transfer taken by a creditor are irrelevant. A useful summary of the position of transferees will be found in Pakkiri Mohideen Tharagan v. Muhammad Mustappah Rowther (13), by Anantakrishna Ayyar, J. Dividing these transferees into two classes; (1) creditors (2) non-creditors, an alienation in favour of the first class, i. e., creditors, to defeat the other creditors will not be invalid, even though the alienee knows this is the object of the transaction, provided of course that he does not satisfy anything more than his own debt. As regards non-creditors, it will be invalid if they had knowledge of the fraudulent object but if they had not that knowledge, the alienation will be good. As I said above, we are not here concerned with a creditor alienee. With regard to strangers a distinction has repeatedly been drawn between case where the property is converted into cash which is more easily secreted from creditors and cases where this is not done. Anantakrishna Ayyar, J, states:

"If the transfer is for valuable consideration and is made with the full intention that the title to the property should pass to the transferee, and if no benefit be intended to be retained to the grantor, then the transfer will be valid as against an attaching creditor even though the object of the transfer might have been to defeat an impending execution. The general creditors of the transferor are not defeated in such a case since, instead of the property of the debtor which has been transferred, there remains the money representing the price paid for the property in the hands of the debtor and the creditors could proceed against the same."

It is really a question of fact in the case of money consideration whether the transferee knew or did not know the fraudulent object of the transfer. But as observed above, the onus on the defeated claimant is very heavy to establish by cogent evidence that the deeds are bona fide. In the present case the facts as found are these. The plaintiff is not a creditor. He has bought property of the value of Rs. 3,500 and it has not been shown that that is an under-valuation. But the properties consist of the whole of the judgment-debtor's immovable properties and no provision is made for payment of the decree debt. For this purchase the plaintiff has paid Rs. 2,195-10-0 as genuine consideration to discharge the mortgage bond Ex. C. Rs. 300 made up of an alleged promissory note debt to himself of Rs. 200 and cash consideration at the time are not found to be genuine. But it is argued that the plaintiff is entitled to possession even though he has not paid the whole of the purchase price. Only one of the cases quoted appears to be relevant as the others do not involve any question under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act. That case is Deoki Nandan Singh v. Jawad Husain (14). But in that case the only point raised against the plaintiff-purchaser was that he had not paid the full amount of the consideration. There is something much more here. He has entered as part of the consideration a fictitious payment of a mortgage which has itself been found to be a fictitious transaction.

This, as I said above, is quite enough to show want of good faith and consideration. It has been laid down in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Ayyar (15) confirmed by the Privy Council in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrigal (16) that an alienation made to defeat or delay creditors is wholly invalid even though consideration may have been given for some part and must be set aside in its entirety. The lower Appellate Court has given the plaintiff a charge on the property to the extent of the encumbrance Ex. C which he has discharged. This is in accordance with Polamalai Mudaliar v. South India Export Co. (17) and Ponnuswami Pillai v. Quadir Mohideen Rowther (18). By mistake this has not been incorporated into the decree but it is not disputed by the respondent. In the result the appeal must be dismissed with costs but the necessary alteration will be made in the decree to bring it into conformity with the judgment of the lower appellate Court, namely, giving the plaintiff

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 628 of 1930

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 76 (g), (h), 77—Mortgagee in possession—Liability to account—Whether exists only in absence of contract to contrary—Circumstances under which no liability exists—Only part of interest to be paid out of usufruct—S. 77, if applies—Mortgage before coming into force of Transfer of Property Act—Liability of mortgagee to account, if recognized before the Act.

Under s. 76, cls. (g) and (h), Transfer of Property Act the mortgagee in possession must keep full and accurate accounts, and all his receipts from the mortgage property (subject to allowance for certain specified and permissible expenses) are to be credited in favour of the mortgagor in reduction of the amount due for interest or in reduction of the principal if the receipts exceed the interest due; and if, there is still a surplus, it is repayable to the mortgagor. These clauses are not qualified by any such proviso as "in the absence of a contract to the contrary"; therefore they apply in all cases, contract or no contract to the contrary excepting those in which s. 77 makes them inapplicable. Section 77 only comes in where the mortgagor is from the outset safe from being confronted at the time of redemption with a demand for anything more than the principal sum advanced, and does not cover the case in which only a part of the interest is to be paid out of the usufruct; and the omission must have been intentional. Ishaq Khan v. Rup Narain Singh (2), relied on.

The liability of the mortgagee to render account was well recognised even before the coming into force of the Transfer of Property Act. Consequently, even if the document dates from before the Act, these provisions will apply.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated February 24, 1930, reversing that of the Munsif of Arrah, dated February 13, 1929.

Messrs. Parmeshwar Dayal and B. P. Varma, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This appeal is presented by the plaintiffs in a suit to redeem a property held by the defendants in usufructuary mortgage, and to recover possession of the property.

The principal sum secured was Rs. 300 and the suit was brought on the footing that the mortgagees were, under the terms of the mortgage, to remain in enjoyment of the usufruct in lieu of interest and accordingly the claim was to redeem on payment of the sum of Rs. 300, only. The deed, however, which being in the custody of the defendants has been produced by them, shows that in fact the terms were otherwise. The principal sum of Rs. 300, was to bear interest at the rate of Re. 1-5, per cent. per month bringing the gross annual interest to Rs. 47-4-0. The property was at the time of the hypothecation in temporary lease to a thicadar at an annual jama of Rs. 39 of which Rs. 9-8-0 was to be paid by the thicadar to Government as revenue and the balance Rs. 29-8-0, way payable to the proprietor. (This temporary lease terminated in 1279 F. S. so that from the year 1280 onwards the usufructuary mortgagee was to be in khas possession of the property). The defendants claim that they are entitled to add to the principal each year the sum of Rs. 17-12-0 the difference between Rs. 29-8-0 and Rs. 47-4-0 which totals Rs. 1,072-14-0 for 60 years and two months. This claim the lower Appellate Court has allowed. The defendants further claimed to add to the principal Rs. 240 on account of road-cess paid by them year by year and Rs. 894-2-6 as interest thereon, but this has been disallowed.

The lower Appellate Court rejected the plaintiff's contention that the rehandar should be called on to give an account of the actual profits received by him from the time that he came into khas possession of the property. Hence the appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge thought the demand for account was a new claim not set up by the parties in proper time and for this reason he disallowed it. It will be convenient to consider first the rights of the parties under the law; and then whether the state of the pleadings justifies depriving the plaintiffs of any relief they might be in law entitled to.

Section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, cls. (g) and (h) are quite clear; the mortgagee in possession must keep full and accurate accounts, and all his receipts from the mortgage property (subject to allowance for certain specified and permissible expenses) are to be credited in favour of the mortgagor in reduction of the amount due for interest or in reduction of the principal if the receipts exceed the interest due; and if there is still a surplus, it is repayable to the mortgagor. These clauses are not qualified by any such proviso as "in the absence of a contract to the contrary"; therefore, they apply in all cases, contract or no contract to the contrary excepting those in which s. 77 makes them inapplicable. See Kishun Lal v. Hira Lal (1),

"Every mortgagee in possession in bound to account under s 76 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act unless he establishes a contract in terms of s. 77 of that Act."

Now the cases falling within s. 77 are those in which under the contract between the parties the receipts from the mortgaged property are deemed sufficient to satisfy all the interest from time to time according (so as to prevent there being any increase in the total sum due) or are deemed sufficient to do more than this, that is to say, to satisfy, year by year, not only all the interest but a specified part of the principal. In short s. 77, only comes in where the mortgagor is from the outset safe from being confronted at the time of redemption with a demand for anything more than the principal sum advanced.

Section 77, does not cover the case in which only a part of the interest is to be paid out of the usufruct; and the omission must have been intentional, as pointed out in Ishaq Khan v. Rup Narain Singh (2). It follows that in such a case the mortgagee in possession is liable to account.

Such are the rights of the parties under the Transfer of Property Act. But it is said for the respondents that the document under consideration dates from before the Act. In answer I may point out that the Allahabad case just cited was a case of a transaction entered into before the passing of the Act, but nevertheless was held to be governed by the principle of ss. 76 and 77, it was said:

"The liability of the mortgagee to render account was well recognised even before the coming into force of the Transfer of Property Act."

Such being the rights of the parties, it remains to see whether the decision should go otherwise in consequence of the state of the pleadings. The Munsif thought that the suit should be dismissed altogether when he found the plaintiffs not entitled to redeem on payment of Rs. 300. This extreme position is not now supported by any one; but that taken by the Subordinate Judge is really no more tenable when examined closely. He says "no case for accounting was set up" in the plaint, and we should not "make out a case not contemplated by the parties." On the strength of these well worn platitudes he gives the defendants a decree for over a thousand rupees without demanding of them any proof whatever of the correctness of their claim. The result is startling enough to suggest a fallacy in the reasoning. In substance, the plaint claimed that the interest on the debt was fully satisfied out of the income of the property; and it is true to say that, if the defendants admitted that, no case for accounting need arise. But when the defendants alleged that year by year the income fell short of the interest accruing, then (on the face of the written statement) s. 77, became inapplicable, s. 76 cls. (g) and (h) governed the case and a position arose in which the defendants were bound to account. The issues were badly framed in the Munsif's Court, thus:

6. Is the defendant entitled to get interest under the terms of the zerpeshgi deed in suit?
7. Are the plaintiffs entitled to redeem without paying interest?

A proper form in which to frame these issues was:

6. Is anything due to defendant on account of interest?
7. If anything is due, how much?

Issue No. 10.—To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled? is in order.

I would under O. XLI. r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, refer these issues to the lower Appellate Court for taking an account from the defendants and, on taking account for a proper determination of the issues as amended; the burden of proof being on the defendants on both issues. The finding and evidence to be returned to this Court within 3 months.

Agarwala, J.—I agree.

Estoppel—Principle underlying the rule—Representation—Absence of representation by one person to make another believe in certain facts—Estoppel, if operates—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Adverse possession—One co-owner, when can claim adverse possession against another—Plea of adverse possession—Whether mixed question of law and fact—Plea not advanced specifically in trial Court—Whether can be entertained in appellate stage—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100.

The principle upon which the rule of estoppel rests is that it would be most inequitable and unjust if a person by a representation made or by conduct amounting to a representation has induced another to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. Where there has been no representation on the part of the defendants to make the plaintiff believe that she was really the owner of a 14 annas share in the property in dispute, there can be no estoppel against them when they show clearly that the plaintiff is in law entitled only to an 8 annas share in the property left by her father and not to the 14 annas share in that property. Deokali v. Ranchor Bakhsh (9) and Sri Dhar v. Dharam Das (10), relied on. [p. 27, cols. 1 & 2]

There can be no adverse possession by one co-owner against another until there is an ouster or something equivalent to an ouster of the latter. Pahlad Singh v. Kalka Singh (11), relied on. [p. 27, col. 1.]

The plea of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact and where a person wants to base his title on it, he should specifically advance the plea in the trial Court and an issue framed and finding given. Unless it is done, the plea is untenable and cannot be entertained [p. 28, col. 1]

S. C. A. against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, modifying that of the Munsif, Lucknow District, dated March 10, 1932.

Mr. Narain Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. K. Seth, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These are two connected appeals filed by the plaintiff-appellant, Musammat Rajana against the appellate judgment and decrees of the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj, in the District of Lucknow, partially modifying the judgments and decrees of the Court of the Munsif of Lucknow, dated March 10, 1932.

The facts out of which these appeals arise are briefly as follows:—Musammat Rajana brought three suits against three sets of defendants praying that the alienations made by her mother Musammat Sundar during her, (the plaintiff's), minority in favour of the defendants be set aside. By consent of parties the proceedings in all three suits were consolidated and disposed of by one judgment. These appeals also by consent of parties will be decided by one and the same judgment. One Ghulam Dastgir Khan owned property in village Mahdoli as well as in village Kanakahar in the district of Lucknow. He died on April 7, 1907, leaving as his heirs under the Hanafi Muhammadan Law his widow Musammat Sundar, his mother Musammat Nasiban, and his sister Musammat Mashiran. At the time of his death Ghulam Dastgir Khan left no son or daughter, but the appellant Musammat Rajana was born posthumously on August 2, 1907. On the death of Ghulam Dastgir Khan mutation of names of the entire property owned by him was made in favour of his widow Musummat Sundar, and she also obtained possession of it. In 1915 Musammat Sundar applied to be appointed guardian of the person and property of her minor daughter Musammat Rajana, (see Ex. 6, dated April 19, 1915). The District Judge by his order, dated May 19, 1915, (Ex. 8), appointed Musammat Sundar as the guardian of Musammat Rajana, and the certificate of guardianship in her favour is Ex. 9. In her application for guardianship Musammat Sundar stated that her minor daughter Musammat Rajana owned a 14 annas share in both villages owned by Ghulam Dastgir Khan. Musammat Sundar died on September 4, 1923. Musammat Nasiban, the mother of Ghulam Dastgir, and Musammat Mashiran, his sister, had predeceased Musammat Sundar. On the death of Masammat Sundar the husband of Musammat Rajana applied to be appointed as guardian of his minor wife, (see Ex. A-1, dated February 16, 1924). Exhibit 1, dated March 15, 1924, is the order of the District Judge appointing Muhammad Ilahi Khan, the husband of Musammat Rajana, as guardian of the person and property of his wife. On the death of Musammat Sundar mutation in respect of the entire property of Ghulam Dastgir Khan was effected in favour of Musammat Rajana. The latter attained majority on August 2, 1928. On April 18, 1918, whilst Musammat Sundar was acting as guardian of her minor daughter Musammat Rajana she executed a usufructuary mortgage, (Ex. 1, in Mata Din's case—Appeal No. 277 of 1933) in favour of Mata Din, respondent No. 1, and Ganesh Singh, the father of respondent No. 2, Gur Bakhsh Singh, for Rs. 1,200. By this deed she mortgaged the entire property owned by her husband, namely, a 9 pies 15 karants, 10 jau share with an area of 81 bighas 2 biswas 5 biswansis (see Ex. 4 khewat), in village Mahdoli, and she delivered possession over 22 bighas 14 biswas to the mortgagees. By this mortgage Musammat Sundar purported to mortgage not only her own share inherited from her husband but also the share which her daughter Musammat Rajana had inherited from her father, acting as the certificated guardian of her minor daughter, although she had not obtained the permission of the District Judge for entering into this mortgage on behalf of the minor. On September 28, 1920 Musammat Sundar executed a deed of further charge, (Ex. 2) in favour of Mata Din for Rs. 100 carrying interest at 2 per cent. per mensem hypothecating the entire property left by her husband in village Mahdoli. Exhibit 2 was also executed by her as guardian of her minor daughter, without obtaining the permission of the District Judge. On June 19, 1922, Musammat Sundar executed a usufructuary mortgage, (Ex. 11 in Musahib Ali's case Second Civil Appeal No. 276 of 1933), in respect of 10 bighas 5 biswas and 10 biswansis in village Mahdoli on her own behalf and on behalf of her daughter Musammat Rajana. Musammat Sundar only owned a two annas share out of the 16 annas which she mortgaged to Musahib Ali. Musammat Sundar also executed other mortgages and leases with which we are not concerned in the present appeals.

In the three suits filed by the plaintiff-appellant Musammat Rajana she alleged that, as the alienations made by her mother were made without the permission of the District Judge, and as the consideration of those mortgage-deeds was not applied for her benefit she was not bound by them, and she accordingly claimed a decree for possession of the properties in suit. The defence was that the consideration of the mortgages in suit was advanced and applied for the benefit of the plaintiff, and that she was estopped from challenging the validity of the deeds in suit and that the alienations were binding on her. Upon the pleadings of the parties the learned Munsif framed the following issues:—

1. Were the mortgages in suit executed and the money applied for the benefit of the minor as alleged?
2. If so, is the minor bound by the mortgages in suit?
3. Is the plaintiff estopped from challenging the validity of the mortgages in suit as alleged?
4. Was the mother of the plaintiff the owner of the whole of the property as alleged?
5. If not, was the plaintiff entitled only to an eight annas share as alleged?
6. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?
7. Has the suit been properly valued and is the court-fee paid insufficient?

The learned Munsif held that none of the deeds executed by Musammat Sundar is binding on the plaintiff Musammat Rajana. On Issue No. 3 he held that the plaintiff was not estopped from challenging the validity of the mortgage-deeds in suit. His finding on Issue No. 4 was that Musammat Sundar, the mother of the plaintiff, was not the owner of the whole property left by Ghulam Dastgir Khan. His finding on the 5th issue was that plaintiff must still be deemed to be the owner of the entire 14 annas share. His finding on the 7th issue was that the court-fee paid was sufficient. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit for possession over the entire 14 annas share, subject to payment of certain sums of money to the various defendants, which on his finding had been proved to have been utilised for the benefit of the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge of Mohanlalganj, in the District of Lucknow, held that the plaintiff Musammat Rajana was only entitled to get an 8 annas share in the property in suit and not 14 annas as decided by the learned Munsif. He accordingly allowed the appeals of the defendant and modified the decree of the trial Court to this extent that he held that the plaintiff Musammat Rajana was to get possession over 8 annas only in place of the 14 annas share decreed by the trial Court. In all other respects the appeals of the defendants were dismissed. The cross-objections filed by the plaintiff were also dismissed. Dissatisfied with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, the plaintiff has come up in second appeal.

I have heard the learned Counsel of both parties at great length and perused the evidence on the record. The first question of law argued before me by the learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant was that the defendants-respondents are estopped from challenging the appellant's title to a 14 annas share in the property in suit, inasmuch as they took the mortgages from the certificated guardian of the plaintiff in respect of her 14 annas share. In support of his contention the learned Counsel for the appellant has cited a passage from Caspersz on Estoppel,

4th Edition, para. 400, p. 367, which runs as follows:—

"It is, of course, the general rule that a mortgagee, as in the case of a tenant, cannot dispute his mortgagor's title unless that title is determined, when he is permitted to show that the title is at an end. Neither mortgagor nor mortgagee can deny the title of the other for the purposes of the mortgage. The doctrines discussed in the Chapter on landlord and tenant apply to the case of mortgagor and mortgagee."

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant also cited a ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported in Baiganti Bewa v. Himmat Badyakar (1) in which it was held that a lessee so long as he retained the possession he obtained from the lessor could not, even after his term has expired, set up in the lessor's suit for ejectment the defence that the lessor had no title at the time when the lease was granted, and that ss. 115, 116 and 117 of the Indian Evidence Act are not exhaustive as to the rules of estoppel in force in British India.

In Surendra Nath Mitra v. Kshitindra Mohun Mitra (2), it was laid down that when a mortgagee takes a mortgage from a person and obtains possession from him, he is not permitted to question his mortgagor's title. In this case Sir Ashutosh Mukerji, in delivering the judgment of the Court made the following observation:—

"The District Judge in concurrence with the Subordinate Judge has held that, as the mortgagees took the mortgage from the plaintiff and obtained possession from him, they cannot be permitted to question his title in view of the rule of estoppel enunciated in s. 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. This view is clearly well founded. As explained in the case of Baiganti Bewa v. Himmat Bidyakar (1) enjoyment by permission is the foundation of this doctrine Two conditions are essential to the existence of the estoppel, namely, first, possession, secondly, permission; when these conditions are present, estoppel arises and the estoppel prevails so long as such possession continues. Apart from this, the contention of the appellant that a redemption suit cannot be maintained except by the real owner, is too broadly formulated and is against the balance of judicial authority".

In Jangi Ram v. Sheoraj Singh (3), it was held by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that a mortgagee cannot go behind the mortgage to dispute the mortgagor's right to enforce redemption.

In Gobind v. Chokhe (4) the facts were as follows:- A mortgagee brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property against a person whom he treated as the successor of the original mortgagor and won his case. Subsequently, when the said person sued the mortgagee for redemption of the mortgage, the mortgagee pleaded that that person was not the successor of the original mortgagor, and it was held that the mortgagee was estopped from raising that plea.

In Bhairon v. Balak (5) it was held by the Court of the late Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that it was not open to the mortgagee to plead that the mortgage was invalid or to set up a right by trespass if he originally obtained possession under the mortgage, that is to say, by license and permission of the mortgagor.

In Hellaya Subbaya Hedge v. Narayana Timmaya (6), it was held that as between a mortgagor and his mortgagee neither can deny the title of the other for the purposes of the mortgage, and that a mortgagor cannot derogate from his grant so as to defeat his mortgagee's title, nor can the mortgagee deny the title of his mortgagor to mortgage the property.

Similarly, in Raja Ram Dhar Dube v. Jadunandan Dhar Dube (7), it was held that it was not open to the mortgagee to say that at the time when the mortgage was made any one other than the mortgagor had also an interest in the mortgaged property, and that in a suit by the mortgagors to redeem the mortgage, the mortgagees are estopped from setting up the interest of a third party, and that they cannot do so, solong as they do not hand over possession to the representatives of their mortgagors. This ruling was specially relied upon by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant.

Similarly in Ahad Ashraf v. Inayat Ullah (8) it was held that a mortgagee cannot deny the title of his mortgagor during the continuance of his mortgage.

On the other hand the learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents contended that, as the plaintiff was not suing for possession on the basis of a mortgage, but was really suing for possession by avoidance of the mortgage executed on her behalf by her mother, no question of estoppel arises, and that, as the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee was not asserted by the plaintiff, the defendants also were at liberty to assert that plaintiff was not the owner of a 14 annas share in the property in suit but only of an 8 annas share. It is conceded by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant that at the time of the death of Ghulam Dastgir Khan, the widow, the mother and the sister of Ghulam Dastgir were alive and were undoubtedly his legal heirs under the Muhammadan Law. The daughter who was born posthumously was also entitled to a share in that inheritance, and according to the Hanafi Law her share came to 8 annas, the widow's share being two annas, and the share of the mother Musammat Nasiban and the sister Musammat Mashiran together being 6 annas.

In my opinion the rulings cited by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant on the question of estoppel are inapplicable to the present case for the simple reason that the plaintiff Musammat Rajana has not filed this suit on the basis of the mortgage-deeds executed by her mother on her behalf. Had she done so, then no doubt the mortgagees would be estopped from challenging her right to the 14 annas share mortgaged to them. The plaintiff however bases her case on the provisions of ss. 29 and 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act, (Act No. VIII of 1890). Section 29 of this Act lays down that where a person other than a Collector, or than a guardian appointed by will or other instrument, has been appointed or declared by the Court to be guardian of the property of a ward, he shall not, without the previous permission of the Court, mortgage or charge, or transfer by sale, gift, exchange or otherwise, any part of the immovable property of his ward, and s. 30 of the Act lays down that a disposal of immovable property by a guardian in contravention of either of the two last foregoing sections is voidable at the instance of any other person affected thereby.

In the present case the three suits filed by the plaintiff Musammat Rajana were not based on the mortgages executed by her mother Musammat Sundar. The principle upon which the rule of estoppel rests is that it would be most inequitable and unjust if a person by a representation made or by conduct amounting to a representation has induced another to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. In Deokali v. Ranchor Bakhsh, 92 Ind. Cas. 90 (9), a learned Judge of this Court declined to give effect to the plea of estoppel raised by the defendants in that case and observed as follows :—

"It is true that as between the mortgagor and his mortgagee neither can deny the title of the other for the purposes of the mortgage, but the present suit is not a suit based on or connected with the mortgage. In my opinion the plaintiff is not estopped from challenging the validity of the mortgage in the present suit"

Similarly in Sri Dhar v. Dharam Das (10), it was held that there could be no estoppel against the plaintiff where the defendant acted with full knowledge of the facts and where there was no misrepresentation on the plaintiff's party.

Similarly, in the present case, there has been no representation on the part of the defendants to make the plaintiff Musammat Rajana believe that she was really the owner of a 14 annas share in the property in dispute, and, therefore, there can be no estoppel against them when they show clearly that the plaintiff is in law entitled only to an 8 annas share in the property left by her father, and not to a 14 annas share in that property. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, since the plaintiff does not sue on the basis of the mortgages executed by her mother, but rather seeks to avoid them, no question of estoppel arises.

For the reasons given above, I uphold the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the question of estoppel and hold that it was open to the defendants to show that the plaintiff Musammat Rajana was only entitled to an 8 annas share in the property left by her father and not a 14 annas share.

I come next to discuss the plea of adverse possession set up on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant There is, to my mind, no force in this plea. Musammat Sundar, the widow of Ghulam Dastgir Khan, was in possession of the entire property left by her husband not only on her own behalf but also on behalf of her other co-sharers, namely, Musammat Nasiban and Musammat Mashiran, the mother and sister of Ghulam Dastgir Khan, as also on behalf of her minor daughter Musammat Rajana. It has been held in Pahlad Singh v. Kalka Singh (11), that there can be no adverse possession by one co-owner against another until there is an ouster or something equivalent to an ouster

(9) 92 Ind. Cas. 90.
(10) 3 Ind. Cas. 549; 12 O C 236.
(11) 132 Ind. Cas. 139; 8 O W N 710; Ind. Rul. (1931) Oudh 299.

of the latter. It is clear, therefore, that neither Musammat Sundar nor Musammat Rajana could claim to have become owner of the property in suit by adverse possession against Musammat Nasiban and Musammat Mashiran. As noted by the learned Subordinate Judge, the heirs of Musammat Nasiban and Musammat Mashiran have not been impleaded by Musammat Rajana in the present suits, and this plea of adverse possession really affects those persons rather than the defendants-respondents. I, therefore, reject this plea of adverse possession. Moreover the mortgage, Ex. 1, is of April 18, 1918, and possession to the mortgagees was delivered under the mortgages executed within 12 years from the date of the death of Ghulam Dastgir Khan, and this is another reason for holding that no question of adverse possession arises, and it cannot be argued that Musammat Rajana had perfected her title by adverse possession. Moreover, this plea of adverse possession is a mixed question of law and fact, and if the plaintiff wanted to base her title on it, she should have specifically advanced this plea in the first Court and an issue would have been framed and a finding given. As it is, no issue was framed by the trial Court on this plea of adverse possession, and no evidence was given as to the alleged ouster of Musammat Nasiban and Musammat Mashiran. In these circumstances the plea of adverse possession is untenable and cannot be entertained.

I come next to discuss the plea of res judicata. To my mind there is no force in this contention also. The parties to the present suit were not the same as those in Ex. 16, which is relied upon by the plaintiff-appellant, nor are they litigating under the same title. The plea of res judicata was not urged in the trial Court and no issue was framed, nor was this plea advanced by the plaintiff-appellant before the learned Subordinate Judge when he disposed of the appeals of the defendants. In my opinion there is no force in this plea of res judicata.

For the reasons given above these appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Civil Appeals Nos. 429, 500 and 501 of 1931

September 3, 1934

FAZL ALI AND JAMES, JJ.

SRINANDAN PRASAD SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

MITHAN MAHTON AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 88, 105 109—Landlord in s. 88, if means entire body of landlords—Absence of effective splitting of holding—Plaintiffs becoming sole landlords on partition—Holding, if to be treated as sub-divided—Division of holding—What constitutes—Application for settlement of rent—Withdrawal of application—Subsequent application for enhancement on ground of rise in price—Whether barred by s 109.

A 'landlord' in s. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, means the entire body of landlords. Where there has been no effective splitting up of the holding as required by s. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act before the partition so as to be binding upon the entire body of landlords, they are not bound to treat the holdings as sub-divided after the partition, merely because they became the sole landlords as a result of the partition. [p. 29, col. 2.]

Section 88, speaks of a division of a tenure or holding. A mere undivided parcel or parcels of land is not a holding within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently so far as the division of the holding is concerned, what is contemplated by s. 88 is the actual division of the holding into two or more definite units and not a mere notional division of the shares held by the tenants in the holding. [p. 30, col. 1.]

Where the plaintiff applied for settlement of rent under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, in a certain year before the Settlement Officer but the application was withdrawn and he subsequently applied for enhancement on the ground of rise of the average local price of local staple food crops:

Held, that the application for enhancement was not barred under s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act.

A. from appellate decrees of Additional District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated December 11, 1930.

Mr. G. P. Singh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. N. Rai, P. Jah and B. N. Rai, for the Respondents.

Fazl Ali, J.—These appeals arise out of three suits which were instituted by the appellant to recover rent for the years 1334 and 1335 in respect of three holdings and for the enhancement of the existing rent of those holdings under s. 130-B, Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif of Bhagalpur in whose Court the suits were instituted decreed them and allowed enhancement at the rate of 4 annas 6 pies in the rupee, but his decision has been reversed on appeal by the learned Additional District Judge who has dismissed all the suits with costs.

It appears that the holdings which are the subject-matter of the present suits originally belonged to two persons, namely, Ram Sahay and Kishun Mahto whose heirs and descendants are the defendants in these suits. One of the pleas upon which the suits were contested by the defendants was that each of the three holdings in question had been partitioned sometime before the years 1325 into two equal halves between the descendants of Ram Sahay and Kishun Mahto and that the plaintiffs had agreed to the division of the holdings and accepted rents from the two sets of denfendants separately. This plea was not accepted by the learned Munsif, but it was accepted by the learned Additional District Judge who held that two separate suits should have been instituted in respect of the two sub-divided portions of each holding. In arriving at the decision that the holding had been split up as contended by the defendants, the learned Additional District Judge has relied upon a series of rent receipts (Exs. A to A-41), which are said to have been granted by the plaintiffs to the two sets of defendants between the years 1325 and 1333; certain summonses issued in 1919 in certain rent suits which were alleged to have been instituted by the plaintiffs against some of the defendants upon the basis that the holding had been sub-divided, a receipt (Ex. B) which purports to have been granted on behalf of the plaintiffs on the 1st Fagun 1331 and which contains a recital that the rent for which the suits had been brought had been paid by the defendants; the oral evidence adduced by the defendants and a recital said to be contained in some of the rent receipts which was to the effect that the holding had been split up. The learned Additional District Judge has also referred to certain so-called admissions made by some of the plaintiff's witnesses, but as I shall presently show he has entirely misconstrued these statements.

Now, the material findings of the learned Additional District Judge are that the plaintiff had accepted rent from the two sets of defendants upon the basis that the holding had been split up and that the holdings in question had been in fact partitioned by the defendants. The learned Additional District Judge, however, overlooked certain important facts which had been duly emphasised by the learned Munsif, namely, that at the time when the receipts Exs. A to A-41 were granted, the plaintiffs were mere co-sharer landlords, that there was no proof on the record that the alleged sub-division of the holding had been assented to by the remaining co-sharer landlords and that there had been a partition since of the village under the Estates Partition Act, and in the partition records the sub-division of the holding was not recognized and the holdings in question were treated as entire holdings. Section 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, clearly lays down that a division of a tenure or holding or distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof shall not be binding on the landlord, unless it is made with his express consent in writing or with that of his agent duly authorized in that behalf. A landlord in this section obviously means the entire body of landlords and as the learned Munsif has pointed out in his judgment there is nothing on the record to show that any of the landlords other than the plaintiff consented to a division of the holding or to the distribution of the rent in respect thereof. The true position thus was that the plaintiffs who were mere co-sharer landlords before the partition had done what they could to accommodate the defendants by receiving rent separately from the heirs of Ram Sahay and Kishun Mahto, but as the other landlords did not consent to the arrangement, there was no effective splitting up of the holding in the sense in which it would be binding upon the entire body of landlords under s. 88. Meanwhile the partition proceedings began and each of the holdings in question were allowed by the parties to be treated as one holding and allotted to the estate of which the plaintiffs became the sole landlords.

Now, if there was no effective splitting up of the holding as required by s. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, before the partition so as to be binding upon the entire body of landlords, I do not think that the plaintiffs were bound to treat the holdings as sub-divided after the partition, merely because the plaintiffs became the sole landlords as a result of the partition. The matter may here be examined a little more closely. The first question is whether there was any actual division of the holding by metes and bounds. The learned Munsif has very pertinently referred to the fact that one of the defendants who gave evidence in the case stated in his evidence that he could not say which portion of each of the holdings in question and which plot had been allotted to each branch of the family. The learned District Judge has ignored this statement altogether and indeed he observes that in his opinion the question of actual division of the holding by metes and bounds between the co-sharer-tenants is not of much importance for determining whether there was really a sub-division of the holding under s. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion this view of the learned District Judge is erroneous in law. Section 88 speaks of a division of a tenure or holding and as has been pointed out in Indrasan Pande v. Kabutra Kuer (1), a mere undivided parcel or parcels of land is not a holding within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is to be remembered that s. 88 deals with two classes of cases, viz.: (1) cases where rent is distributed and (2) those where the holding is divided. It appears to me that so far as the division of the holding is concerned, what is contemplated by s. 88 is the actual division of the holding into two or more definite units and not a mere notional division of the shares held by the tenants in the holding. If that were not so, the landlord would have considerable difficulty in giving particulars of the sub-divided holdings when he proceeds to bring separate suits for rent under s. 148-A, Bengal Tenancy Act, in respect of the new holdings. It appears to me, therefore, that the first premise formulated by the learned District Judge was not correct.

The learned Judge has held in the alternative that even if it were assumed that the division of the holding by metes and bounds was a condition precedent to its sub-division under s. 88, there was satisfactory evidence on the record in the shape of admissions of the witnesses examined by the plaintiffs to prove that there was such a division of the holdings between the two branches. The admissions that he relied upon consisted of certain statements made by the plaintiffs' witnesses Nos. 1 and 2. These statements, however, are merely to the effect that the rental of the defendant was split up upon their promising to execute an ekrarnama which was never executed. This statement did not amount to an admission that there was a final and unconditional splitting up of holdings so as to permanently bind the plaintiffs, but the learned Judge has treated these statements as amounting to some such admission. It appears to me that the mere fact that the plaintiffs tried to accommodate the defendants by accepting rent separately from the heirs of Ram Sahay and Kishun Mahto before the partition or even the fact that in the suits that they brought as co sharers they sued these parties separately in consequence of some provisional arrangements arrived at by them, is not sufficient to compel them to treat the holdings as split up when in the partition to which the defendants as tenants were parties, they did not contend that the holding had been split up and allowed the holdings in question to be allotted to the plaintiffs' estate as entire holdings. In one of the appeals (S. A. No. 429), the holding as it originally stood was 10 bighas odd bearing a rental of Rs. 25 odd, but by partition only 7 bighas odd have been allotted to the plaintiffs' estate bearing a rental of Rs. 19, s. 81, Estates Partition Act, lays down that no holding shall be split up for the purpose of a partition unless it is reasonable to do so in order to effect an equitable partition and that when it is proposed to split up a tenure or holding and apportion the rent thereof as aforesaid, the Deputy Collector shall cause a notice to be served on the tenants concerned and after hearing the objections, if any, may order that the tenure or holding be split up and that the rent thereof be apportioned as aforesaid. I think that it may be assumed that before the splitting up of this holding notices must have been served upon the tenants by the partitioning Deputy Collector, but there is no proof that any objections were raised on behalf of the defendants to the effect that even the 7 bighas odd which were allotted to the plaintiffs' estate by partition had been split up among the defendants into two parcels of land.

It appears to me therefore that the learned Judge was wrong in the circumstances of the case in holding that two separate suits were necessary to recover rent for the lands covered by each of the present suits and that the suits of the plaintiffs were liable to be dismissed on that ground. As I have shown, the findings on which the learned Judge has based this conclusion are vitiated by errors of law and as the present litigation has been going on for a long time and the issues which have not been legally determined by the learned Judge can be decided by us, we have considered it unnecessary to remand the case.

It may be stated that during the hearing of the appeal while the Advocates for the parties were discussing certain terms of compromise, the plaintiffs offered to treat the holding as already sub-divided, if the respondents supplied the particulars as to the lands in possession of the two sets of defendants. The defendants, however, failed to furnish such particulars though the case had to be postponed from time to time at the request of the learned Advocate for the respondents to enable them to furnish such particulars.

The next question is whether the rent is liable to be enhanced. The learned Additional District Judge has dismissed the claim for enhancement on the ground that it is barred under s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears that in the year 1905 the plaintiffs applied in the Settlement Court under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for a settlement of rent of the three holdings which are the subject-matter of the present appeal. The applications, however, were subsequently withdrawn. The learned District Judge has relying upon the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Reshee Case Law v. Satis Chandra Pal (2), and the decision of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Purna Chandra v. Narendra Nath (3), held that the present suit is barred under s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion the learned Additional District Judge has misunderstood the effect and scope of these decisions. Section 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, provides that subject to the provisions of s. 109-A, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject-matter of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under ss. 105 to 108. All that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided in Reshee Case Law v. Satis Chandra Pal (2), was that where an application was made under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, and subsequently withdrawn whether with or without permission to bring a fresh suit, and even if the withdrawal was before the evidence had been heard, the same subject was barred by the provisions of s. 109 of the Act. The question therefore is whether the subject-matters of the present suit and the application made in the year 1905 are the same.

A reference may be made here to s. 113, Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that, when the rent of a tenure of holding is settled under Chapter X, it shall not except on the ground of a landlord's improvement or of a subsequent alteration in the area of the tenure or holding be enhanced, in the case of a tenure or an occupancy holding or the holding of an under-raiyat having occupancy rights for fifteen years, and, in the case of a non-occupancy holding or the holding of an under raiyat not having occupancy rights, for five years; and no such rent shall be reduced within the period aforesaid save on the ground of alteration in the area of the holding or on the ground specified in s. 38, cl. (a). It is clear that under this section the rent of an occupancy holding may be enhanced after a period of 15 years from the date on which its rent is settled under Chap. X. It is conceded on behalf of the respondents that if the application made by the plaintiffs in the year 1905 before the Settlement Officer had been disposed of on its merits, that is to say, if the Settlement Officer had either enhanced the rent or declined to enhance it, the plaintiffs, would not have lost the benefit of the section and could have claimed enhancement after a period of 15 years; but it is also contended that merely because they withdrew their petition, they have been barred for all time to come from exercising their right to claim an enhancement of rent under s. 130-B, Bengal Tenancy Act. To this latter proposition I am unable to assent. In my opinion the subject-matter of the present suit is entirely different from the subject-matter of the application made before the Settlement Officer in the year 1905.

The subject-matter of that application was whether the plaintiffs were entitled to claim enhancement under s. 130-B in that particular year, whereas the subject-matter of the present suit is whether in view of the rise in the average local prices of the staple food crops during the currency of the present term (1918—1927) the rent is liable to be enhanced. It has been held in Abdul Sattar v. Rajkishore Sah (4), that s. 109 will not bar the maintainability of a suit under s. 7 merely because the defence taken by the defendant in the suit is the same as the objection taken by him to a previous application under s. 105, and that where in an application under s. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, for enhancement of rent, the defendant contended that the rent of the tenure was fixed and was not liable to enhancement, and the application was withdrawn, and more than 15 years afterwards the landlord sued for enhancement under s. 107, Bengal Tenancy Act, and the defendants raised the same objection, the suit could not be held to have become barred under s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act. In that case the decisions of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council were explained and it was pointed out that the question which was material to be considered was whether the subject-matter of the suit was the same as the subject-matter of the application. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to enhancement; and, the only question is at what rate the enhancement should be allowed. The learned Munsif allowed enhancement at the rate of 4 annas 6 pies in the rupee, but having regard to the present conditions and particularly to the serious economic depression, we think that it would not be fair to allow enhancement at that rate. In course of the hearing of this appeal the plaintiffs expressed their willingness to accept enhancement at the rate of half an anna in the rupee upon the existing rent and we think that in the circumstances of the case, enhancement should be allowed at that rate.

Only one material point remains to be dealt with and they may be disposed of at once. The learned Additional District Judge states in his judgment that the plaintiffs have not impleaded the other co-sharer landlords and, therefore, their suits cannot be entertained as rent suits. The learned District Judge, however, in an earlier portion of his judgment, while he was reciting the facts of the case, has stated that the plaintiffs were landlords of a separate patti formed by the Collectorate batwara and allotted to them; and, as the learned Munsif has pointed out Register D which has been filed in the present suit shows that the plaintiffs are the exclusive landlords of the estate which has been formed as a result of the partition. Thus they are fully competent to sue for rent as well as for the enhancement of the rent in the present suit and there is no question of non-joinder of parties.

I would, therefore, allow the appeals with costs and set aside the decree of the learned District Judge. So far as the claim for rent is concerned, I would restore the decree of the Munsif and so far as the claim for enhancement is concerned, I would vary the decree passed by the Munsif by allowing enhancement at the rate of half an anna in the rupee.

James, J.—I agree entirely.

It appears to be clear that there was never any actual division of this raiyati holding. The learned Munsif perceived this from the fact that the defendant who gave evidence in the case was unable to specify the plots which had been allotted to him in the so-called division. The learned Additional District Judge discussing this point did not deal with the evidence of the defendants, but based his decision on statements made by the plaintiff's witnesses, taken out of their context, which read as a whole supported the view of the learned Munsif, and explained how it happened that before the Collectorate partition these landlords granted receipts which appeared to indicate that a division of the holding had taken place. It appears that the defendants quarrelled among themselves and set about dividing up their holding, obtaining the landlords' consent to this proposed partition, on condition that an ekrarnama was to be executed by the tenant. No such ekrarnama was executed; and when the landlords' estate was partitioned by the Collector, and it became necessary for the preparation of the Record of Rights for that partition, to specify the plots in possession of the raiyats, notice was issued to the defendants; but the holding was surveyed as one holding with their tacit acquiescence. It is impossible in the circumstances to say that there has been a sub-division of this holding; or that the landlords' willingness to recognize such a sub-division when it was originally proposed amounts to a recognition under s. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, of a sub-division which did not in fact take place.

In Reshee Case Law Satis v. Chandra Pal (2), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council accepted the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Purna Chandra v. Narendra Nath (3), as authority for the proposition that the provisions of s. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, barred a subsequent civil suit in a case in which the earlier claim under s. 105 was based on an alleged excess of area. A person presenting a petition under s. 105 states under sub-s. (4) of that section, what particular rule laid down in the Act for guidance of Civil Courts he desires to have applied for the settlement of fair and equitable rent of the holding in question. In the case before the Privy Council it appears that s. 52 (1) (a), Bengal Tenancy Act, was thus called in aid; and the subject-matter of the subsequent suit was precisely the same as the subject-matter of the application under s. 105. In case where s. 32, Bengal Tenancy Act, is thus called in aid, a subsequent civil suit cannot deal exactly with the same subject-matter. In the present suit for enhancement the Court had to determine under s. 32, Bengal Tenancy Act, the effect of the rise in prices during the decennial period of 1918 to 1927. The effect of the rise in prices between 1918 and 1927 could not possibly have been the subject-matter of an application made under s. 105 in the year 1905; and consequently, although that application in 1905 may have been withdrawn with or without permission to institute a fresh suit, the effect of the provisions of s. 109 could not be in such circumstances a bar to a suit based on a rise in prices in subsequent years.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Civil Miscellaneous Case No. 436 of 1934

September 26, 1934

THOM AND HARRIES, JJ.

RAM MOHAN LAL AGARWALA,

In the matter of Contempt—Contempt of Court—Writer believing what he states to be true—Whether justification—Evidence to establish truth of allegations—Whether can be led—Election manifesto slandering judiciary—Contempt is punishable—Printer and publisher acting on Advocate's words—Absence of intention—Unqualified apology—Punishment, if called for.

There can be no justification of contempt of Court even assuming that the writer of an election manifesto believed all he stated therein to be true. If anything in the manifesto amounts to contempt of Court, he is not permitted to lead evidence to establish the truth of his allegations. Contempt of Court is saying or writing anything about the Court which may lower the prestige of the Court or bring it into contempt.

It is not uncommon to attack abuses and to attack persons in an election manifesto whether the abuses be existent or not, or whether the persons deserve the vituperation which is often showered upon them in these productions, but to slander the whole Judiciary of a Province in an attempt to secure votes at a Bar Council election, is not only contemptible but almost criminal in its purpose.

The passage in respect of which notice was issued was as follows: "I believe you must have seen my name prominently in the press in connection with a contempt of Court case and again under the Legal Practitioners Act last year. I was conducting my private case. It was not a case of a client and was not a case of moral turpitude but even then I was punished twice over for the same alleged offence. We are helpless. Being a fighter and having suffered for the strength of my convictions I can assure you that I will fight for your rights as well."

Held, that the passage was a clear reflection upon the High Court and that it could not be regarded merely as a technical contempt but the casting of the aspersion amounted to serious contempt of Court.

On the proprietor and printers of the press in which the manifestoes containing the above passage were printed, stating that they had no intention to make any aspersion either against the High Court or the Subordinate Judiciary and that they were unaware that what they were printing contained a contempt of Court and further that if they had unwittingly committed contempt of Court they offer an unconditional apology:

Held, that although no doubt they relied entirely upon the Advocate who gave instructions that nothing was being printed that was contempt of Court, it was not unreasonable that they should have relied upon the fact that they had been instructed to do the printing by an Advocate and though undoubtedly guilty of contempt, in view of the unqualified apology tendered by them, no punishment was necessary.

Messrs. S. M. Hussain, Mushtaq Ahmad and T. A. Bradley, for the Applicant,

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—Mr. Ram Mohan Lal Agarwala, an Advocate practising in the High Court at Allahabad, has been directed to show cause why he should not be convicted for contempt of Court in respect of certain passages in election manifestoes which were issued by him in furtherance of his candidature for membership of the Bar Council of Allahabad at the recent Bar Council election. In five of these manifestoes the Advocate made certain statements in respect of which the Court issued these notices. For the sake of convenience the arguments of the Counsel for the Advocate will be dealt within one judgment. In the manifesto which is the subject of case No. 436 Mr. Ram Mohan Lal stated:

"The favoured few get tons and tons of money every month and also command respect because they are on the top already. They are above board. The Judge cannot snub them."

Coming from a member of the Bar this statement is undoubtedly highly objectionable. It is a statement to which we would have thought no respectable member of the Bar would have committed himself either in public or in private. We are not of the opinion, however, that it constitues a serious contempt of Court, although it does imply a certain criticism of the Court. It amounts to no more, in our opinion, than a technical contempt and in the circumstances, therefore, so far as the particular statement is concerned, we discharge the notice which was issued against Mr. Ram Mohan Lal. In the manifesto which is the subject of Miscellaneous Case No. 437 Mr. Ram Mohan Lal stated as follows: A Judicial Officer, however impertinent, arrogant and conceited, is protected while a poor Advocate is:

"at the mercy of a Judicial Officer at every turn. The Bar Council is entitled to be as jealous about the interest of an Advocate as the High Court is about a Judicial Officer. A report whether correct or incorrect by a Munsif may be attended with direct consequences against an Advocate while the poor Advocate is helpless. The Court snubs an Advocate and treats him with contempt while a mild retort from him is often met with direct result."

The Advocate through his Counsel has stated that by the words used he did not intend to convey any criticism either of the Subordinate Courts or of the High Court. Learned Counsel has argued that interpreting the words in their ordinary meaning they do not imply any reflection upon the judiciary. We have considered all that learned Counsel has urged in this respect and we are of opinion, that we cannot accept his contention. The particular statement must be read along with the rest of the manifesto of which it forms part, and it is apparent to us that what Mr. Ram Mohan Lal intended to convey by this passage was that whilst the Judicial Officer could always look to the High Court or to the law for protection—it may be against an Advocate practising before him—when a report made by a Judicial Officer in regard to the conduct of an Advocate came before the High Court for disposal, the Advocate against whom the report was made did not get a square deal. In other words that the High Court before whom the reports about the conduct of Advocates came did not deal with these reports in an even-handed and impartial manner. That, in our view, is the plain meaning of this passage and we are confirmed in our view upon a consideration of the terms of the manifesto as a whole.

Such reflections upon the conduct of the Court undoubtedly amounts to contempt of Court. We hold, therefore, that in uttering and publishing the passage complained of Mr. Ram Mohan Lal has been guilty of contempt of Court. We convict him of contempt of Court and impose upon him a fine of Rs. 50. Further, he will pay the Government's costs in connection with this case. The statement in respect of which notice was issued in Case No. 438 is as follows:—

"The writer objects to the procedure adopted by the Leaders of the Bar in our High Court in certain contempt cases and cases of professional misconduct. They invariably, without going into the merits of the case, throw him at mercy of the Court. I respectfully submit, abject apologies are harmful to the dignity of the profession....."

We have carefully considered this passage and the manifesto of which it forms part and we are of opinion, that it does not amount to contempt of Court, although the statement is highly objectionable and one which we are surprised to see in a manifesto issued by an Advocate. We accordingly discharge the notice in Case No. 438. The passage in respect of which notice was issued in case No. 439 is as follows:—

"Ministerial Officers under the connivance of the presiding officers almost everywhere with some honourable exceptions accept bribes openly in the Courts.....No proceedings against me can desist me from exposing them who are in the wrong."

There can be no doubt whatever what was the intention of the writer of this passage. He clearly meant to convey to those to whom the pamphlet in which the passage appears was addressed that, with one or two exceptions, the subordinate judiciary in this Province was corrupt, that they allowed bribes to be taken in the Courts and that they indeed connived at this conduct. This, of course, is clear contempt of Court. Mr. Ram Mohan Lal was under the impression that he was entitled to make the statement referred to and further that in these proceedings he was entitled in his defence to prove that the statement was true. He, therefore, intimated to the Court by a written application that he proposed to call more than 1,600 witnesses to prove his allegation. Later he reduced the number of the witnesses which he asked this Court to summon to give evidence to-day. He was required by the Court to furnish an affidavit stating upon what grounds he alleged that any of these witnesses would admit the truth contained in the passage referred to. From his affidavit it was perfectly clear that he had no ground whatever for alleging that the witnesses whom he named would support him in the sweeping allegations he had made against the Subordinate Judiciary. In these circumstances, had the leading of evidence in these proceedings been open to Mr. Ram Mohan Lal, we should have refused to summon the witnesses whose names he mentioned in his application to the Court. Clearly there can be no justification of contempt of Court, even assuming that the writer of the manifesto believed all he stated therein to be true. If anything in the manifesto amounts to contempt of Court he is not permitted to lead evidence to establish the truth of his allegations. Contempt of Court is saying or writing anything about the Court which may lower the prestige of the Court or bring it into contempt. Learned Counsel was unable to cite any case in which evidence had been permitted in justification of an offence in a case for contempt. Not only, therefore, was the Advocate not entitled to lead evidence in support of his allegations, but from his affidavit it was abundantly plain that he had no reason for believing that the witnesses he named would support him in the very grave and sweeping allegations he had made against the Subordinate Judiciary.

Learned Counsel has contended that we ought to take a lenient view of the offence of his client in respect that the manifesto was written in an excess of zeal for the public interest. The passage is in a manifesto which the Advocate issued for the purpose of securing votes from members of the Bar at the recent Bar Council election. It is not uncommon to attack abuses and to attack persons in an election manifesto whether the abuses be existent or not, or whether the persons deserve the vituperation which is often showered upon them in these productions, but to slander the whole Judiciary of a Province in an attempt to secure votes at a Bar Council election, is not only contemptible but almost criminal in its purpose. Nothing that learned Counsel for the Advocate has been able to say has in any way lessened the heinousness of the offence which Mr. Ram Mohan Lal has undoubtedly committed. If he had been of the opinion that abuses existed in the Subordinate Courts there were other methods which he could have adopted if he had been truely concerned with the removal of these abuses. It is apparent to us, however, that the main consideration present in Mr. Ram Mohan Lal's mind when he wrote this manifesto was to secure sufficient number of votes to return him as a member of the Bar Council.

We accordingly convict Mr. Ram Mohan Lal of contempt of Court in respect of the passage referred to in Case No. 439 and we sentence him to a fine of Rs. 200. Further he will pay the Government's costs in connection with these proceedings. The passage in respect of which notice was issued in Miscellaneous Case No. 440 is as follows :—

"I believe you must have seen my name prominently in the press in connection with a contempt of Court case and again under the Legal Practitioners Act last year. I was conducting my private case. It was not a case of a client and was not a case of moral turpitude but even then I was punished twice over for the same alleged offence. We are helpless. Being a fighter and having suffered for the strength of my convictions, I can assure you that I will fight for your rights as well."

In our view this is a clear reflection upon the High Court. The writer alleges that he was punished twice for the same offence and anyone reading the passage would understand that the High Court was responsible for imposing double punishment upon the accused for the same offence. Further, the writer infers in the passage that he was unjustly convicted, that he had suffered for his convictions and he assures his audience that he would continue to fight as he had fought in the past for their rights as well. In our view this is a flagrant contempt of Court. We have listened to all that has been urged on behalf of the Advocate by his Counsel. We cannot, however, giving due consideration to all, that he has stated, regard this merely as a technical contempt. The passage clearly shows that no matter what the decision of the High Court is, he is going to repeat the conduct for which he has already been punished and that he has really in effect suffered serious injustice. There can be no doubt that such an aspersion upon the Court amounts to serious contempt of Court. We convict Mr. Ram Mohan Lal of contempt of Court in respect of the passage mentioned in Miscellaneous Case No. 440. We sentence him to a fine of Rs. 50 and we direct that he do pay the Government's costs of these proceedings. Mr. Ram Mohan Lal is ordered to pay all the fines and the costs within two months from this date. Failing to pay the costs and the fine of Rs. 50 imposed in Case No. 437, Mr. Ram Mohan Lal is sentenced to simple imprisonment of one month. In default of the payment of the costs and the fine of Rs. 200 imposed in Case No. 439 Mr. Ram Mohan Lal is sentenced to a period of simple imprisonment of two months. In default of payment of the costs and Rs. 50 fine imposed in Case No. 440, Mr. Ram Mohan Lal is sentenced to undergo a period of simple imprisonment of one month. The costs of the Government Advocate in each case will be Rs. 80.

In Miscellaneous Cases Nos. 436, 437, 438 and 440 notices to show cause were also issued to Mr. Muhammad Shafi, the proprietor of the "Imperial Press", printers of the manfestoes referred to in these cases. In Case No. 440 notice was also issued to a co-proprietor, Mr. Muhammad Azimuddin. These persons have appeared before us to-day and through their Counsel they have filed statements in Court. In these statements they say definitely that they had no intention to make any aspersion either against the High Court or against the Subordinate Judiciary, that they were unaware that what they were printing contained a contempt of Court and further that if they have unwittingly committed contempt of Court, they offer an unconditional apology.

We take into consideration the fact that the pamphlets in question were printed upon the instructions of a member of the Bar and, therefore, there is some excuse for Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Mr. Muhammad Azimuddin and the fact of their explanation that they were unaware that what they were printing contained anything amounting to a contempt of Court. No doubt it is true that they relied entirely upon the Advocate who gave instructions that nothing was being printed that was contempt of Court. It is not unreasonable that they should have relied upon the fact that they had been instructed to do the printing by an Advocate.

They have undoubtedly in law been guilty of contempt of Court in respect of all the statements except one referred to in Miscellaneous Case No. 438. In view of the unqualified apology which they have tendered and of the other circumstances which we have referred to above, we do not think that in justice the Court should impose any punishment upon them in respect of the offence for which they are guilty. We think, in the circumstances, that a warning is sufficient in their case. In their case the notices will be discharged.

Mr. Ghulam Azhar, proprietor of the City Press, Allahabad, was ordered to show cause in connection with the passage referred to in Case No. 439. He also has tendered an unqualified apology and through his Counsel and his written statement assured the Court that it was not his intention to cast any aspersion upon the Court. In his case also, therefore, we accept the apology and we think that it is unnecessary of impose any punishment on him in respect of the offence of which he has been guilty. We consider that in his case also a warning will be sufficient. We discharge the notice in his case.

N. Order accordingly.

Criminal Reference No. 14 of 1934

April 12, 1934

SAUNDERS, J.

GAYA PRASAD SINGH AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

RAM SAROBER SARAN SINGH AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 107—Previous order of Court in land registration case—Weight to be attached to it—Discretion of Magistrate—Interference with, if proper — Keeping case pending till revision against previous order is decided—Propriety of—Duty of Magistrate to receive evidence.

The likelihood of the breach of the peace is sufficient to give the Magistrate jurisdiction. The weight to be attached to a previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court is a question for the consideration of the Magistrate. Where therefore the Magistrate has jurisdiction to proceed under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, there can be no interference with his discretion even if the matter might have been more suitably dealt with under s. 107. In such circumstances, however, the case ought not to be kept pending for the decision of the application for revision against the previous orders in a land registration case relating to the land in dispute. The Magistrate should proceed with the case and decide it without avoidable delay so that the property may be restored as soon as possible to the party which was in possession of it. He is bound to receive all such evidence as may be produced. Parmeshwar Singh v. Kailas Pati (2), applied.

Cr. Ref. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated March 23, 1934.

Messrs. S. N. Roy and B. N. Rai, for the Reference.

Messrs. Baldeo Sahay, B. C. De and K. Dayal, against the Reference.

Order.—This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Monghyr with regard to proceedings under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. between persons to whom a Hindu widow surrendered her late husband's estate and other persons who claimed to be in possession of the property. The proceedings relate to the baskast land appertaining to the estate. After the case was started the Magistrate found that the question of the possession of the entire estate had been decided by a Deputy Collector in a land registration case whose decision had been upheld by the Collector on appeal. As evidence had been taken in that case, the Magistrate did not consider it necessary to hear evidence in his own Court and he proposed to dicide the case in accordance with the Deputy Collector's decision. But as an application for revision of the order of the Deputy Collector was pending, the Magistrate adjourned the case for orders until after the date fixed for the disposal of the application by the Commissioner. I should mention that the property which is the subject of the proceedings had been attached under the second proviso to sub-s. (4) of s. 145.

The learned Sessions Judge recommends that as there are concurrent findings of the Deputy Collector and the Collector in the land registration case in favour of one of the parties, the proceedings under s. 145 should be quashed, and that if there remains any apprehension of a breach of the peace, it may be left to the Magistrate to take action against the other party under s. 107 of the Code. The learned Sessions Judge takes the view that now that the question has been decided by the revenue authorities, it cannot be said that the dispute as to possession is bona fide. The decisions of the Calcutta High Court, however, in which this view was taken, were overruled by a Full Bench of that High Court in Agani Kumar Das v. Momtazuddin (1). In this case the question whether the word dispute in sub-s. (2), of s. 145 refers only to a "bona fide" dispute as distinct from a dispute that has already been decided inter partes by a competent Court was considered and it was held by Rankin, C. J., that the words "dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace" do not refer only to bona fide disputes or only to reasonable dispute. The decision of the Full Bench was that the words "dispute" means actual disagreement existing between the parties at the time of the proceedings under s. 145 even though the question as to the right of possession has already been decided by a Civil Court. A Full Bench of the Patna High Court also held in Parmeshwar Singh v. Kailas Pati (2), that the likelihood of the breach of the peace was sufficient to give the Magistrate jurisdiction, that the weight to be attached to a previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court was a question for the consideration of the Magistrate. In the present case, therefore, the Magistrate had jurisdiction to proceed under s. 145 and there can be no interference with his discretion even if, as the learned Sessions Judge supposes, the matter might have been more suitably dealt with under s. 107.

I agree, however, with the learned Sessions Judge that the case ought not to be kept pending for the decision of the application for revision by the Commissioner. The Magistrate should proceed with the case and decide it without avoidable delay so that the property may be restored as soon as possible to the party which was in possession of it. But as the Magistrate apparently does not intend to take any evidence and as the Advocate appearing for the party against which the land registration case has been decided state that it is proposed to adduce evidence on the question of the possession of the land to which the proceedings before the Magistrate relate, it becomes necessary for me to observe that, however, great may be the weight which he will eventually attach to the decision of the land registration case, the Magistrate is nevertheless under a legal obligation in the terms of the section:

"to receive all such evidence as may be produced by the parties, respectively, and consider the effect of such evidence."

With these observations the reference made by the Sessions Judge is discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 9—Claim for profits by one co-sharer of an occupancy holding against another—Whether a suit of a civil nature—Co-sharers—Possession of one is possession of all—Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), s. 238.

Where one of several co-sharers in an occupancy holding or other tenure is solely in possession, he cannot be considered to be in wrongful possession; nor can the co-sharers suing for profits be said to have been wrongfully dispossessed from the holding or tenure. Possession of one co-sharer is possession of all who should be deemed to be in constructive possession through the co-sharer who is in actual possession by cultivating the land or by receipt of rents from sub-tenants. A claim for profits by one co-sharer of an occupancy holding against another is a suit of a civil nature and hence under s. 9, Civil Procedure Code, the suit lies in the Civil Court.

Mis. Case from an order of the Collector, Agra, dated July 3, 1934.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Applicants.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act, by the Collector of Agra. It appears that a suit was instituted by one of several co-sharers of certain occupancy holdings for profits in the Court of the Munsif, Agra, who returned the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court on the ground that the suit is one which is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Revenue Court. The learned Munsif made a reference to s. 99, Agra Tenancy Act, (III of 1926), besides s. 230 of the same Act the defendant is not represented in this Court and it is not clear, whether it was on his objection that the learned Munsif returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. We do not find anything in s. 99 which may be applicable to the circumstances of this case. Perhaps the learned Munsif thought that the suit was one by a co-sharer in an occupancy holding for compensation for wrongful dispossession by another co-sharer who is holding under the same landlord as the plaintiff. If the learned Munsif was influenced by this consideration, we think that he proceeded on a far-fetched ground. Where one of several co-sharers in an occupancy holding or other tenure is solely in possession, he cannot be considered to be in wrongful possession; nor can the co-sharers suing for profits be said to have been wrongfully dispossessed from the holding or tenure. Possession of one co sharer is possession of all who should be deemed to be in constructive possession through the co-sharer who is in actual possession by cultivating the land or by receipt of rents from sub-tenants.

In our opinion s. 230, Agra Tenancy Act, (III of 1926), is decisive on the point. That section declares that suits and application of the nature specified in the fourth schedule shall be heard and determined by the Revenue Courts, and no Courts other than a Revenue Court shall, except by way of appeal or revision as provided in this Act, take cognizance of any such suit or application or of any suit or application based on a cause of action in respect of which adequate relief could be obtained by means of any such suit or application. We are thus thrown back on Sch. IV, which does not make any mention of a suit by a co-sharer of an occupancy holding against another co-sharer for profits as one which the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court. It follows that the jurisdiction is not ousted by anything in s. 230, or Sch. IV, Tenancy Act. As to whether the civil Court has jurisdiction, there can be no doubt that under s. 9, Civil Procedure Code, it has jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature. It cannot be denied that a claim for profits by one co-sharer of an occupancy holding against another is a suit of a civil nature. This being so, the suit was, in our opinion, rightly instituted in the Court of the Munsif.

It appears that the plaint was subsequently filed in a Revenue Court which expressed the opinion that the suit was not cognizable by it. Accordingly the Collector made the present reference under s. 257. We take it that the plaint is still in the Revenue Court which shall return it to the plaintiff for presentation to the civil Court competent to try it. The reference is accordingly answered as above.

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), ss. 99, 230, 267—Co-sharer—Suit by co-sharer of ex-proprietary tenure against other co-sharers for share of profits—Suit, if cognizable by Civil Court—Bench sitting in exercise of special jurisdiction conferred by s 267—Conflicting opinions expressed by single Judge of High Court sitting in appeal from Civil Court order, and by Revenue Court—Doubt as to jurisdiction—Reference under s. 267—Competency of—Previous opinion of single Judge—Whether operates as bar.

A suit by a co-sharer of an ex-proprietary tenure against other co-sharers, for his share of the profits, is within the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. Jumna Das v. Misri Lal (1), followed.

A single Judge of the High Court sitting in appeal or revision from the order of a subordinate Civil Court is a Civil Court within the meaning of s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act For the purposes of s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act, it does not matter that doubt as to jurisdiction arises from conflicting opinions expressed by a Court of Appeal in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Civil Court, and by the Revenue Court. Once there is a doubt created by conflicting orders of Civil and Revenue Courts the special jurisdiction of the High Court conferred by s. 267 of the Agra Tenancy Act can be invoked and can be exercised with the result stated in sub-s. (5), s 267. Where a Bench is sitting in the exercise of a special jurisdiction conferred by s. 267, a reference to that Court is competent and the previous order of a single Judge of the High Court on the question of jurisdiction will not be a bar to the exercise of the special jurisdiction by the Bench when the doubt as to jurisdiction has arisen from conflicting opinions expressed by the Single Judge sitting in appeal from the order of a Subordinate Civil Court, and by a Revenue Court.

Order on reference submitted by the Commissioner of Allahabad Division, United Provinces, as per his letter No. 1292, P. O. II, dated September 24, 1934.

Mr. Hyder Mehdi, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act, by the Commissioner, Allahabad. The plaintiff instituted a suit against his co-sharers in an ex-proprietary tenure, in the Court of the Munsif, Allahabed, for his share of the profits. The Munsif returned the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court, holding that the suit was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the latter Court. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who took a contrary view and held that the suit had been rightly instituted in the Civil Court. A second appeal was preferred to this Court and came up for hearing before a learned single Judge who treated the appeal as revision on the ground that no appeal lay to this Court. That learned Judge held that the suit was cognizable by the Revenue Court as held by the Munsif. Accordingly he set aside the District Judge's order and restored that of the Munsif. The plaintiff then presented his plaint in the Revenue Court. The Assitant Collector before whom the suit came on for hearing, dismissed it on the ground that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction. The plaintiff went in appeal to the Court of the Commissioner who has made the present reference under s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act. We are of opinion that the learned Commissioner had adopted the proper procedure in view of the opinion expressed by a learned single Judge of this Court.

It is argued by the learned Advocate for the defendants that the order of the learned single Judge of this Court already referred to is a bar to this Bench taking a contrary view and that whatever may be the correct law on the subject, it must be held for the purposes of this case that the Revenue Court has jurisdiction. We are unable to accede to this contention. Section 267, Agra Tenancy Act, has been enacted to meet the requirements of cases in which conflicting opinions are entertained by Civil and Revenue Courts as regards the proper forum. The opening words of that section make it perfectly clear that :

"Where either a Civil or a Revenue Court is in doubt whether it is competent to entertain any suit, application, or appeal, or whether it should direct the plaintiff, applicant or appellant, to file the same in a Court of the other description, the Court may submit the record, with a statement of the reasons for its doubt, to the High Court."

The Commissioner did entertain a doubt and has submitted the case with his own opinion to the effect that the suit is cognizable by the Civil Court. Sub-section (4) of s. 267 further provides that :

"On any such reference being made, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the case or, to return the plaint, application or appeal for presentation to such other Court as it may declare to be competent to try the same."

Sub-section (5) contains the mandatory provision that :

"The order of the High Court shall be final and binding on all Courts Subordinate to it."

That a single Judge of this Court sitting in appeal or revision from the order of a subordinate Civil Court is a Civil Court within the meaning of s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act can admit of no doubt. We are sitting not in the exercise of our jurisdiction as a Court of first or second appeal but in the exercise of a special jurisdiction conferred by s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act, which as already stated, clearly declares that such order of this Court is final and binding on all Courts Subordinate to the High Court. For the purposes of s. 267, Agra Tenancy Act, it does not matter that doubt as to jurisdiction arises from conflicting opinions expressed by a Court of Appeal, even this Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Civil Court and by the Revenue Court. Once there is a doubt created by conflicting orders of Civil and Revenue Courts, the special jurisdiction of this Court conferred by s. 267 of the Agra Tenancy Act can be invoked and can be exercised with the result stated in sub-s. (5), s. 267. We are clearly of opinion that the defendants' contention that the order of the learned single Judge of this Court is a bar, has no force.

On the merits of the case much need not be said as this Bench has already held in a similar case, viz., Jumna Das v. Misri Lal (1) that the jurisdiction in such cases lies with the Civil Courts. The argument put forward by the learned Advocate for the appellant in reference to s. 99 of the Tenancy Act has been disposed of by our judgment in that case. We need not repeat the grounds on which our decision in that case proceeds.

The result is that we hold that the plaintiff's suit is cognizable by a Civil Court. Accordingly we direct that the plaint be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the Court of the Munsif East Allahabad, who has jurisdiction to entertain it.

N. Order accordingly.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 7-A—U. P. The benefit which the ex-proprietary tenant gets by having ex-proprietary rights created in his once sir plots is a benefit which cannot be filched from him by any arrangement or device entered into by him or by any other person. Raja Moti Chand v. Ikram Ullah (2), applied. [p. 43, col. 1.]

Where sir land is gifted subject to the charge that the donee should pay the profits thereof to another as maintenance allowance and the land is subsequently sold giving rise to ex-proprietary rights in favour of the donee, his liability to pay maintenance ceases. After the sale, the purchaser is the only person whom the charge-holder can look to for payment of maintenance allowance and the amount payable is the rent which the purchaser receives from the ex-proprietary tenant and not the rent which the latter receives from his sub-tenants.

When an agreement, in the nature of a family settlement, makes provision for certain maintenance allowances, which should be paid out of the taluqa, that agreement does not create any personal liability on the holder of the estate, but creates a charge upon the income of the estate. Har Narain Das v. Rup Kuer (3), relied on. Remission of rent automatically follows the remission of revenue. [p. 44, col. 1.]

S. C. A. against an order of the Sub-Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow, dated February 9, 1933, reversing that of the Munsif, Lucknow, dated February 12, 1932.

Messrs. H. Husain and Iqbal Ali, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nazaruddin and Abid Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These are two connected appeals against an appellate judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Malihabad, in the District of Lucknow, partially allowing the plaintiff's appeal and modifying the judgment and decree of the Court of the Munsif of Lucknow, decreeing the plaintiff's suit for recovery of Rs. 318-9-0 with proportionate costs against the defendant No. 2 alone.

The facts out of which these appeals arise are briefly as follows.—One Musammat Saidunnissa was Talukdar of village Ghazipur in the District of Lucknow. Her name was entered at No. 2 in list I and at No. 2 in List III of the Lists prepared under s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, (Act I of 1869). On her death the estate devolved on Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain. On January 18, 1913 Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain executed a will by which he gifted this village to one Ahmad Raza subject to the maintenance allowances granted to the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam and others. On December 20, 1917 Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain died leaving his grandson Chaudhuri Akbar Husain as his heir. On February 2, 1918 a compromise was arrived at between Chaudhuri Akbar Husain and the heirs of Ahmad Raza, including his father Muhammad Raza, under which village Ghazipur was given to Chaudhuri Akbar Husain, subject to payment of debts and subject also to the payment of the maintenance allowance granted to the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam, under the will of Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain. On February 20, 1929, in execution of a decree, Nawab Shenshah Begam, defendant No. 2, purchased village Ghazipur at an auction sale, subject to the payment of the maintenance allowance granted to the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam under the will of Muhammad Husain. The facts connected with this auction sale have been given at length in a Bench decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Akbar Husain v. Shenshah Begam (1). On December 20,

(1) 83 Ind. Cas. 854; 27 O C 56; 11 O L J 82; A I R 1924 Oudh 302.

1930, the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow, in virtue of the provisions of s. 36 of the land Revenue Act, fixed the ex-proprietary rent to be paid by Chaudhuri Akbar Husain in respect of the 43 bighas 14 biswas of his quondam sir land in village Ghazipur at Rs. 264-10-2. On December 3, 1931, Husain Jehan Begam brought the present suit on the basis of the will of Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain, dated January 18, 1913, for recovery of Rs. 930 alleging that both defendants, namely, Chaudhuri Akbar Husain and Nawab Shenshah Begam, were liable to her for the profits of the sir land of 21 bighas 9 biswas in village Ghazipur as also for the arrears of maintenance allowance for two months, at the rate of Rs. 15 per mensem. The plaintiff claimed three years profits of the sir land extending from September 20, 1928, to September 20, 1931. The defence of Chaudhuri Akbar Husain, defendant No. 1, was, that he was no longer the proprietor of village Ghazipur or any portion thereof during the years in suit, that he was merely an ex-proprietary tenant under the Oudh Rent Act, and that, therefore, no liability attached to him for payment of the plaintiff's maintenance allowance or for payment of any profits from his once sir plots. He further pleaded that no decree for personal liability could be passed against him, as the maintenance granted to the plaintiff by his grand-father created a charge on village Ghazipur and as such, was to be paid by the proprietor of the village during the years in suit. The learned Munsif of Lucknow, who tried the suit, accepted the contention of defendant No. 1, and decreed the plaintiff's suit only against the auction-purchaser, Nawab Shenshah Begam defendant No. 2, in respect of a sum of Rs. 318-9-0 and dismissed the plaintiff's suit as against defendant No. 1, Chaudhuri Akbar Husain. The plaintiff went up in appeal, and the learned Subordinate Judge of Malihabad, in the District of Lucknow, gave the plaintiff a decree against both defendants, holding that defendant No. 1, Chaudhuri Akbar Husain, was liable to pay one-third of the sum decreed against defendant No. 2, Shenshah Begam, on the ground that the 4 annas in the rupee deduction allowed to defendant No. 1 in respect of his ex-proprietary holding should, in its entirety, be handed over to the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court also made defendant No. 1 personally liable in respect of the amount decreed against him in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1, Chaudhuri Akbar Husain, has come up in second appeal against this finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. His appeal is No. 146 of 1933. The plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam has also appealed, and her appeal is No. 160 of 1933. Her prayer in her appeal is that the entire amount of rent realised from the sub-tenants of the once sir plots should be decreed to her.

I have heard the learned Counsel of all three parties at some length, and have examined the evidence on the record. I will first take up the appeal of defendant No. 1 (No. 146 of 1933). In the first place it was strenuously argued on behalf of Chaudhuri Akbar Husain that the lower Appellate Court acted contrary to law in holding that a decree for profits of sir land could be passed against an ex-proprietary tenant when that ex-proprietary tenant had lost all proprietary rights in the land in dispute. I have examined the will of Chaudhuri Mohammad Husain. It is marked Ex. I. This will is the foundation of the plaintiff's title. The last two lines of para. 1 of this will run as follows:

"Aur har shaks mazur ki rakam go zara mukarara bar jumla jaedad mundarje dafa 13 wasiat name haza wa amdani jumla jaedad mundarje dafa 13 mazkur par jo Ahmad Razakur ko basaria vasiyatnama haza zer bar gozara hai mazur di gai hai, rahe"

This clause obviously creates charge on village Ghazipur in respect of the payment of the maintenance allowance granted in favour of the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam. In another portion of the will occurs the following passage in respect of the maintenance allowance granted to the plaintiff Hussin Jehan Begam:—

"Mublig 15 rupya mahwar jo mublig 180 rupya salana hota hai, main munafa 21 bigha 9 biswas arazi jaribi sir bandobast 1212 Fsli,, bila lagan jo mundarje dafa 13 vasiyat haza hai yeh rakam va arazi mazkur ki amadani hin hayati mukarar ki gai hai".

This clause in the will shows that the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam is not only to receive a cash allowance of Rs. 180 per annum, but also the profits of the 21 bighas 9 biswas of sir land in village Ghazipur. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 300 a year as the rents actually realised from the sub-tenants by the proprietor in respect of this sir land. It is admitted in para 5 of the plaint that the 21 bighas 9 biswas of sir land mentioned in the will of Chaudhari Mohammed Husain has now been found on measurement to be only 20 bighas 10 biswas, and that the plaintiff only claims profits in respect of this area of sir land. Exhibit B-1 is the copy of the judgment of the Assistant Collector Sheikh Mohamad Husain dated December 20, 1930, fixing Rs. 264-10-2 as the ex-proprietary rent of the entire sir area of 43 bighas 14 biswas in village Ghazi pur, and declaring Chaudhari Akbar Husain defendant No. 1, as the ex-proprietary tenant of these 43 bighas 14 biswas. The trial Court has held that the proportionate ex-proprietary rent from the 21 bighas 9 biswas or 20 bighas 10 biswas in suit comes to Rs. 134-8-5. Section 7-A of the Oudh Rent Act lays down that every proprietor or under-proprietor whose proprietary or under proprietary rights as the case may be, in a mahal or any portion thereof, whether in any share thereion or in any specific area thereof, are transferred, on or after the first day of January 1902, either by foreclosure or sale in execution of a decree or order of a Civil or Revenue Court, or by voluntary alienation, otherwise than by gift or by exchange between co-sharers in the mahal, shall become a tenant with a right of occupancy in his sir land, and in the land which he has cultivated continuously for 12 years at the date of the transfer, and shall be entitled to hold the same at a rent which shall be four annas in the rupee less than the fair and equitable rate payable by statutory tenants for land of the same class or classes of soil; and s. 36 of the Land Revenue Act, (Act III of 1901), lays down that when a right of occupancy has been created under the provisions of s. 10 of the North Western Provinces Tenancy Act, II of 1901, or s. 7-A of the Oudh Rent Act XXII of 1886, as the case may be, in favour of an ex-proprietary tenant, the Collector shall in the course of the mutation proceedings under s. 35, or, if more convenient in a separate, proceeding pass an order specifying the land in which such occupancy right has been created and fixing the rent payable, therefore, in accordance with the provisions of those sections.

It is thus clear that defendant No. 1 Chaudhari Akbar Husain has not in any way attempted to defraud the plaintiff, but has by statutory law, acquired ex-proprietary rights in his once sir plots, and is not liable to pay any portion of the benefit conferred upon him by statute to the plaintiff, who has been granted a maintenance allowance under the will of Chaudhari Muhammad Husain. In Raja Moti Chand v. Ikram Ullah (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council discussing the policy of Act II of 1901, delivered themselves as follows:—

"It appears to their Lordships that it cannot be doubted that the policy of III of 1901 is to secure and preserve to a proprietor whose proprietary rights in a mahal or any portion of it are transferred otherwise than by gift or by exchange between co-sharers in the mahal a right of occupancy in his sir lands and in the land which he has cultivated continuously for twelve years at the date of the transfer, and that such right of occupancy is by the Act secured and preserved to the proprietor, who becomes by a transfer the ex-proprietor, whether he wishes it to be secured and preserved to him or not and notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary between him and the transferee. The policy of the Act is not to be defeated by any ingenious devices, arrangments or agreements between a vendor and a vendee for the relinquishment by the vendor or his sir land or land which he has cultivated continuously for twelve years at the date of the transfer, for a reduction of purchase money on the vendor's failing or refusing to relinquish such lands or for the vendor being liable to a suit for breach of contract on his failing or refusing to linquish such lands. All such devices arrangements, and agreements are in contravention of the policy of the Act and are contrary to law and are illegal and void, and cannot be enforced by the vendee in any Civil Court or in any Court of Revenue."

It is thus clear that Chaudhari Akbar Husain could not, even if he whished, have given up his ex-proprietary rights in favour of the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has argued that whatever may be the changed position of Chaudhary Akbar Husain, he is still in possession of his once sir plots, and as such, he is legally liable to pay the plaintiff the profits that accrue to him from the cultivation of his once sir land. There is no force in this contention. The benefit which Chaudhari Akbar Husain as an ex-proprietary tenant of his once sir plots in village Ghazipur, derives by having his ex-proprietary rent fixed at a favourable rate cannot be legally taken away from him. In my opinion the contention of the defendant appellant Chaudhari Akbar Husain that as he is no longer the proprietor of village Ghazipur, he is not liable to pay anything towards the maintenance allowance of the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam, is sound. The liability to pay the plaintiff's allowance arose in virtue of Chaudhari Akbar Husain being at that time the proprietor of village Ghazipur. The ownerships of Chaudhari Akbar Husain has now been extinguished by the auction sale in favour of Nawab Shenshah Begam, and the plaintiff can now only look to the defendant No. 2, Nawab Shenshah Begam, for the payment of the maintenance allowance granted to her by the will of Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain. With the extinction of the title of Chaudhuri Akbar Husain as properitors of village Ghazipur his liability to pay the maintenance allowance of Husain Jehan Begam also ceased.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent finding that he was on very insecure ground in his contention that defendant No. 1 should be made liable to pay the plaintiff her maintenance allowance, has argued that at any rate defendant No. 2, Nawab Shenshah Begam should be made to pay to the plaintiff the entire sum which the sub-tenants of the once sir plots paid to the landlord. There is no force in this contention either. The new proprietor Nawab Shenshah Begam is only liable to pay the entire ex-proprietary rent which she realises from new ex-proprietary tenant, namely, Chaudhuri Akbar Husain. The rent which the sub-tenants pay to the ex-proprietary tenant does not go into the pockets of the new zemindar. The difference between the rents paid by the sub-tenants to the ex-proprietary tenant and that paid by the ex-proprietary tenant to the zamindar is no doubt very great, but the plaintiff cannot under the terms of the will of Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain, get any share out of that amount. According to the terms of the will of Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain, only the profits accruing to the zamindar of village Ghazipur from these once sir plots are to be paid to her. Under the altered state of things the profits accuring to the new zamindar Nawab Shenshah Begam in respect of these plots are far less than what the former zamindar realised from these plots. This is, however, not due to any fault of Nawab Shenshah Begam, but is due to the creation of ex-proprietary rights in the once sir plots by operation of law, and the benefit which the ex-proprietary tenant gets by having ex-proprietary rights created in his once sir plots is a benefit which as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the ruling cited above, cannot be filched from him by any arrangement or device entered into by him or by any other person. No doubt, the plaintiff has a grievence that through no fault of hers her income from the profits of these once sir plots has been reduced from Rs. 300 a year to a little more than Rs. 130 a year, but that result has been brought about through no fault of the defendants, and the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam, like the new proprietor, Nawab Shenshah Begam, must submit to the creation of ex-proprietary rights in these sir plots by statute law.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the plaintiff's suit against defendant No. 1 Chaudhuri Akbar Husain ought to have been dismissed as was done by the learned Munsif of Lucknow. I entirely fail to understand the reasoning of the lower Appellate Court by which it has sought to make the ex-proprietary tenant liable for the maintenance allowance which under the will of Chaudhuri Muhammad Husain was only recoverable from the proprietor of village Ghazipur, and which, under the same will, was made a charge on that village.

I come next to discuss the appeal of the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam (No. 160 of 1933). The first contention urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, Husain Jehan Begam, is that she is entitled to the entire profits derived by defendant No. 1 from his once sir lands. This is an entirely mistaken view of the plaintiff. What she is entitled to recover is what the new zamindar Nawab Shenshah Begam realises from these once sir plots. The new zamindar, N. Shenshah Begam, only receives Rs. 134-8-5 a year from the new ex-proprietary tenant Chaudhuri Akbar Husain, and that amount the defendant No. 2 is quite willing to hand over to the plaintiff. Whatever profits are realised by defendant No. 1 from his sub-tenant cannot be touched by the plaintiff, because there is no privity of contract between Chaudhuri Akbar Husain, the ex-proprietary tenant, and the plaintiff.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has also argued that a personal decree should have been passed against Nawab. Shenshah Begam in respect of the amount decreed against her, and in support of this contention the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has cited a ruling reported in Har Narain Das v. Rup Kuar (3). In my opinion that ruling does not support the contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant. In fact it clearly holds that when an agreement, in the nature of a family settlement, makes provision for certain maintenance allowances, which should be paid out of the taluqa, that agreement does not create any personal liability on the holder of the estate, but create a charge upon the income of the estate. The plaintiff having got a decree against defendant No. 2 can, in execution of her decree attach and sell village Ghazipur for the realization of the amount.

The plaintiff has also in her memorandum of appeal urged that the lower Appellate Court ought to have allowed interest by way of damages to her. This plea was not seriously pressed before me, and in my opinion, there is no force in it. It was not even claimed in the lower Appellate Court.

As regards the contention that the lower Appellate Court erred in law in granting remission of rent in favour of the defendants, I find from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that no evidence was produced by the plaintiff to support her contention that any such remission of rent was granted to the ex-proprietary tenant. Remission of rent automatically follows the remission of revenue. This plea also was not seriously argued before me.

As regards the last plea taken in the memorandum of appeal, namely, that the lower Court ought to have held that the amount claimed was a charge on the entire village of Ghazipur, I am of opinion that this contention is correct. The will Ex. 1, itself clearly states that the maintenance allowance granted to the plaintiff Husain Jehan Begam will be a charge upon the entire village of Ghazipur, and I therefore, modify the order of the lower Appellate Court, and declare that if defendant No. 2, Nawab Shenshah Begam, fails to pay the amount decreed against her within three months from the date of the order of this Court, the plaintiff will be entitled to realise the sum by attachment and sale of the entire village of Ghazipur.

The result is that, with the slight modification noted above, I dismiss the appeal of the plaintiff with costs, and order that her suit against defendant No. 1 stand dismissed. The appeal of defendant No. 1 (Second Civil Appeal No. 146 of 1933) is allowed with costs, against plaintiff-respondent alone.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85—Open account, nature of—Mutual account, essentials of—Balance never standing in favour of defendant—Account, if mutual—Art. 85, if applies

An open account is one which is continuous or current, uninterrupted or unclosed by settlement or otherwise consisting of a series of transactions. An account current is an open or running account between two or more parties or an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is, or can be, ascertained. Such an account comes under the term of an open account, in so far as it is running, unsettled or unclosed. Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debits and credits. Ram Pershad v. Harbans Singh (1) and Hirada v. Gadigi (2), relied on.

Where the account between the parties was open and current, but there was no occasion when the balance stood in favour of the defendant, and it was clear from the nature of the dealings between the parties that there was no possibility of the balance standing in favour of the defendant:

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of remand and the appeal is directed to the decision by the Court below that the plaintiffs' claim with the exception of a small sum of Rs. 49-13-3 is barred by time. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that he had a firm of commission agents dealing in betel leaves at Mohoba in the District of Hamirpur, and that the defendant was a firm dealing in betel leaves in the city of Aligarh. The plaint went on to say that the defendant purchased betel leaves from the plaintiff's firm between November 17, 1926, to November 17, 1928, of the value of Rs. 10,095-1-9 and paid Rs. 9,426-7-6 up to November 16, 1928, and as such a balance of Rs. 668-10-3 was due to the plaintiff from the defendant under account. This sum together with interest was claimed in the plaint.

The lower Appellate Court has held that as the suit was instituted on August

10, 1931, the claim for the price of articles supplied before August 10, 1928, was barred by time. There were two other dates which were considered - one was November 16, 1928, when the defendant sent Rs. 50— to the plaintiff and the other was November 17, 1928, when the plaintiff sent betel leaves of the value of Rs. 49-13-3 to the defendant. The Court below held that the plaintiff :

"had the option to credit the sum of Rs. 50 the entire balance due on November 16, 1928" and, therefore, the sum of Rs. 49-13-3 the price of the goods supplied on November 17, 1928, was within time on the date of the institution of the suit. In the appeal before us it is contended that the plaintiffs' suit is not barred by time for any amount. The first submission is that this is a suit for the balance due on a mutual open and current account under Art. 85, Limitation Act, and, therefore, the time from which the period begins to run is the close of the year in which the last item admitted or proved is entered in the account. We have come to the conclusion that the account between the parties was neither, on the pleadings nor on the evidence produced by the plaintiff a mutual, open and current account. The facts are that the plaintiff supplied betel leaves to the defendant from time to time and the defendant paid the price thereof from time to time and this went on up till November 1928. Before November 1928 there were transactions up till May 1928, and, therefore, if the account was not mutual, open and current, the transactions that took place up till May, 1928, could not be considered in the present suit because they would be barred by time. In Ram Pershad v. Harbans Singh (1), Mukerji, J., says:

"Now it is well settled that an open account is one which is continuous or current, uninterrupted or unclosed by settlement or otherwise consisting of a series of transactions. An account current is an open or running account between two or more parties or an account which contains items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them is or, can be ascertained from which it follows that such an account comes under the term of an open account, in so far as it is running, unsettled or unclosed. Mutual accounts are such as consist of reciprocity of dealings between the parties and do not embrace those having items on one side only, though made up of debits and credits."

In support of these propositions the learned Judge referred to the judgment of Holloway, J., in Hirada v. Gadigi (2), where that learned Judge observed that:

"in order that accounts might be mutual, there must be transactions on each side, creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely transactions which create obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations."

We agree with the above observations. Applying the test laid down therein we have got to see whether the accounts between the parties can be said to be a mutual, open and current account. It may be conceded that it was an open and current account inasmuch as it had not been closed, but it cannot be said to be mutual. The plaintiff in his statement before the Court said that there never was an occasion when the balance stood in favour of the defendant and from the nature of the dealings it is clear that there never was a possibility of the balance standing in favour of the defendant. For all practical purposes the plaintiff purchased betel leaves on behalf of the defendant and sent them to the defendant. The defendant used to pay the price thereof from time to time to the plaintiff, and as mentioned before, the accounts never revealed that the defendant paid more than what was due to the plaintiff. Reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the appellant on the case of Din Dayal v. Pearey Lal (3). The facts of that case were entirely different. The plaintiffs there were commission agents and they after having obtained some margin money purchased and sold grain on behalf of the defendants with the result that on occasions the balance stood in favour of the defendants when the transaction resulted in a profit, and at others it stood against the defendants when the transaction resulted in a loss. At the time of the institution of the suit there was a great deal of loss and the plaintiffs, therefore, brought the suit for the recovery of that amount. It was held that the parties stood to each other in a dual relationship and there was a mutuality of dealings and that the suit was within time under Art. 85, Limitation Act. This case, therefore, does not help the plaintiff and we have no hesitation in holding that Art. 85, Limitation Act, does not apply to the present case.

It was then contended that Art. 83 was applicable but that relates to a contract to indemnify, and in the present case, there was no such contract between the parties nor can Art. 115 apply, for the present suit cannot be said to be a suit for compensation for the breach of any contract. It is a suit for the recovery of a certain sum of money due for articles supplied to the defendant. A lukewarm argument was advanced before us to the effect that Art. 52 would be applicable to the facts of this case, but it is clear that there was no fixed period of credit in the present case and that article has no application.

The main contention of the plaintiff was that the dealing between the parties was a continuous dealing and, therefore, there was only one cause of action which cannot be divided. Reliance in this connection was placed upon the case of Kedar Nath v. Dinabandhu Saha (4). The basis of the decision in this case was that the claim was not barred by limitation because of the application of the proviso to s. 20, Limitation Act. It was held that where a cheque is signed by the debtor and paid in part payment of the principal of a debt, the cheque being subsequently signed, the proviso to s. 20, Limitation Act, was complied with and the suit was within limitation. It was not necessary to decide anything further but their Lordships towards the end of their judgment relied upon the case of Bonsey v. Wordsworth (5), at p. 334* and they quoted the following passage from that judgment:

"Where a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item, if not paid, shall be united with another and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided."

The English case is not an authority for the proposition that for purposes of limitation, in the case of a continuous demand, the whole forms but one cause of action. The question there, was a question of jurisdiction, and it was held that in a case like this although a part of the cause of action might arise in a different place, for purposes of jurisdiction, the entire cause of action must be deemed to be one. We are not prepared to extend the principle contained therein to a question of limitation more especially when we find that we have got to decide the case on the basis of a legislation which was enacted in the year 1877 long after 1856. For the same reasons we are not prepared to follow the case of Najan Ahmed v. Salemahomed (6).

The case which is very similar to the acts of the present case is Abdul Aziz v. Muna Lal (7). It was held there that in the case of a tradesman's account for goods sold and delivered to the customer from time to time, in respect of each item, the liability to pay and the period of limitation commences on the date of the delivery of that particular item. In a suit by a tradesman for the price of goods sold and delivered from time to time, the customer having from time to time made payments without specifying any particular item for which the payments were made, the limitation was governed by Art. 51 in respect of each item as delivered. The plaintiff in a case like this is, of course entitled to appropriate the payments to the earlier items in the account but not to credit them to the entire balance due up to date in the sense of saving limitation for each and every item. This is what has been done by the lower Appellate Court in the present case. The item of Rs. 50 has been allowed to be credited towards earlier liabilities but the suit for the remaining balance has been held to be beyond time on the ground of limitation. There is no force in this appeal and is dismissed with costs.

The defendant has filed cross-objections regarding the sum of Rs. 50. We have held already that the Court below was right in allowing the plaintiff to appropriate this sum towards the earlier purchases. There was no specification by the defendant when he made this payment that it should be applied towards any particular debt and the plaintiff was therefore justified in appropriating it towards an earlier account. The mere fact that there is some similarity between the figure of Rs. 50, the amount paid by the defendant, and the figure of Rs. 49-13 3 the price of the goods supplied does not show in the absence of any other evidence that this sum had to be credited towards the purchase of November 17, 1928, and could not be appropriated towards Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 49, 17—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—Unregistered agreement of sale—Deed not operating as transfer of any interest in immovable property—Suit for specific performance—Document, admissibility of.

An unregistered agreement for sale of immovable property of value of more than one hundred rupees but not operating as a transfer of any interest in the property, can be used in evidence in an action for obtaining specific performance of the contract. Vyravan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (1), Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (2), R. R Skinner v. Robert Hercules Skinner (3), Ramling Parvattya Samble v. Bhagvant Sambhvappa Kathale (4) discussed.

S. C. A. against a decision of the District Judge, Saran, dated January 27, 1931.

Messrs. Khurshaid Husnain, Syed Ali Khan and J. C. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

Wort, J.—This case has been referred to a Division Bench for decision. The question which arises is whether an unregistered agreement for sale is admissible in evidence in an action for specific performance. The learned Judge in the Court below reversing the decision of the trial Court came to the conclusion that it was inadmissible in the plaintiff's suit.

In dealing with the matter two principal questions will have to be considered, one is the construction of the agreement itself and the other the provisions of the Registration Act, ss. 17 and 49. Under s. 17, Registration Act, certain documents are required to be registered amongst which will be the agreement before us if it is to be construed as a conveyance in contradistinction to a mere agreement for sale of the property concerned. One of the exceptions to the requirements, which I have mentioned is found in sub-s. (2), cl. (v) which provides:

"Any document not itself creating, declaring, assigning, limiting or extinguishing any right, title or interest, etc., but merely creating a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any such right, title, or interest."

Section 49 as is well-known provides that a document which is required to be registered under s. 17 shall not:

"affect any immovable property and shall not be received in evidence if it is unregistered."

By the proviso enacted by Act XXI of 1929 an unregistered document affecting immovable property required by the Act or the Transfer of Property Act to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance. One of the questions which might have arisen in this case, had the view which I hold not been different, would have been whether the proviso which I have just read is to be considered as retrospective. The agreement which was dated February 15, 1928, after certain recitals states:

'And also with the advice of and in consultation with my well-wishers fixed the price for the absolute sale of 11 kathas and 16 dhurs of bakasht land as per details given below lying in Mauza Musahri, etc."

It then states the price and adds:

"On receipt of Rs. 300 in cash in one instalment in one lump sum from the hand and asset of Abdul Latif Mian, etc. I do execute this deed of contract and make a trustworthy declaration that I shall, within three months, execute and get registered a deed of sale in respect of the land entered in this deed of contract."

There is nothing in the agreement which would in any way modify or affect the provision which I have just read, namely, that the vendor undertook that within three months he should get registered a deed of sale, and it is not seriously disputed that the agreement comes within the exception provided by sub-s. (2), cl. (5), s. 17, Registration Act. But it is by reason of some of the final clauses in the agreement that it is argued that the agreement requir-ed registration as "effecting" immovable property. The provision referred to is to this effect:

"I, the declarant, mortgaged, hypothecated and pledged the land entered in this deed of contract, so that should I execute any deed of any kind whatsoever, deed of sale, rehan, etc, in respect of the land entered in the deed of contract, the same shall be treated as null and void and inoperative. I therefore give these few words in writing, etc"

It is contended by the respondent that these clauses affect the immovable property either as a charge or mortgage. The learned Judge in the trial Court treated this clause as collateral and in fact redundant, to use his words. It seems to me quite clear, although the construction of that clause is not without considerable difficulty, that it can be treated as a charge in respect of the earnest money which was paid on account by the purchaser, as is contended by the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondent. It clearly does not come within the definition of "charge" given in s. 100, Transfer of Property Act, and it seems to be very clear that it cannot be construed as a mortgage although that word is used in one of the clauses to which I have referred. It is a matter of considerable difficulty to place a grammatical construction upon the clauses, but, after careful consideration it seems to me to be reasonably clear that what the vendor intended was to enter into a covenant similar to a covenant which is usually found in deeds of this kind against incumbering or selling the land, after having once sold it to the purchaser under the agreement.

Mr. Khurshaid Husnain, who appears on behalf of the appellant, relied upon a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Vyravan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti, (1). Reliance has been placed upon this authority on the assumption that the argument of the learned Advocate who appears on behalf of the respondent is well founded that the clauses to which I have just referred in fact in law "affect" immovable property. The matter under consideration in the case before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee: Vyravan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (1), was an agreement by a mortgagee of a certain property. One clause in particular had to be construed and Lord Bukmaster in delivering the opinion of the Judicial Committee made these observations:

"The clause is open to two interpretations. It may be that the provision that the rights, both prior and subsequent, should stand on the footing of equality, is explained and limited by the following words, which state that the amounts of realization shall be divided and appropriated in equal halves, or it may mean that two separate and distinct results are effected by the clause first, that the rights should stand on a footing of equality; and, secondly, that the proceeds should be equally divided. Whichever interpretation is taken there is no objection to the lack of registration in such proceedings as those out of which this appeal has arisen, for, if the whole effect of the agreement is to provide merely that the realized money is to be divided in equal shares then there is nothing in this agreement which requires to be registered, and if, on the other hand, there are two distinct provisions, the one relating to rights of property and the other with regard to the division of the realization of moneys then, as these proceedings relate merely to the question of the realized money, it need not be registered for the purpose of being given in evidence in this suit:"

in other words, their Lordships construed the separate clauses assuming that they were separate clauses dealing with separate rights, and that in enforcing the one to which the Registration Act did not apply, the document by which these rights were affected was admissible in evidence.

It is said, therefore, that that part of the contract which was merely an agreement for sale of the property was an undertaking to execute and register a deed of sale and consequently that part is admissible in evidence in this suit for specific performance. The respondent, however, relies on the case of Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (2). In that case the appeal arose out of an action for specific performance. An agreement for sale of the property was before their Lordships for consideration and the question which was raised, was, whether the agreement was in effect a conveyance of property or whether it was a mere contract coming within the exception in s. 17, Registration Act, sub-s. (2), cl. (5) and their Lordships expressed their opinion in these words:

"They will assume without deciding that taking the terms of the Act of 1877 alone the judgments of the Courts below were right in holding that the present agreement was an agreement to sell and not a sale, and was consequently exempted under s. 17, sub-s. (2), cl. (v) which corresponds with s. 17 (h) of 1877."

But they went on to say that a point had escaped the attention of the Courts below. They referred to s. 55, Transfer of Property Act, and went on to hold that by reason of that section the lien which was created affected immovable property and therefore did not allow of the application of s. 17, sub-s. (2), cl. (5). It is difficult to understand the decision of their Lordships after a consideration of s. 55, Transfer of Property Act, which on its very words apply only to those cases in which the ownership of the property had passed to the purchaser, and if, as their Lordships assumed, the agreement came within the exception in s. 17, Registration Act, then it was an agreement under which the ownership of the property had not passed to the purchaser and therefore could not come under s. 55, Transfer of Property Act. The effect of this decision, however, has been dealt with by s. 2, Registration (Amendment) Act, II of 1927, which is to the effect that:

"A document purporting or operating to effect a contract for the sale of immovable property shall not be deemed to require or ever to have required registration by reason only of the fact that such document contains a recital of the payment of any earnest money or of the whole or any part of the purchase money."

It was by reason of the fact that a part of the purchase money had been paid in Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (2), that their Lordships held that the lien arose by the operation of s. 55, Transfer of Property Act. The explanation which has been added is clearly retrospective, but equally clearly does not deal with those contracts in which a lien has been specially created as the words of the explanation are:

"by reason only of the fact that such document contains a recital of the payment of any earnest money."

Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (2), therefore, will still be an authority for the contention that a specific charge created would affect immovable property within the meaning of s. 49, Registration Act. But as I have said the answer to the appellant to this is the case of Vyravan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (1).

There is a further decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of R. R. Skinner v. Robert Hercular Skinner (3). Reliance was placed upon this case by the respondent. There again it was an action for specific performance and in construing the agreement their Lordships came to the conclusion that it was an instrument which affected immovable property and, therefore, was registrable and could not be received in evidence. Particular reliance has been placed upon the observations made towards the end of the judgment which was delivered by Sir George Lowndes, the words are these:

"In the present case the document under consideration in addition to creating an interest in the immovable property concerned provides as one of the terms and, therefore, as an integral part of the transfer, that the vendor should, if the vendee so requires, execute a registered sale deed, and it is contended for respondent No. 1, that, notwithstanding the non-registration he can sue upon this agreement putting the document in evidence as proof of it. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this is within the prohibition of the section. They think that an agreement for the sale of immovable property is a transaction "affecting" the property within the meaning of the section inasmuch as if carried out it will bring about a change of ownership."

Then reference is made to the exception in s. 17, Registration Act and then is added.

"In the face of this provision to allow a document which does itself create such an interest to be used as the foundation of a suit for specific performance appears to their Lordships to be little more than an evasion of the Act."

The words which are particularly relied upon as I have said are:

"They think that an agreement for the sale of immovable property is a transaction affecting the property within the meaning of the section."

In my judgment it cannot be supposed that their Lordships meant that any contract or any agreement for sale of immovable property whether another document which was to be executed or not and which would convey the property to the purchaser was intended. The statement of Sir George Lowndes has to be read in conjunction with the reference made a moment later to the exception under s. 17 and in any event as their Lordships came to the conclusion that the contract was in fact a conveyance to transfer the ownership of the property to the purchaser, the case could not have come within cl. (5), sub-s. (2), s. 17. In my opinion the case of R. R. Skinner v. Robert Hercules Skinner (3) does not stand in the way of the plaintiff-appellant in this case.

There does appear to be some conflict if I may say so with respect to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council between Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (2), and the case in Vyravan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (1). But the matter before us can be disposed of on the consideration which I have already expressed that is to say that the agreement before us is an agreement coming within the exception to s. 17, Registration Act, and the clause at the end of the agreement which I have construed as a covenant not to incumber the property in no way modifies that decision.

In my judgment, therefore, this document coming as it does within the exception to s. 17 was admissible in evidence and the decision of the learned District Judge on this point was, therefore, wrong. I would allow the appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge, and restore the judgment of the trial Court. The appellant is entitled to his costs throughout. The cross-objection is dismissed.

Dhavle, J.—I agree. If upon a true construction of the deed upon which specific performance is sought we find that it does not operate as a transfer of any interest in the property there is nothing in the law to prevent its being used in evidence for obtaining specific performance. The deed purports to be an argeement for sale. It recites the receipt of some part of the consideration but the Explanation added to s. 17, Registration Act shows that such recital does not affect the non-liability to registration of a mere agreement for sale within s. 17, sub-s. (2), cl. (5), Registration Act. The view of the learned District Judge that the document also created a mortgage of immovable property for the sum paid as earnest money seems entirely untenable. The clause which makes the property "makful wo mahbub wo mustagarak" (words importing hypothecation of almost every conceivable kind) not only does not show what was taken or intended to be put into the deed as the debt secured but shows its true character by the concluding portion:

"so that should I execute any deed of any kind whatsoever, deed of sale, rehan, etc., the same shall be treated as null and void and inoperative"

The clause that immediately precedes this clause does not refer to the earnest money but it does refer to the recovery of the costs that the intending purchaser might be put to in the event of the agreement for sale not being carried out and yet it is not the case of the respondent that the document was intended to be used as a mortgage deed in respect of this possible liability. Why then the mortgage should be taken to refer to the earnest money, the receipt of which is recited several sentences earlier, the learned Advocate for the respondent has not been able to explain. In my opinion, the clause was neither intended to operate nor does it actually operate as a mortgage at all: the document is really no more than what it professes to be—a moahdanama or deed of agreement for sale—and the clause was merely intended to operate as a covenant against encumbering or selling the property to another. As regards the observation in R. R. Skinner v. Robert Hercules Skinner (3), that:

"as agreement for the sale of immovable property is a transaction 'affecting' the property within the meaning of the section inasmuch as if carried out, will bring about a change of ownership."

the deed in the case before their Lordships was found by them to purport to transfer George Skinner's interest in the immovable properties, and the observation in question must be read consistently with their Lordships' later observation that "they have the satisfaction of knowing that the principls which has been enunciated above is in accordance with recent decisions in most of the High Courts" among which they mention Ramling Parvattya Samble v. Bhagvant Sambhvappa Kathale (4). This was a case in which it was held that a document which was an agreement to convey and created no interest in the property agreed to be sold was not compulsorily registrable under s. 17, sub-s. (2), cl. (5), Registration Act.

The document in question, therefore, did not require registration at all. Assuming, however, that on another construction of the clause which creates a mortgage or charge, the document did require registration, there is the further contention of Mr. Khurshaid Husnain that in the present suit the deed was not put in to enforce any charge or mortgage and that there was nothing to prevent the plaintiff from using the other part of the document which purports to be a mere agreement for sale. In support of this contention he has cited definite authority in the decision of Vyravan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (1). The view of the learned District Judge, that the document was inadmissible in evidence and that, therefore, no specific performance could be decreed must, therefore, be overruled.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—A bringing suit for possession of his share against some members—B and C made co-defendants—B and C supporting A's claim—A's claim dismissed as time-barred—Subsequent suit by B and C against same members for partition of same property—Held, res judicata applied—Appeal — High Court whether can base its decision upon ground different from that given by trial Court—Hindu Law—Joint family —Parties are tenants-in-common—No adverse possession unless there is ouster.

A suit was brought by A in 1913 against his three step-brothers for a share in a house which was in their possession. A's two nephews, B and C were made co-defendants. The plaint averred that there was a separation of the joint family by virtue of an agreement in 1878, though not by metes and bounds and since then the step-brothers were in exclusive possession of the property. A's case was supported by B and C who also asked the Court to ascertain their respective shares in the house. The High Court, on appeal, against the dismissal of the claim by the trial Court on the ground that it was time-barred and that the step-brothers were in adverse possession, found on evidence that there was aseparation of the family members in 1878, and dismissed the claim as time-barred. In 1925 B and C brought a suit against their step-uncles for a share by partition in the same house alleging that it was joint ancestral property:

Held, that B and C were bound by the decision in the former suit and consequently the second suit was barred by res judicata.

[Case-law referred to.]

It is open to the High Court in appeal to base its decision upon a ground different from that given by the trial Court, provided there is sufficient evidence on the record from which a finding could be arrived at. [p. 54, col. 2.]

Where the family is joint and there is no division the parties are tenants-in-common and there is no adverse possession of one co-tenant against another unless there is a clear ouster, in other words, demand and refusal. [p. 56, col. 1.]

Divatia, J.—This appeal is filed by the original defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in a suit by the plaintiffs to recover by partition possession of their one-fifth share in a house at Poona. The plaintiffs are the sons of one Chintaman who died in 1907, and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the step-brothers of Chintaman. One Bhikaji was also a brother of Chintaman, and both Bhikaji and Chintaman were the sons by the first wife of Ramchandra while defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were the sons by his second wife. Ramchandra died in 1902 and Bhikaji is also dead. The plaintiffs' case was that all the sons of Ramchandra were members of a joint Hindu family, and the suit house along with the other property situated at Sangli formed the joint family property, that after Ramchandra's death, the plaintiff's father lived at Miraj and that he used to come off and on to Poona where Ramchandra lived with his sons. The faimly property at Sangli being in a Native State was not included by the plaintiffs in the suit here. The case of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was that there was a separation of the members of the family in 1878 and that since then different members of the family were separately enjoying different properties; that Bhikaji and Chintaman got for their share a certain cash allowance and a house at Sangli, while Ramchandra and defendant No. 1 (defendants No. 2 and 3 being born later) were in possession of the suit house at Poona and certain shops and fields at Sangli. These defendants further contended that the suit was barred by res judicata inasmuch as the plaintiffs' uncle Bhikaji had filed a partition suit in 1913 in which the present defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and the present plaintiffs were defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and that in that litigation it was held ultimately by the High Court that there was separation of the family members in 1878, and that the branch represented by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was in exclusive possession of the suit house since then. The defendants contended that the present suit was therefore barred by res judicata as the present plaintiffs were parties to that suit. On the merits it was contended that the plaintiffs were not in possession of the suit house at any time after 1878 and that they had lost their right to possession.

The lower Court has held that the present suit is not barred by res judicata, and that the present plaintiffs were not excluded from the enjoyment of the suit house inasmuch as the plaintiffs' father and after his death the plaintiffs were in receipt of a part of the income of the suit house. It therefore held that the plaintiffs were entitled to get their share in the property, and passed a decree in their favour for partition. The defendants have appealed against the decree, and two questions arise for decision in this appeal, firstly, whether the present suit is barred by res judicata by the decree in the former suit of 1913 and secondly, whether the defendants are in exclusive and adverse possession of the suit property as against the plaintiffs.

Taking the question of res judicata first, the suit of 1913 was filed by Bhikaji on the allegation that Bhikaji and the present plaintiffs' father Chintaman lived separate from the rest of the family, but that the estate was joint, that the deceased Ramchandra had made a will disposing of the suit house in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, but that the said will was invalid as the property was ancestral and not the self-acquired property of Ramchandra, and that therefore he was entitled to a partition of his one-fourth share in the property. The case for defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in that suit was that neither Bhikaji nor defendants Nos. 4 and 5, i. e., the present plaintiffs, had any connection with the suit property which was the same as the present suit property, that both Bhikaji and Chintaman had become separate, that the branch of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was in exclusive possession of the suit house; and that the suit was barred by limitation. With regard to the will their case was that the house was the self-acquired property of Ramchandra, and that therefore he had full power to make the will. The present plaintiffs also had put in their written statements in that suit and they had therein supported the case of Bhikaji and had stated that their father Chintaman along with Bhikaji began to live separately from the deceased Ramchandra about 30 years ago, but that the property was joint and that the same should be divided and their share also should be handed over to them on their paying the court-fee stamp. They had further contended that they had received Rs. 25 per month from defendants Nos. 1 to 3 out of the income of the suit house. With regard to the will their case was the same as that of Bhikaji, namely that the property being ancestral and not self-acquired, Ramchandra had no power to make a will in respect of it.

Several issues were framed in the case of which the material issues were whether the plaint property was the self-acquired property of Ramchandra, whether the will was binding on the then plaintiff Bhikaji, and whether he as well as defendants Nos. 4 5, i. e., the present plaintiffs, were entitled to a share by partition in that suit. Two further issues were added subsequently, namely, under what circumstances did Bhikaji begin to live separately in 1878, and was there a division of the family then? The trial Court had disposed of the suit on the ground of limitation only, and having held that the then plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation, it did not consider any of the other issues. The reasons given by the trial Court were that Bhikaji's case as stated in the plaint was that he was a divided member of the family since 1878, and that any idea of the continuance of the joint family was wholly negatived by his own pleading, and that although if the plaintiff had framed an ordinary suit for partition, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 would have practically no defence, still as the plaintiff himself had admitted that he had become separate from 1878, he had lost his share in the property by the adverse possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

Against that decree dismissing Bhikaji's suit, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had filed an appeal to this Court, being First Appeal No. 313 of 1916. To that appeal the present plaintiffs were also parties and were separately represented by their Advocate. In the course of arguments in that appeal it was admitted on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 that the suit house was not the self-acquired property of Ramchandra as recited in the will but that it became their property by partition upon the separation of the two branches of Ramchandra's family, and that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were in exclusive possession thereof ever since 1878. After hearing the arguments of all the parties this Court made a finding on the evidence that there was a partition upon the separation of the two branches of Ramchandra's family in 1878, and that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and Ramchandra were together in exclusive possession of the suit house and shops and fields at Sangli thereafter for nearly thirty-six years, while Bhikaji and the present plaintiffs' father were admittedly in exclusive possession of the family house at Sangli. As stated above, the trial Court had made no finding on the issue as to whether there was a partition in 1878. This Court, however, based its decision not so much on the finding of exclusion as on the finding that there was a partition in the family in 1878. It appears that Bhikaji had filed an application for review of this decision and also an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the dismissal of his appeal. The review application was dismissed and so also was the application for leave, and while disposing of the latter application this Court remarked as follows;

"The conclusion reached by this Court is based upon the statement made by the plaintiff in the plaint and the evidence in the case; and the conclusion reached is one of fact based upon evidence. Though in form it may appear to be a question of law as it is a point of limitation, it really depends upon the facts found by this Court on the evidence."

Now, the lower Court is of opinion that this decision in the previous suit does not operate as res judicata in the present suit inasmuch as the present plaintiffs and defendants No. 1 to 3 were co-defendants in that suit, and the former being only pro forma defendants, there was no matter directly and substantially in issue between them and defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and in the adjudication upon the dispute in that suit between Bhikaji and the present defendants Nos. 1 to 3, it was not necessary to determine the dispute beween the present plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3. It was further stated that the present plaintiffs, as defendants Nos. 4 and 5, could not have appealed against the decree dismissing Bhikaji's suit as well as the appeal in the High Court, and that therefore they would not be barred by res judicata. This view has been challenged in appeal before us and it is contended on behalf of the appellants that the present plaintiffs were not simply pro forma defendants in the previous suit, but that they had actively taken part in that suit by siding with the then plaintiff and also by demanding their share in the suit property which defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had denied, and an express issue was also framed as to whether they were entitled to any partition. It is conceded on behalf of the appellants that the trial Court in the former suit did not make any finding adverse to the present plaintiffs, but the High Court based its conclusion on the evidence in the case and held that there was a previous partition and that finding was binding on all the parties in that suit including the present plaintiffs, and although the appeal could have been disposed of on the ground of the then plaintiff being excluded from the enjoyment of the family property, as this Court did enter into the other evidence and did make a finding adverse to Bhikaji as well as the present plaintiffs, it was a decision binding against both, although the decree of the lower Court was confirmed on grounds which were different from those given by the trial Court. For the plaintiffs-respondents it has been contended that there was no conflict between the defendants inter se in that suit, that in order to decide the dispute between the then plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in that suit it was not necessary to decide the conflict between the defendants inter se even if a conflict existed, and that, thirdly, the alleged conflict is also not decided in the former suit.

Now, the principles governing the operation of res judicata between co-defendants have been recently laid down by the Privy Council in three cases Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath (1), Kishun Prasad Pandey v. Durga Prasad Thakur (2) and Maung Sein Done v. Ma Pan Nyun (3). A number of authorities have been referred to by the learned Counsel on both sides. It is not necessary to refer to all of them as the decision of the Privy Council in the latest case of Maung Sein Done v. Ma Pan Nyun (3) lays down the real test that has to be applied to this case. In that case the question between the parties was whether sons alone inherited the suit property under the Chinese Customary Law, or whether the daughters were also entitled to a share under the Burmese Buddhist Law. One of the daughters had filed a suit against her two brothers and her sister was made a co-defendant with them. The sons disputed the plaintiff's claim relying upon the Chinese Customary Law, and the plaintiff's sister, as defendant, did not file any written statement but gave evidence supporting the plaintiff's case. The trial Court held that the inheritance was governed by the Chinese Customary Law, and therefore dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the High Court at Rangoon confirmed that decree on the same grounds. Subsequently the daughter of the plaintiff's sister, who was a defendant in that suit and had supported the plaintiff's claim which had failed, filed a suit against the two sons, who were defendants in the former case, as well as the plaintiff in the former suit, and the plaint in the second suit was substantially the same as the plaint in the former suit. The sons pleaded res judicata and the trial Court negatived that contention. On appeal, the High Court also held that there was no bar of res judicata as there was no active contest as to the rights and no decision thereon as between the mother of the plaintiff in the second suit and her co-defendants in the former suit. On appeal, the Privy Council held that the bar of res judicata did apply inasmuch as the three tests which were laid down in the earlier case of Munni Bibi v. Tiloki Nath (1) for the operation of res judicata between co-defendants were fulfilled in that case. The reasons were that there was in the former suit a conflict of interest between co-defendants, i. e., between the mother of the plaintiff in the second case and her brothers, that that conflict would necessarily have to be decided in order to give the plaintiff in the first case the relief which she claimed and that the question between the defendants inter se in the first suit, namely, as to whether the mother of the plaintiff in the second suit was entitled to any share in the estate, was finally decided. It was contended there on behalf of the respondents that as no relief had been given to the plaintiff in the first suit, the doctrine of res judicata did not apply as between the co-defendants. But that contention was not accepted and it was held that in the first suit, which was an administration suit, the mother of the plaintiff in the second suit was a necessary party, and there had necessarily to be an adjudication upon the issues involved before the suit could have been dismissed, and that it was none the less an adjudication because its consequence was the dismissal of the suit. On these grounds it was held that the second suit was barred by res judicata and the decision of the Rangoon High Court was reversed and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

There is a certain amount of similarity between the facts of the present case and the facts of the Rangoon case. Here also it was a suit for partition of the family estate and the present plaintiffs were necessary parties to the first suit. Not only that, but they also asked for their share being divided and handed over to them. There also the plaintiff's suit was dismissed as here. The respondents contend, however, that there is one important distinction between the present case and that case, viz., that while in the latter case the actual point of conflict between the co-defendants, namely, as to whether the parties were governed by the Chinese Law or the Buddhist Law, was decided, here the trial Court did not decide the point of conflict between the parties, namely, the existence of the partition in 1878, and that although the High Court in appeal made a finding on this point, that finding was not necessary for the disposal of the then appellant's appeal, because if that appeal could be disposed of on the ground of limitation as was done by the trial Court, it was not necessary for the High Court to go into the question as to whether there was a partition in 1878 or not, and that therefore any remarks about partition were obiter and would not be binding against the present plaintiffs who were respondents in the appeal.

Now, as to the decision in the former proceedings it is clear that where there has been an appeal against the original decree, it is the decision in the appeal and not the decision in the trial Court that operates as res judicata. The decision of the High Court here, as I have said, was that there was a partition, and that also there was exclusion presumably because of partition. It cannot be said that the decision in the appeal as to the existence of a partition in 1878 was merely an expression of opinion and not a decision. It is expressly stated as a decision arrived at on the evidence in the case and the appeal is decided on this finding itself. It is no doubt stated there that both the branches were in exclusive possession of the property which they got in 1878, but the decision does not turn on the point of limitation but on the fact of the partition, and the exclusive possession was such because of the partition and not because of family convenience. It was open to the High Court in appeal to base its decision upon a ground different from that given by the trial Court, provided there was sufficient evidence on the record from which a finding could be arrived at: Not only was there an issue on the point, but in the opinion of this Court there was sufficient evidence to justify a finding based upon it. That being so, the finding of the High Court on the issue as to whether there was a partition or not cannot be regarded as a mere obiter or a mere expression of opinion, but it was made the very ground of the decision.

That such a finding based on evidence on a different ground from that given by the lower Court would operate as res judicata derives support from a decision of the Privy Council in Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4). What happend there was that a Hindu widow brought a suit to set aside an adoption of a son by her on the ground that she had no authority from her husband to adopt. It was held by the trial Court and the High Court, the decision of which is reported in Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (5), that the widow was estopped from disputing the adoption and that, therefore, her suit failed on that ground. She appealed to the Privy Council, and in appeal the decision of which is reported in Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (6), their Lordships of the Privy Council, though agreeing with the lower Court that the mother was estopped from alleging want of authority, proceeded to state that the question could well be decided as one of fact on the mother's own statement without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel, and it was held that although the estoppel was purely personal to the mother, the evidence showed that she had authority from her husband to adopt the son, and that on that ground also her suit failed. Subsequently, after the death of the widow, a suit was brought by a person as the next reversioner of her husband against the son for possession of the estate on the ground that the adoption was invalid as the widow had no authority to adopt. One of the defences raised to that suit was that it was barred by res judicata on account of the decision in the previous suit decided against the widow which would bind the revisioner also.

The trial Court held that the suit was so barred, and on appeal to the High Court, which was heard by three Judges the majority confirmed that decision: Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (7). The majority decision was that in the first suit their Lordships of the Privy Council preferred to decide the question of the authority of the mother and the validity of the adoption as one of fact even without regard to the doctrine of estoppel and that that decision was a final decision of the dispute between the parties disposing of that litigation both on the point of estoppel as well as on the merits. Against this decision there was again an appeal to the Privy Council, and the decision of that appeal is reported in Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4). Their Lordships confirmed the majority decision of the High Court and held that in the previous suit the Board did intend to decide the question of authority to adopt as a question of fact and in fact decided that point as there was ample material on the evidence upon which that point could be dicided and that decision did operate as res judicata against the reversioners also.

The principle of this decision, to my mind, applies to the facts of the present case. Here also the High Court in the previous litigation heard arguments as to the question of the alleged partition in 1878, and from the evidence on the record did arrive at the finding. The fact that in the present case the doctrine of res judicata is sought to be applied to co-defendants, whereas in the case of Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4) the contention was not between co-defendants, does not, in my opinion, affect the principle, because this is a partition suit and the present plaintiffs themselves as defendants had asked for their share in the partition, and they had also put in issue the question as to whether they were entitled to a specific share in the property. Their case also along with the case of the then plaintiff was that there was no partition in 1878. Therefore, they were in the High Court appeal in the same position as was the appellant so far as the claim against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was concerned. The learned Counsel for the respondents has relied upon the case of Ashidbai v. Abdulla (8) but that case would not apply here as the former case was decided by the High Court not on any preliminary ground but on the merits. Similarly, the case of Habibbhoy v. Dinshaw M. Petit 3 Ind. Cas. 124 (9) would not also apply as in that case the finding that was sought to be used as res judicata was a clear obiter and not necessary for the purpose of the decision of that case. For these reasons I am of opinion that the present suit is barred by res judicata on account of the decision in the previous suit.

That being so, the other question in the case, namely as to whether the plaintiffs were excluded from the enjoyment of the suit property or its income and that, therefore, defendants Nos 1 to 3 were in adverse possession as against them, would not arise for decision. However, I may state that, in my opinion, the decision of the lower Court on that point is correct. On the evidence it clearly appears that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 made payments out of the income of the suit property to the present plaintiffs' family from 1904 to 1919. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 say that this payment was made because of the directions in the will and it was made under the erroneous belief that the plaintiffs were entitled to it. But no such provision in the will is pointed out, and if the payment is made whether under an erroneous or a correct belief that the plaintiffs were entitled to it, it would not affect the question of adverse possession. The learned Counsel for the appellants has contended that in any case no such payment has been proved from 1878 to 1904, and that therefore, before 1904 the adverse possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had already been complete and so could not be affected by the payment made after 1904. But that, to my mind, is not the correct position. If the family is joint and there was no division in 1878, the parties are tenants-in-common, and there is no adverse possession of one co-tenant against another unless there is a clear ouster in other words, demand and refusal. There is nothing to show on the evidence that between 1878 and 1904 there was any demand made by the plaintiffs' branch and refusal by the appellant's branch, and, therefore, unless there has been an express refusal of the plaintiff's rights, adverse possession would not begin to run. On the contrary, far from any denial of the plaintiffs' rights, there have been regular payments from 1904 to 1919. Therefore, if there was no partition, the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed. In fact, even with regard to Bhikaji, the trial Court had in the previous suit remarked that if Bhikaji had framed an ordinary suit for partition of a Hindu family, the defendants, i. e., the present defendants Nos. 1 to 3, would have had practically no defence to offer. The plaintiffs are in a still better position than Bhikaji because while there was no payment made to Bhikaji, the plaintiffs have received the income at least from 1904. But as the appellants succeed on the point of res judicata, the result of this appeal is that the decree of the lower Court is reversed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Murphy, J.—One Ramchandra Narhar Bhide, who died in Poona in 1902, left him surviving five sons, named Bhikaji, Chintaman, Yeshvant, Narhar and Narayan. The first two were by his first wife, and the other three by his second wife. Ramchandra himself had been adopted into the Bhide family, and was employed at Sangli. He inherited a house in Poona, an hereditary office in Sangli State, a share in a jagir village and a house and some land in Sangli. The Poona house was heavily encumbered; Ramchandra served the Sangli State for some years and retired to Poona in 1878 with his wife and her eldest son, the two younger being born later. Bhikaji and Chintaman, the two eldest sons, sought service, Bhikaji taking the hereditary office in Sangli and rising to a high place while Chintaman got an appointment in Miraj. After Ramchandra's death in 1902 and Chintaman's in 1907, Bhikaji brought a suit in the Poona Court against his surviving half-brothers, defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and his nephews, the sons of Chintaman (defendants No. 4 and 5), now plaintiffs, praying for partition of the Poona property. The plaint and the theory on which it proceeded were ingenious. His case was that there had been a family arrangement in 1878 when he and Chintaman had gone to Sangli and Miraj, respectively, for a separation or partition though not by metes and bounds. He claimed a share in the Poona house on the basis of the state of the family in 1878, thus excluding defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who had not then been born. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case did not come to findings on any issue except that of limitation holding that on the pleadings the suit must be time-barred. The present plaintiffs then defendants Nos. 4 and 5 supported the then plaintiff Bhikaji, and asked that their share (one-fourth) should be given to them. There was an appeal to the High Court which also dismissed Bhikaji's suit. Attempts to carry the litigation further failed.

The principal question now is whether, plaintiffs, then defendants Nos. 4 and 5 can be suffered again to raise the claim made by Bhikaji in 1913. The High Court's judgment of 1919 was delivered by Hayward, J. As I read it the learned Judges were somewhat embarrassed by the learned First Class Subordinate Judge's judgment which dealt only with the inconsistency of the claim then made involving a partition in 1878 and a still subsisting right to partition in the ancestral property in 1913 which could hardly be. The judgment said that it was necessary to state the facts as this had not been done in the learned First Class Subordinate Judge's judgment and did so. It then said that on these facts it looked as though there was a family understanding in 1878 by which Ramchandra with defendant No. 1 of his younger family had seperated and taken as their share the family house in Poona and the shops and fields at Sangli, while plaintiff and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 got the Sangli office and house. In then discussed plaintiff's own attitude as disclosed in his pleadings, the abandonment of the position stated in Ramchandra's will and ended with the following statement.

"It, therefore, seems to me that the finding on the facts ought to be that there was a partition on separation of the two families of Ramchandra in 1878 and that defendants Nos 1, 2 and 3 and Ramchandra were together in exclusive possession thereafter for 36 years of the family house at Poona, while the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were admittedly in exclusive possession of the family house at Sangli. If that is so then a correct conclusion was arrived at by the First Class Subordinate Judge and this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs."

As I read the judgment their Lordships thought that there should have been a finding on the question of fact and so, as they were entitled to do they went into the evidence and found on it as the basis of their conclusion on the point of limitation. On these facts the learned Subordinate Judge has decided that the question between the present plaintiffs and defendants is not res judicata his chief reasons being that plaintiffs had been no more than pro forma defendants in the first suit that they had not fought the matter out that there was no issue between them and the then as now, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, that they could not have appealed and that the former decision did not decide their rights. There is no doubt that had the present plaintiffs been ranged with the plaintiff in the former suit, they could not now be heard on this claim and the point of law arises because they were then ranged on the other side, although their interests were the same as the then plaintiffs.

Appellant's learned Counsel has relied on a series of cases to show that in law their former position makes no difference since the point decided in the former suit between the then plaintiff and the then defendants No. 1, 2 and 3 was also really decided between the then two groups of defendants inter se and cannot, therefore, again be agitated between them. The main argument has been that the first suit having been a general one for partition although the first Court held only on the pleadings that it was time-barred, the High Court went into the evidence and held on the facts that there had already been a family partition and that there could not, therefore, be a fresh one. The further argument has been that being ranged as defendants-plaintiffs need not then have brought this question in issue but in fact did so and that they could have appealed from the decree as being aggrieved by it, but did not though they were parties to the appeal. It has been suggested that the learned trial Judge missed the fact that the former suit had been one for a general partition and applied the general law whereas in a partition suit each party is a claiming party. To support his contentions Mr. Jayakar has relied on the following cases.

Assan v. Pathumma (10). The pertinent remarks in this case are that the reciprocal character of the parties in a partition suit makes the cause of action the same from either side: Natwarlal v. Sassoon & Co. (11). It was held that in a partition suit the plaintiff cannot withdraw without the consent of the defendants and these can apply to be traversed to the other side: Nalini Kanta Lahiri v. Surnamoyi Debya (12). The decision was that where in a partition suit partition has been allowed, and one of the parties afterwards alleges that there has been a mistake, his remedy lies in that and not in a separate suit. Shivmurtappa v. Virappa (13) deciding that a suit for a partial partition does not lie Ejaz Ahmad v. Saghir Bano (14). The ratio decidendi was that where it is necessary for giving relief to decide between two co-defendants such a decision is binding on the co-defendants—the relevance in this case being that before the point of limitation could be decided, it was necessary to find whether a partition had already taken place or not: Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath (1). The case lays down that s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, is not exhaustive and that when (i) there is a conflict between co-defendants, and (ii) it was necessary to decide it to give the plaintiff relief and (iii) the question was finally decided, the decision operates as res judicata between co-defendants. He next cited three cases to show that a Court has to look to the judgment as well as the decree to determine a question of res judicata. These cases are: Magniram

v. Mehdi Hossein Khan (15), Abdul Ghani v. Nabendrakishore Ray (16), and Krishna Chandra v. Challa Ramanna (17). On the question of whether a defendant can appeal or not, the cases relied on were: Krisha Chandra v. Mohish Chandra (18), Jamna Das v. Udey Ram (19). Kandiyil Cheriya Chandu v. Zamorin of Calicut (20), Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi (21), and Venkateswarin v. Lingayya (22).

The present plaintiff's written statement in the former suit is Ex. 47 and may be summarized as follows: (1). That they had never been in possession of the Poona house and were not liable to account: (2) That they had never obstructed plaintiff and so were not liable for his costs: (3) That the father of defendants No. 4 and 5 deceased Chintaman was a full brother of the plaintiff and had lived separate from the deceased Ramchandra with the plaintiff. That was about 30 or 31 years earlier. That at that time there were four sharers in the plaint property, namely, the plaintiff, defendant Nos. 1[0] Ramchandra and Chintaman deceasad. The quarter share of deceased Chintaman fell to the share of his sons and heirs, defendants Nos. 4 and 5, after him. The same should be divided and given to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 along with the share of the plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were willing to pay the court-fee stamp for the same (4). That the income due on their share should be awarded to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 (5) That defendants Nos. 4 and 5, since 1907 had been paid Rs. 25 per mensem by defendant No. 1 and that this being allowed for, account should be taken.

The last paragraph deals with Ramchandra's will which both sides now admit was invalid the statement made in it that the property was self-acquired being untrue, as it is ancestral. "Therefore the Court should declare that will as void." On the plaintiff's then written statement, I think it is plain that they had sided with the plaintiff and adopted his case, and the issue decided by the High Court was the one of fact as between the then and present plaintiffs against the then and now defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. If my view is correct then on the authority of the rulings cited before us, I think that plaintiff's present claim is barred by the decision in the former suit. The original Court's decree must be reversed and the plaintiff's claim and suit must be dismissed with costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 605 of 1933
April 18, 1934
JAMES AND VARMA, JJ.
MATHURA SINGH AND OTHERS —PETITIONERS
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190, 192—Cognizance is taken of offence and not of individual offenders—Transfer of case—Sub-Divisional Magistrate transferring case to another Magistrate—Explanation as to intention of transferring Magistrate—(Held, on facts, that whole case was transferred).

Under s. 190, Criminal Procedure Code, cognizance is taken of the offence and not necessarily of the individual offenders whose names transpire in the course of the investigation. Sourindra Mohan v. Emperor (1) and Deonarain Singh v. Emperor (2), relied on.

A Rule was issued in respect of five out of nineteen persons who were convicted under s. 147, Penal Code. The case was remanded to the District Magistrate calling for an explanation as to whether the Sub-Divisional Officer, who transferred the case to the Magistrate who tried and convicted the accused, intended to transfer the whole case or the case only of those persons against whom the Police recommended that the case should be started. The explanation stated that cognizance was taken only in respect of those persons sent up by the Police and that the intention of the Sub-Divisional Officer was that investigation should proceed only with regard to the persons sent up by the Police:

Held, (on facts) that the explanation of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that "he took cognizance only in respect of the persons sent up by the Police", meant only that he took cognizance of the offence and his action in transferring the case without excluding any of the accused, showed that he transferred the whole case for disposal.

Cr. R. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Patna, dated November 14, 1933.

Messrs. Baldeo Sahay and C. P. Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. Jaffar Imam, for the Crown.

Varma, J.—A Rule was issued in this case, in respect of 5 out of 19 petitioners who were in the first instance, tried and convicted by Mr. Rahman, a First Class Magistrate of Bihar, in the District of Patna, under s. 147, Penal Code, and sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment each, but on appeal their sentences were reduced to six months' imprisonment by the Additional Sessions Judge of Patna.

The prosecution case is that one Mathura Prasad. Singh of village Gorewan is the purchaser of two and half annas milkiat in touzi Nos. 11029, 10874 and 10775 of village Nerut. He purchased it from one, Musammat Premdei Kuer in the month of Phagun 1339 F. S. There was a mutation case between him and one Naurangi Singh, a co-sharer of the deceased husband of Premdei Kuer, and the case was decided in favour of Mathura Prasad. The property purchased by Mathura Prasad includes 34 bighas of khudkasht lands of which two plots bearing Survey Nos. 348 and 429 are those with which we are concerned in this case. On plot No. 348 there was sugarcane grown and plot No. 429 happens to be an orchard. In January 1933, Mathura Singh sent an elephant to the village to feed on the sugarcane crop on the khudkasht land while some of his men staying in the orchard. For some days there was no obstruction but on February 5, at about 10 A. M., a mob including the petitioners came and assaulted Mathura Prasad's men and also inflicted injuries on the elephant. The defence was that the purchase by Mathura Prasad was a colourable transaction and that he never got possession of any of the properties said to have been purchased by him, that on the day of occurrence his men had gone to take forcible possession of the kaudkasht land, and that when opposition was offered, a fight took place in which some persons were injured. Some of the accused pleaded that they were falsely implicated in the case on account of enmity. It was also alleged that the sugarcane crop standing on plot No. 348 was not grown by the men of Mathura Prasad but that it was grown by one Karu. The present petitioners were sent up for trial along with the other accused persons and they have been convicted and sentenced as stated above.

The case came up for hearing on March 6, 1934, when Macpherson and Agarwalla, JJ., called for an explanation in the case from the District Magistrate as to whether the Sub-Divisional Officer, when he transferred the case on February 28, 1933, to the file of the Magistrate who tried and convicted the petitioners along with the other accused, intended to transfer the whole case including the case against the present petitioners, or the case only of those persons against whom the Police recommended that the case should be started. That explanation has now been received, and the Sub-Divisional Officer says:

"It was never my intention to take a cognizance of the whole case including the case regarding the 8 accused when the Police desired to be released from Hajat or bail. I took cognizance only in respect of the persons sent up by the Police and it was certainly my intention that the investigation should proceed only with regard to the persons who were sent up by the Police."

Relying on this explanation, it is argued on behalf of the petitioners that the Sub-Divisional Officer never took cognizance of the case against the present petitioners and therefore Mr. Rahman to whom the case was transferred by the Sub-Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction to try the petitioners. It is necessary to look into the order sheet of the case to find out the manner in which the learned Magistrate had been dealing with the case against the petitioners when he came to transfer it to the Court of Mr. Rahman. As I have already stated, the case was transferred on February 28. On February 21, 1933, the Sub-Divisional Officer passed the following order:

"I have perused the diary of the case and the supervision note of the Deputy Superintendent of Police. There are 29 accused in Hajat for whom bail petition has been moved and the 30th man, viz., Reasat Khan surrenders to-day. The diary shows that there is no conclusive evidence under s. 436, Indian Penal Code. The other sections are all bailable and I think that bail should be granted in the case. Accordingly I direct that all the 22 accused be enlarged on a bail of Rs 500 each. The accused surrendering to-day will also give bail of the like amount. The O. S. I. prays for test identification. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate will please hold the test identification. Put up now on March 3, 1933, by which date Police should submit its report."

It will be seen that on February 21, in the opinion of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, all the accused persons who were in custody were eligible for bail and he did grant them bail, and he was also of opinion that there was no opinion so far as the offence alleged under s. 436 was concerned, which was a non-bailable offence. On February 24, 1933, two of the accused, Dhirik and Janki, were remanded to Hajat for March 3, 1933. On February 28, 1933, the order runs as follows:

"Charge-sheet received against 23 accused with a prayer that two of the accused in Hajat should be released from Hajat and 6 of the accused be released from bail. The charge-sheet is for March 3, 1933, but there is no Court available on that date

This case is transferred to the file of M. Shah Wali-ur-Rahman to be taken up by him on March 15, 1933, when his diary shows he is free Inform the S. I. take P. R. of the P. Wa. for that date for appearance before the Second Officer. Put up on March 3, 1933, also before the Second Officer for passing a remand order on the accused and for taking fresh bail."

On March 3, 1933, Mr. Rahman to whose Court the case was transferred passed the following order:

"The case has been transferred for 15th. The accused are present to-day. They may be released on bail of Rs. 500 each for 15th."

At present we are not concerned with what his intentions were when he transferred the case from his file, but we have to see whether what he did on February 28, amounted to taking cognizance of the offence or not. For this purpose we have to refer to some of the earlier orders and that is why I have quoted them in extenso. When the charge sheet was received at least two of the accused were in custody and the others were on bail. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate while transferring the case to the file of Mr. Rahman ordered personal cognizance to be taken of the prosecution witnesses for March 15, 1933. He also ordered that these things should be placed before the Second Officer on March 3, 1933, for passing a remand order on the accused and for taking fresh bail. There is nothing in this order to indicate that he was excluding the petitioners from the operation of his order simply because the Police did not want to proceed against them. Therefore the order of February 28, 1933, read with the earlier orders, in my view, amounts to taking cognizance of the offence by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Under s. 190, Criminal Procedure Code cognizance is taken of the offence and not necessarily of the individual offenders whose names transpire in the course of the investigation. In the case of Sourindra Mohan v. Emperor (1), it was laid down that:

"taking cognizance does not involve any formal action or indeed action of any kind but occurs as soon as a Magistrate, as such, applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence."

In this case if the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acted at all, the order for transfer was evidently made under s. 192 of the Code, and unless he had taken cognizance of the case he could not have transferred it to a Subordinate Magistrate. The real confusion seems to have arisen by losing sight of the fact that cognizance is taken of as offence and not of individual offenders

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 8; 37 C 412; 11 Cr. L J 217; 14 C W N 512.

The case of Deonarain Singh v. Emperor (2) clearly points out that the expression "case of which he has taken cognizance" in s. 192 (1) Criminal Procedure Code, means nothing more than the judicial investigation into any offence of which he has taken cognizance. The explanation of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that "he took cognizance only in respect of the persons sent up by the Police" in the light of above observations means only this that he took cognizance of the offence. And his action in transferring the case without excluding any of the petitioners shows that he transferred the whole case for disposal. I am, therefore, of opinion that the argument that the petitioners were tried without jurisdiction cannot succeed.

The other point was that there was a petition filed on behalf of the accused praying that Parthu Singh should be summoned for further cross-examination on questions which were left out inadvertently. The learned Magistrate issued summons through a special messenger for Sunday May 28, 1933. There were some other witnesses also summoned by the accused; but the order recorded on May 28, 1933, runs as follows:

"Accused did not examine any witness in defence. Parthu Singh who was summoned is absent and S. R. shows that process was not served on him. I can't drag on the case for this witness, heard argument, written statement filed, put up on May 31, 1933, for orders."

Thereafter the Magistrate proceeded to deliver his judgment which he did on May 31, 1933. From the order of May 22, 1933, it appears that the Magistrate summoned Parthu Singh for May 28, but the witness did not turn up, and the Magistrate was anxious to dispose of the case by May 31, 1933. The order of May 22, was in effect a conditional order, that Parthu Singh would be examined if his attendance could be secured on May 28. Objection might fairly have been taken to such an order if the accused had been entitled as a matter of right to re-summon Parthu Singh for cross-examination; but he had already been re-summoned and cross-examined after the framing of charges. This application for a second re-call might have been properly refused outright, on the ground that the witness should not be further harassed, or on the ground that the accused, having exercised their right of re-calling the witness, should not be permitted to drag out the case by re-calling him again. In the circumstances, it cannot be said that the learned Magistrate, making his conditional order re-calling the witness, committed himself to keeping the case pending until all available means for securing the attendance of the witness had been exhausted. No prejudice can be said to have been caused to the petitioners, since Parthu Singh had already been cross examined, especially when no defence witnesses were examined by them on May 28, 1933. Moreover, this point does not seem to have been taken in the Court below, and if there was any merit in it, one would expect it to have been urged prominently before the lower Appellate Court. So this point also does not help the petitioners. In the result the Rule is discharged; the petitioners must surrender to their bail to serve out the remaining portion of their sentence.

James, J.—I agree.

Shipping — Collusion — Regulation for preventing collusions at Sea, Art. 16—Position of vessel, how to be ascertained by another vessel, within the meaning of the Regulation—Importance of implicit obedience to Regulations pointed out.

In order that the position of a vessel may be ascertained by another vessel within the meaning of the Regulation for preventing collusions at sea she must be known by that other vessel to be in such a position that both vessels can safely proceed without risk of collusion. The data on which an inference is founded may be so collusive as to raise the inference to the level of a certainty. But where such inference is taken, the vessel so taking it, takes the chance of her inference being right. [p. 63, col. 2.]

It is important that there should be implicit obedience to the Regulations on whose observance navigators are entitled at all times to rely. If a vessel unjustifiably takes the risk of disregarding one of their injunctions, she must suffer the consequences

Messrs. Lewis Noad, K. C. and R. F. Hayward, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. R. Miller, K. C. and K. T. Corkmael, for the Respondents.

Lord Macmillan.—On March 22, 1931, a collision occurred in the harbour of Hong Kong between the appellants' steamship "Toyooka Maru" and the respondents' steamship "Kiangsu." Each vessel blamed the other and cross-actions of damages, subsequently consolidated, were instituted by their respective owners against each other in the Supreme Court of Hong Kong. The trial Judge, Sir Joseph Kemp, C.J., found the "Toyooka Maru" solely to blame and his decision was affirmed by the Full Court on appeal. There were, however, considerable divergencies of view among the learned Judges below (and also apparently among the nautical assessors who assisted them) on certain aspects of the case. The learned Chief Justice, who sat as a member of the Appellate Court, altered the opinion which he had reached at the trial and was ultimately in favour of holding both vessels to blame.

The material facts are not complicated and are, to a large extent, common ground, It appears that the "Toyooka Maru" on the morning of the day in question left Kowloon Wharf outward bound shortly after seven o'clock. When she had proceeded some distance but was still within the harbour waters her master observed a bank of fog approaching from the N.E. She was then on the starboard or south side of the channel, being the proper side for an outgoing vessel. Her master, judging it unsafe to proceed in the fog, resolved to anchor and as the local Ordinances forbade vessels to anchor in the fairway, he decided to make his way to the anchorage for foreign men of war, shown on the chart to the north of the fairway. To reach this he had to direct his course to the N.E. across the fairway and at 7-43 A. M. he altered his course accordingly. No incoming vessel had been seen by him. He gave the usual fog-signals by sounding prolonged blasts at short intervals. At 7-44 he heard an answering fog-signal apparently from a vessel at some distance on his starboard bow, and immediately stopped his engines. Several more fog-signals were interchanged between the vessels and at 7-48 the the master of the "Toyooka Maru" which still had some way on, hearing a blast from the other vessel close on his starboard bow ordered his engines full speed astern. At 7-49 the "Toyooka Maru" for the first time sighted the other vessel, which proved to be the "Kiangsu," proceeding on a west north-westerly course at a distance of about 600 feet. A collision was then inevitable and at 7-50 the port side of the "Kiangsu" about amidships struck and buckled over the stem of the "Toyooka Maru." At the time of the collision the "Toyooka Maru" had reached the area marked as the anchorage for foreign men of war and the collision occurred within the anchorage.

The "Kiangsu" was inward bound. She had entered the harbour waters through the Lyemun Pass at 7-35. At 7-44, as she was proceeding on the northern side of channel, which was her proper side, she heard a fog-signal some points on her port bow, from a vessel which was invisible in the fog, and which subsequently proved to be the "Toyooka Maru." She assumed that the vessel from which the signal came was outward bound and would be keeping to her own, the southern side of the channel so that the vessels would pass port to port. The "Kiangsu" did not stop her engines but put them to slow and after altering her course a point to starboard she proceeded on her way, sounding fog-signals at short intervals. The fog-signals from the other vessel were heard increasingly near and fine on the "Kiangsu's" port bow and at 7-49 the vessels, as already stated, became visible to each other for the first time. The "Kiangsu" put her engines full steam ahead and first ported and then immediately starboarded her helm so as to lessen the impact of the then inevitable collision. (The helm orders are in the old form throughout.)

The faults attributed to the "Toyooka Maru" are (1) that she adopted a negligent and dangerous course in crossing the fairway in fog; (2) that she failed, on hearing the "Kiangsu's" first fog-signal, to port her helm and resume the proper course for outgoing vessels on the south side of the channel; and (3) that she failed to drop her anchors when she sighted the "Kiangsu' at 7-49. The faults attributed to the "Kiangsu" are (1) that she acted in breach of Art. 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collsions at Sea by not stopping her engines on hearing the fog-singal from the "Toyooka Maru"; and (2) that she proceeded at a dangerously high speed through the fog.

The learned Chief Justice at the trial found that the "Toyooka Maru" was to blame for having directed her course across the fairway in fog and also in not having dropped her anchors on sighting the "Kiangsu." He further found that the "Kiangsu" in not stopping her engines at latest at 7-47 had acted in breach of Regulation XVI and he held (erroneously, in view of s. 4 (1) of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911) that the onus of showing that this breach did not contribute to the collision was thereby imposed on her. In his opinion "she obviously failed to discharge that onus". He nevertheless held the "Toyooka Maru" solely responsible for the collision. on the ground that she mainly contributed to the accident by crossing the fairway in fog and that by dropping her anchors she could have avoided the collision at the last moment, whereas the default of the "Kiangsu" was minor in degree and was due merely to an error of judgment in the "ambiguous position created by the "Toyooka Maru." He absolved the "Kiangsu" from the charge of excessive speed. As already indicated, the learned Chief Justice when sitting in the Full Court on appeal modified his original view and was in favour of holding both vessels to blame. Sir Peter Grain in the Full Court was of opinion that the "Toyooka Maru" was wholly to blame on account of her having crossed the fairway in fog and also on account of her not having altered her course to starboard when she heard the "Kiangsu's" second blast and knew that the "Kiangsu" was an incoming ship. He futher held that the "Kiangsu" was not in breach of Regulation XVI. Wood, J., took the same view, while also holding that the "Toyooka Maru" was not to blame for not dropping her anchors when she first saw the "Kiangsu."

The "Toyooka Maru" having been found by concurrent judgments in the Courts below to have been at fault in crossing the fairway in fog, their Lordships accept this finding, from which they see no reason to differ, and they therefore find that the "Toyooka Maru" was to blame for the collision. But there remains the question whether she was solely to blame or whether the "Kiangsu" was also to blame. This question their Lordships now proceed to consider.

The critical point for determination is whether the "Kiangsu" was or was not in breach of Regulation XVI. That Regulation provides in its second paragraph that "A steam vessel hearing, apparently forward of her beam, the fog-signal of a vessel the position of which is not ascertained, shall, so far as the circumstances of the case admit, stop her engines, and then navigate with caution until danger of collision is over."

The "Kiangsu" admittedly heard apparently forward of her beam the first fog-signal of the "Toyooka Maru" at 7-44 and also the subsequent fog-signals and admittedly she did not stop her engines either at 7·43 or at any time before the collision. Her argument is that the Regulation did not apply because the fog-signals which she heard were those of a vessel the position of which was " ascertained," inasmuch as when she heard the first fog-signal she judged the vessel from which it emanated to be an outward bound vessel and thus "ascertained" her position to be on the south side of the channel, the proper side for an outgoing vessel. Sir Peter Grain states that Counsel for the appellants admitted, and that it was in fact admitted by all, that as far as the captain of the "Kiangsu" was concerned, the "Toyooka Maru" was an "ascertained" vessel up to 7-47 when her signals became nearer and finer on the "Kiangsu's" port bow.

Their Lordships doubt the justification of this admission but accepting it they have still to consider whether during the three minutes from 7-47 to 7-50, when the collision took place, the "Toyooka Maru" was a vessel whose position had been ascertained by the "Kiangsu." The learned Chief Justice at the trial and when sitting in the Full Court on appeal was of opinion that from 7-47 "at latest" the position of the "Toyooka Maru" was not ascertained by the "Kiangsu." Sir Peter Grain and Wood, J., were both of opinion that the "Toyooka Maru's" position was throughout "ascertained" on the ground that the "Kiangsu" was entitled to assume that she was an outward bound vessel whose position was necessarily on the southern side of the channel. Their Lordships do not agree with the view taken by the majority of the Full Court. The position of the "Toyooka Maru" was not, in their Lordships' opinion "ascertained" within the meaning of the Regulation. It was inferred, not ascertained, and as it turned out, the inference was wrong. The data on which an inference is founded may be so conclusive as to raise the inference to the level of a certainty, but in the present case the only data were that the fog-signals were heard on the "Kiagsu's" port bow, that outward bound vessels keep to the south side of the channel and that it was improbable that a vessel would be crossing the fairway in a fog. An inference based on these data was not in their Lordships' opinion an ascertainment on which it was justifiable to disregard the precaution enjoined by Regulation XVI. In order that the position of a vessel may be ascertained by another vessel within the meaning of the Regulation, she must be known by that other vessel to be in such a position that both vessels can safely proceed without risk of collision. See, e. g. per Sir Gorell Barnes, P., in "The Aras" [1907] P. 28 at p. 34.) The "Kiangsu" did not know the position of the "Toyooka Maru" in this sense; she inferred it and took the chance of her inference being right.

Then it was pointed out that the Regulation is further qualified by the words "so far as the circumstances of the case admit" and it was suggested that the "Kiangsu," inward bound with the tide behind her, could not safely have stopped her engines in the fairway and lost steerage way. Their Lordships are satisfied that the "Kiangsu" entirely failed to establish that the circumstances did not admit of her stopping her engines.

The result is that their Lordships are of opinion that the "Kiangsu" was in breach of Regulation XVI by reason of her failure to stop her engines, if not when she first heard the "Toyooka Maru's" fog-sigal at 7-44, at any rate from and after 7-47 when she heard the "Toyooka Maru's" further fog-signals. This is also the view of the nautical assessors who assisted their Lordships at the hearing, and who advised that the "Kiangsu" ought to have stopped her engines when she heard the first fog-signal of the "Toyooka Maru " at 7-44.

In view of this grave breach of the Regulation on the part of the "Kiangsu" she cannot be absolved from a share in the blame for the collision. Their Lordships cannot too emphatically express their sense of the importance of implicit obedience to the Regulations on whose observance, navigators are entitled at all times to rely. If a vessel unjustifiably takes the risk of disregarding one of their injunctions, as the "Kiangsu" did on this occasion, she must suffer the consequences. In the whole circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that both vessels should be held equally to blame.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, the judgments of the Chief Justice of the February 19, 1932 and of the Full Court of the August 15, 1932, be reversed and the case be remitted to the Supreme Court of Hong Kong with a direction to find the "Toyooka Maru" and the "Kiangsu" both equally to blame for the collision and to dispose of the consolidated actions, including the costs in the Courts below, in accordance with this finding.

The appellants having been in part successful and in part unsuccessful before their Lordships, will have one-half of their costs of the appeal.

Executor—Probate, grant of—If a condition precedent to file suit.

The grant of a probate is not a condition precedent to the institution of the suit by the executor. He has a right to institute the suit as executor before he obtains the probate. Whether as executor he would be entitled to recover the decree or to maintain the same passed by the Court without producing the probate is an entirely different matter, he will be entitled to get a decree, if he produces the probate before the passing of the final decree. Chandra Kishore Roy v. Prasanna Kumari Dasi (1) and Manahim Yusef v. Islam Aman (2), relied on.

C. A. against an order of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated May 26, 1932.

Messrs. Bhagirathchandra Das, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts which gave rise to these two appeals are as follows:

One Ramsundar executed a mortgage bond in favour of Udaychandra Das borrowing Rs. 250 with interest at the rate of 2½ per cent per month. There was also a stipulation for compound interest. On November 15, 1928, Uday's son, Mahendra, the sole appellant in S. A. No. 184 of 1933 and one of the appellants in M. A. No. 477 of 1932, instituted a suit on the mortgage-bond against the heirs of Ramsundar for recovery of Rs. 1,200 as executor to the will left by his father Uday after the death of Uday. At the time of the institution of the suit Mahendra did not institute any proceeding for getting a probate of the will of his father.

During the pendency of the suit, however, he applied for probate and was appointed administrator pendente lite under s. 247, Succession Act. Thereafter he prosecuted the mortgage suit as administrator pendente lite and obtained a mortgage decree on January 9, 1931. The plaintiff's claim for a personal decree for realization of the balance, if any, that may remain unrealized from the sale proceeds, was, however, dismissed. Thereupon, the defendants filed an appeal to the lower Appellate Court on March 23, 1931, impleading the appellant, Mahendra, as the sole respondent in the appeal. The application for probate, however, was dimissed on April 2, 1932, only on the ground that the appellant could not pay the probate duty. On May 10, 1932, an application was filed by the heirs of Uday for being substituted as respondents in place of Mahendra, on the ground that the probate of the will left by Uday was not taken out. This application was rejected by the lower Appellate Court on May 21, 1932. On May 27, 1932, the heirs of Uday filed an application for staying the hearing of the appeal to enable them to file an appeal against the said order to this Court and to get an order for staying the hearing of the appeal from this Court. This application was, however, refused. The appeal was thereafter heard by the learned Judge and the suit was dismissed. M. A. No. 477 of 1932 is by the heirs of Uday against the order dated May 21, 1922, and S. A. No. 184 of 1933 is by Mahendra as executor, who has now ceased to be the administrator pendente lite, against the order dismissing the suit.

M. A. No. 477 of 1932.—From the facts stated above, it is clear that the interest in the subject-matter of the suit, that is the interest in the mortgage security, did not come to or devolve upon the heirs of Uday during the pendency of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court. Consequently, the learned Judge was right in dismissing the application for substitution and addition of the heirs under O. XXII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code. This appeal is accordingly dismissed.

S. A. No. 184 of 1933.—It appears from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the only point, which it decided was whether the decree could be maintained by the appellant after he had ceased to be the administrator pendente lite. The learned Judge has observed:

"Under s. 213, Succession Act, the plaintiff's right, as executor, could not be established till he was granted probate or letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed and, if he succeeded in obtaining a decree on the basis of a grant of letters of administration pendente lite, that decree must be regarded as conditional on the plaintiff finally obtaining probate of the will. When, therefore, his application for probate was allowed to be dismissed, the whole decree was liable to be set aside on that ground alone."

From the facts stated above, it is clear that the appellant is the executor to the will of his father. There is no dispute about the genuineness of the will. The appellant failed to get the probate, because he could not pay the probate duty in time. He, however, obtained the decree in the trial Court as administrator pendente lite, as the application for probate was then pending. During the pendency of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court, the appellant ceased to be the administrator pendente lite. But this fact cannot take away his right to proceed with the proceeding or to maintain the decree as an executor. The grant of a probate is not a condition precedent to the institution of the suit by the executor: see Chandra Kishore Roy v. Prasanna Kumari Dasi (1). There cannot be any doubt that the appellant had the right to institute the present suit as executor before he obtained the probate. Whether as executor he would be entitled to recover the decree or to maintain the same passed by the trial Court without producing the probate is an entirely different matter. It is well established on authorities that he will be entitled to get a decree, if he produces the probate before the passing of the final decree. In Manahim Yousef v. Islam Aman (2), Beaumont, C. J., observed as follows:

"If the deceased mortgagee left a will..... the defect can be cured by plaintiffs Nos. 3 to 6 (who are allowed to be and who sued as heirs and legal representatives of the deceased mortgagee) taking out probate and then proceeding with their action seeing that their title arises under the will and the only necessity for obtaining probate is to enable them to prove the will in the only manner which the Court recognizes."

The learned Advocate for the appellant prayed before us for remanding this case to the lower Appellate Court in order to enable his client to cure the defect by producing the probate before the matter is finally disposed of by the said Court. From what has been stated above it is clear that the learned Judge has not come to any decision on the merits of the case. He dismissed the suit only on the ground that the appellant before us could not maintain the decree as he had already ceased to be the administrator pendente lite. It has been already pointed out that the appellant is still entitled to prosecute the suit as executor and will be entitled to get a decree, if the lower Appellate Court comes to a decision on the merits in his favour and if he produces the probate before the lower Appellate Court at the time of the hearing of the appeal. We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court. If the plaintiff-appellant produces the probate before the lower Appellate Court within five months from this date, it will, thereafter, proceed to hear the appeal as well as the cross-objection on the merits and, if the findings of the said Court be in favour of the plaintiff, the suit will be decreed. If however the plaintiff fails to produce the probate within the time aforesaid, then the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in the lower Courts. There will be no order for costs of both the appeals in this Court.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 47 (1), 7 (1)—Interlocutory order—Held, that order was interlocutory order and that no appeal lay.

Where the Court refused an application by a person for being appointed a guardian, but the proceedings were kept pending for further orders after consulting the Collector for the appointment of the Court of Wards or some other person as guardian:

Held, that the order dismissing the application was an interlocutory order and not final according to s. 47 (1) or s. 7 (1), Guardians and Wards Act and as such no appeal could be filed till a final order was passed.

C. A. against an order of the District Judge, Bakargunj, dated June 26, 1930.

Messrs. S C. Basak, Diptendra Mohan Ghose, Fazlal Huq and Radhikaranjan Guha, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Fazlal Huq, Radhikaranjan Guha, S. C. Basak and Diptendra Mohan Ghose, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Two gentlemen of whom the appellant is one applied to be appointed guardian of the properties of a certain minor each to the exclusion of the other. The District Judge on taking evidence came to the conclusion that neither of these two gentlemen was fit to be so appointed and he accordingly refused their applications to be appointed as such guardian. He further observed thus:

"I intend first of all to consult the Collector as to whether the personal properties of the minor can be taken over by the Court of Wards. If this cannot be done, I shall endeavour to appoint a third party acceptable to all contestants."

From the order refusing his own application to be appointed guardian, the appellant has preferred this appeal. A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of this appeal. Section 47, Guardians and Wards Act, lays down in cl. (a);

"An appeal shall lie to the High Court from an order made by the Court under s. 7 appointing or declaring or refusing to appoint or declare, a guardian,"

The other clauses of this section are not relevant for the present purpose.

The only sub-section of s. 7 which is relevant here is sub-s. (1). It runs thus:

"Where the Court is satisfied that it is for the welfare of a minor that an order should be made (a) appointing a guardian of his person or property or both, or (b) declaring a person to be such a guardian, the Court may make an order accordingly."

The order to which we have referred is not an order coming within the purview of sub-s. (1), s. 7 of the Act. By that order, no guardian has been appointed of the person or property of the minor, nor has a person been declared as such guardian. Nor have the proceedings relating to guardianship in respect of the minor that were started in the Court of the learned District Judge come to an end by any order appointing or declaring or refusing to appoint or declare a guardian of the minor. All that has been done by the learned Judge is that the proceedings have been kept pending and the applications of the appellant and of another gentleman have been refused because they have been found incompetent. The order from which the appeal has been taken is, in our opinion, an interlocutory order passed at an intermediate stage of the proceedings and we are of opinion that no final orders coming within the purview of s. 7, sub-s. (1) or s. 47, cl. (a) have yet been passed. We are of opinion therefore that the present appeal is incompetent. It appears that after this appeal was preferred to this Court there was certain correspondence between the District Judge and the Collector of the District, and from certain letters which appear to have been received by the District Judge from the Collector it would appear that the properties of the minor should be taken by the Court of Wards subject, of course, to the sanction of the Board of Revenue. It appears further that certain terms as regards the moneys which would be paid to the minor during the time that the estate remains under the management of the Court of Wards have also been proposed in one of these letters.

It has been stated on behalf of the appellant that there is some misapprehension as regards the amount which the minor has been drawing from the waqf properties; the said amount is stated in one of the letters to be Rs. 300, but the appellant says that the amount is much less. These are matters of detail which may very well be considered by the learned District Judge and will certainly be taken into consideration by the Collector when the proposal for taking over the management by the Court of Wards proceeds further and on a proper application being made before the learned District Judge in that behalf. They are not matters which we are called upon to deal with at the present moment.

We therefore think that we must dismiss this appeal and send the case back to the Court of the learned District Judge in order that the proposal to make over the properties to the Court of Wards may be proceeded with. In the event of this proposal falling through, and of the learned District Judge being required to proceed with the guardianship proceedings any further and in the event of his appointing or refusing guardian in respect of the minor as the final result of such proceedings, it will be open of course to any party aggrieved, to prefer an appeal to this Court from such final order.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 1823 of 1933 and 74 of 1934

NGA U KHINE AND OTHERS — APPELLANTS

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 162,

537—Statement made to Police in course of investigation, if can be used without request of accused—Scope of s. 162—Accused, if can apply for copy of statement any time after witness has been called—Second proviso to s. 162—Part of statement, when excluded—Part of statement when used for contradiction must be proved—Infringement of mandatory provision of Criminal Procedure Code, if sufficient to hold that Court failed to administer justice—Accused in appeal, if can complain that trial Court refused to refer to statement and at the same time say that Appellate Court is not entitled to refer to them.

Under s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, a statement made by a person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation, whether oral or reduced to writing, cannot be used for any purpose, save on the request of the accused (or, his pleader). The Judge (or Magistrate) has no authority to look at the police papers unless requested to do so by the accused. On the request of the accused, the Judge (or Magistrate) must refer to the statement of a witness to the police, if it has been reduced to writing, whether that statement is separately, recorded or recorded in a police diary. The purpose for which the Judge (or Magistrate) refers to the statement is in order to see whether any part of the statement ought to be excluded under the second proviso to the section, and not for the purpose of deciding whether there is in the statement material for cross-examination of the witness in the manner provided by s. 145, Evidence Act. Subject to any part being excluded under the second proviso to the section, the accused is entitled to a copy of the whole of the statement to the Police. It is not for the Court to decide whether there is any variation between the statement in examination-in-chief and the statement recorded by the Police. Subject to the power of the Judge (or Magistrate) to disallow any question which, in his opinion, does not fall within the scope of s. 145, Evidence Act, it is for the accused or his pleader to decide in what manner and to what extent he will use the statement for the purpose of cross-examination; but the cross-examination on the statement must be confined to alleged contradictions between the statement and the evidence-in-chief of the witness, and must be carried out in the manner provided by the latter part of s. 145, Evidence Act, i. e., by calling his attention to the parts of the statement which it is intended to use for the purpose of contradicting him. Nga Lu v. Emperor (1) and Bana Singh v. Emperor (10), dissented from. [p. 69, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

The accused may apply for a copy of the statement of a witness to the police at any time after he has been called, that is, at any time after the witness has entered the witness-box and while he is giving evidence. The cross-examination of the witness must be adjourned until the necessary copy has been given.

[Case-law referred to.]

Under the second proviso to s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, the Judge (or Magistrate) should exclude from the copy supplied any part of the statement which in his opinion satisfies one or other of two conditions, viz, (1) that it is irrelevant or (2) that its disclosure to the accused is both unessential in the interests of justice and inexpedient in the public interest. There are only two separate and distinct conditions under which a part of the statement can be excluded. To justify exclusion under the second of the above conditions the two circumstances mentioned therein must exist together in conjunction. If he excludes any part of the statement the Judge (or Magistrate) must record the opinion on which he bases such exclusion, but not his reasons for that opinion. Nga Po Chen v. Emperor (13), dissented from.

Those parts of the statement to the police which are used in cross examination to contradict the witness must be proved and brought on to the record. This can ordinarily be done by the admission of the witness that he made the statement, or by examination of the Police Officer who recorded it. If the latter course is necessary, in order to avoid delay, there can be no objection to allowing cross-examination subject to subsequent proof of the statement.

If a mandatory provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure is infringed, that does not of itself make it necessary to hold that the Court must have failed in administering justice to the accused. In order that an infringement of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code should be of a such a nature that it does not come within the purview of s. 537 of the Code, it must go to the root of the trial and must in effect vitiate the proceedings. It must in effect amount to an assumption by the Court of a jurisdiction which it does not possess, or a failure to exercise a jurisdiction which is does possess. [p. 70, col. 2.]

[Case-law referred to.]

The appellant cannot complain that the trial Court refused to refer to the statements, although requested by the appellant to do so, and then say that the Appellate Court is not entitled to refer to them because the appellant has not requested it so to refer. He cannot be permitted to approbate and reprobate at the same time.

Cr. A. from judgment and sentences of the Additional Sessions Judge, Arakan, in Sessions Trial No. 49 of 1933.

Mr. Mc Donnell, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Eggar, for the Crown.

Dunkley, J.—(His Lordship narrated the facts and proceeded.) As regards the third point, this raises the construction of that much-debated section s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code. Pleader Mahmood says in his affidavit that he asked the Judge to refer to the statements to the Police, recorded during the investigation of the case, of six prosecution witnesses and to supply him with copies thereof, that copies of extracts, of the statements of three of these witnesses only were supplied, and that while these copies were being prepared he was compelled to proceed with his cross-examination of these witnesses, and the copies were only ready after the examination of the witnesses had been concluded. The learned Additional Sessions Judge says that he was asked to refer to the statements of only three witnesses, that he did so and marked those parts which were, according to the Pleader Mahmood, contradictory and had copies of these parts made at once, that Mahmood appeared to have a complete knowledge of the Police papers, and proceeded at once on his own initiative with his cross examination of the witnesses and did not wait until the copies were prepared, and that the copies were shown to him as soon as they had been prepared and were then filed on the record. The learned Judge's statement in regard to this matter is supported by the affidavits of the other pleaders in the case and of his clerks. It is further clear from the record of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses that Mahmood had, by some means or other, obtained knowledge of their statements to the Police and was able to cross-examine the witnesses thereon. I, therefore, unreservedly accept the explanation of the learned Judge on this point. I am quite sure that the statements of only three witnesses were asked to be referred to, and that Mahmood voluntarily continued his cross-examination of these witnesses while the necessary copies of their statements were being prepared. Learned Counsel for the appellant U Khine criticizes the procedure of the Additional Sessions Judge on three grounds, viz., (1) that his client was entitled to copies of the whole statements of the witnesses to the Police; (2) that cross-examination of each of these witnesses should have been postponed until the necessary copy of his statement had been prepared and given to the defence pleader and (3) that the statements of these witnesses to the Police, so far as they were used under the provisions of s. 145, of the Evidence Act, were not proved. He has referred to a number of authorities of this Court and other High Courts regarding the interpretation of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, and in order to dispose of these appeals it is necessary that we should come to definite conclusions as to the procedure which ought to be adopted in applying its provisions. Section 162, sub-s. (1), is in the following terms:

"No statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter shall, if reduced to writing be signed by the person making it nor shall any such statement or any record thereof, whether in a Police-diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or record, be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made: Provided that, when any witness is called for the prosecution in such inquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accued be furnished with a copy thereof, in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by s. 145, Evidence Act, 1872. When any part of such statement is so used, any part thereof may also be used in the re-examination of such witness, but for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in his cross-examination: Provided, further that if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests, it shall record such opinion (but not the reasons therefor) and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused."

The plain meaning of the language of the section is that a statement made by a person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation, whether oral or reduced to writing, cannot be used for any purpose, save on the request of the accused (or, of course, his pleader). In Nga Lu v. Emperor (1), there occurs the dictum of a learned Judge that "the Judge would be well-advised to refer to Police papers privately. From this dictum I must, with the utmost respect, dissent. It seems to me to be clear, from the provisions of the section, that the Judge (or Magistrate) has no authority to look at the Police papers unless requested to do so by the accused. It is not for me to speculate as to the intention of the legislature in enacting this unhappily worded section; but it is certain that its effect is frequently to defeat the ends of justice rather than to further those ends.

On the request of the accused, the Judge (or Magistrate) must refer to the statement of a witness to the Police, if it has been reduced to writing, whether that statement is separately recorded or recorded in a Police diary: Sulaiman Mohamed v. Emperor (2). The purpose for which the Judge (or Magistrate) refers to the statement is in order to see whether any part of the statement ought to be excluded under the second proviso to the section, and not for the purpose of deciding whether there is in the statement material for cross-examination of the witness in the manner provided by s. 145, Evidence Act. Subject to any part being excluded under the second proviso to the section, the accused is entitled to a copy of the whole of the statement to the Police: Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (3), Emperor v. Bansidhar (4), Ramgulam Teli v. Emperor (5), Jhari Gope v. Emperor (6), Chedi Prasad Singh v. Emperor (7), and Nekram v. Emperor (8). It is not for the Court to decide whether there is any variation between the statement in examination-in-chief and the statement recorded by the Police. On this point the case of Saadat Khan v. Emperor (9), has been dissented from in Ramgulam Teli v. Emperor (5). Subject to the power of the Judge (or Magistrate) to disallow any question which, in his opinion, does not fall within the scope of s. 145, Evidence Act, it is for the accused or his pleader to decide in what manner and to what extent he will use the statement for the purpose of cross-examination; but the cross examination on the statement must be confined to alleged contradictions between the statement and the evidence-in-chief of the witness, and must be carried out in the manner provided by the latter part of s. 145, Evidence Act, i. e., by calling his attention to the parts of the statement which it is intended to use for the purpose of contradicting him. To this extent, I must, with all due respect, dissent from the ruling of this Court in Bana Singh v. Emperor (10).

The accused may apply for a copy of the statement of a witness to the Police at any time after he has been called, that is, at any time after the witness has entered the witness-box and while he is giving evidence: Bakarali Sardar v. Emperor (11), dissenting from Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (3), on this point, Emperor v. Tahal Saithwar (12), and Ramgulam Teli v. Emperor (5)

The cross-examination of the witness must be adjourned until the necessary copy has been given: Saadat Khan v. Emperor (9). This is essential, for it would defeat the object of granting a copy of the statement to the accused if he were to be provided with a copy only when cross-examination of the witness had been completed, or almost completed. It will rarely be necessary to exclude any part of the witness's statement to the Police under the second proviso to s. 162, and, therefore, the difficulty that such postponement of cross-examination might cause delay in the trial can usually be obviated by having copies of the Police statements in readiness at the commencement of the trial, or it would be a sufficient compliance with the law to allow the defence Pleader to see the original statement of the witness to the Police and to cross-examine thereon while the copy is being prepared.

Under the second proviso to the section, the Judge (or Magistrate) should exclude from the copy supplied any part of the statement which in his opinion satisfies one or other of two conditions, viz., (1) that it is irrelevant, or (2) that its disclosure to the accused is both unessential in the interests of justice and inexpedient in the public interest. It should be noticed that there are only two separate and distinct conditions under which a part of the statement can be excluded, and not three, as, with all due respect, has been wrongly stated in Nga Po Chen v. Emperor (13), where the word "or" occurring between the word "inexpedient" and the words "not essential," should be "and." To justify exclusion under the second condition mentioned above, the two circumstances mentioned therein must exist together in conjunction. If he excludes any part of the statement, the Judge (or Magistrate) must record the opinion on which he bases such exclusion, but not his reasons for that opinion.

Those parts of the statement to the Police which are used in cross-examination to contradict the witness must be proved and brought on to the record: Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (3). This can ordinarily be done by the admission of the witness that he made the statement, or by examination of the Police Officer who recorded it. If the latter course is necessary, in order to avoid delay, there can be no objection to allowing cross-examination subject to subsequent proof of the statements.

in this case are that he did not provide the copies of the whole of the statements of the witnesses which were desired by the accused's Pleader, and that he did not record his opinion for excluding parts of those statements, and furthermore, that he did not postpone the cross-examination of the witness until the copies had been supplied. It is further objected that the parts of the statements put on record were not proved, but it is the duty of the defence to prove the statements of which they have made use in cross-examination, and, consequently, it is not open to the defence to raise an objection because such statements have been brought on the record without proof.

Learned Counsel for the appellant, U Khine, urges that the provisions of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, are mandatory and, therefore, as the Court has failed to comply with them, we must presume that a failure of justice has occurred, and we have no option but to set aside the convictions and sentences and order a re-trial of the appellants. This is a contention with which I cannot agree, and there is ample authority for the proposition that if a mandatory provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure is infringed, that does not of itself make it necessary to hold that the Court must have failed in administering justice to the accused: Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (14), In re K. Ramaraja Tevan (15), Emperor v. Barmha Singh (16), Emperor v. Nur Mahomed Abdul Kadar (17) and Devi Das v. Emperor (18).

In order that an infringement of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code should be of such a nature that it does not come within the purview of s. 537 of the Code, it must go to the root of the trial and must in effect vitiate the proceedings. It must in effect amount to an assumption by the Court of a jurisdiction which it does not possess, or a failure to exercise a jurisdiction which it does possess: Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (19) and Emperor v. Bechu Chaube (20). That the errors committed by the learned Judge in this trial are not of this nature is perfectly plain. Learned Counsel for the appellant, U Khine, has urged that the present case is exactly similar to the case of a Court refusing to allow any cross-examination at all of the prosecution witnesses, and he urges that in latter case a re-trial would undoubtedly be necessary. On this last point I am in agreement with him, but there is a great difference between the present case and a case where all cross-examination has been disallowed. In the latter case there would be no materials from which an Appellate Court could judge whether the action of the trying Court had occasioned a failure of justice or not; whereas in the present case all possible materials for deciding this point are available. I am clearly of opinion, that the errors committed in this trial are at the most irregularities falling within the purview of s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, and that, therefore, it is for the appellants to satisfy us that these errors have, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice. Moreover, s. 167, Evidence Act, would appear to be applicable in the present case and to lead to the same result.

We announced our decision on this point at the end of the first day's hearing of these appeals, and provided learned Counsel with complete copies of the statements to the Police, not only of those three witnesses, parts of whose statements have been admitted to the record, but also of the other three witnesses whose statements, it is alleged, were applied for by the defence, and we invited learned Counsel for the appellants to point out to us how the appellants had been prejudiced in their defence by the failure to provide them at the trial with copies of these statements. Learned Counsel for the appellant, U Khine, declined to look at them and made the astonishing assertion that we ourselves could not refer to them for any purpose without his request to do so, which he would not make. He cannot be permitted to approbate and reprobate at the same time in this manner. He cannot complain that the trial Court refused to refer to these statements, although requested by the appellants to do so, and then say that the Appellate Court is not entitled to refer to them because the appellants have not requested it so to refer. I have studied these statements with care and compared them with the evidence given by the witnesses at the trial. In regard to the three witnesses, parts of whose statements to the Police have been admitted to the record, they were cross-examined on their statements and all possible contradictions were brought out in their cross-examination. In regard to one of the other three witnesses, whose statements to the Police are said to have been applied for, the appellants had this witnes's first information report to the Police as the basis of their cross-examination and full use was made of it; and in regard to the other two, nothing exists in the statements which can possibly be considered as contradictory to the evidence given by them at the trial. I have already shown that in respect of the other two minor points raised by the defence the appellants suffered no prejudice, and the only possible conclusion is that the errors committed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge have not, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice. (The remaining portion of his Lordship's judgment is not material for the purpose of this report.)

Mya Bu, J.—The only matter put forward in support of the appeal of Maung U Khine relates to alleged irregularities in the conduct of the trial by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. As regards two of them, namely, (1) the refusal by the learned Additional Sessions Judge to call the Civil Surgeon, Akyab, as a witness for the defence and (2) his failure to put on record until the conclusion of the trial an extract from the general diary of the Akyab Police Station, I have nothing to add to the reasons given by my brother Dunkley in whose conclusions I fully agree.

The third of the alleged irregularities is concerning the provisions of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code. Upon the affidavits of the Pleader who defended Maung U Khine at the trial and other affidavits in support of the Pleader's allegations on the one hand, and the explanation tendered by the learned trial Judge and the affidavits of his clerks and of other Pleaders who appeared in the trial on the other hand, the only conclusion we can properly come to is that the learned trial Judge was asked to refer to statements of only three and not six witnesses as alleged by the Pleader, that the learned Judge having referred to the statements marked parts which the Pleader pointed out to be contradictory and ordered copies to be made of such parts, that while the copies were being made, the Pleader who appeared to have a complete knowledge of the contents of the Police papers was not compelled or required to proceed but voluntarily proceeded with or continued the cross-examination of the witnesses, and that when the copies had been made, they were shown to the Pleader and in the absence of anything done by the Pleader in that regard, they were filed on the record.

The first question for determination is whether, and if so, to what extent, the learned trial Judge contravened the provisions of s. 162 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. According to the plain meaning of the section no statement made by a person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation or any record thereof or any part of such statement or record may be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial except as provided in the first proviso to the sub-section. The sub-section as it stood before the amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code in 1923, merely provided against the use of the record of such statement or any part thereof as evidence but by the amendment the use for any purpose whatever of such statement or record or any part of such statement or record at an enquiry or trial of the offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made is entirely prohibited except as provided by the first proviso to the sub-section, under which an imperative duty is cast upon the Court, on the request of the accused (or, of course, his Pleader), to refer to the record of such statement. Therefore unless and until the accused or his Pleader makes the request, the duty of the Court to refer to such record does not arise and the prohibition contained in the main sub-section remains unqualified. For these reasons I join, with the utmost respect to the learned Judge concerned, in the note of dissent struck by my learned brother Dunkley with reference to the dictum that "the Judge would be well advised to refer to Police papers privately" appearing in Criminal Appeal No. 1080 of 1933 of this Court.

Under the proviso an imperative duty is cast upon the Court, on the request of the accused or his Pleader, not only to refer to such record but also to direct the accused to be furnished with a copy thereof, although under the second proviso not only does the Court have the right but also it is its bounden duty to exclude from the copy to be furnished to the accused any part of such statement, if the Court is of opinion that such part is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests. Where the Court excludes such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused the Court must record its opinion (but not the reasons therefor) by which it justifies the exclusion. The plain meaning of the two provisos then is that the Court on the request of the accused is bound to refer to the record of the statement of a witness called for the prosecution for the purpose of forming an opinion: (1) whether any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial or (2) whether its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests; and when no part of the statement is found not to be relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial or is found to be such that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpendent in the public interests, the Court must direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of the record of the statement; but if the Court is of opinion that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests, the Court must record such opinion, but not the reasons therefor, and must exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused and then direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of such statement, less such part as the Court excludes. There is nothing in the language of these two provisos to suggest that it is the duty of the Court to decide whether there is any variation between the statement of the witness in Court and the statement recorded by the Police before directing that the accused be furnished with a copy of the statement. It must be borne in mind that the exclusion of any part of the statement of a witness to the Police on the ground of irrelevancy under the second proviso is not irrelevancy based on want of contradiction, inconsistency or discrepancy between the witness's statement in Court, and his statement to the Police, but irrelevancy with reference to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial. Therefore it does not appear to be a necessary ground for requiring the Court to direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of the statement of a witness to the Police that there should be any variation between the witness's statement in Court and his statement to the Police. In so far as the ruling in Bana Singh v. Emperor (10), indicates that there should be such variation in order that the accused be entitled to a copy of the record of the statement made to the Police, I am at one with my learned brother Dunkley in respectfully dissenting from it.

Upon other points relating to the interpretation of the provisions of s. 162, the views expressed by my learned brother in his lucid judgment are supported not only by the plain meaning of the section but also by judicial pronouncements quoted by him, and I have nothing to add to his observations but state that I entirely agree with his views. I also agree that such irregularities, as we have found the learned trial Judge has committed, are at most irregularities falling within the purview of s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, and that they have not in fact occasioned any failure of justice. Upon the facts of the case I agree that there is no substance in the appeal of any of the three appellants. I agree in the order proposed by him.

Grant—Noabad land—Government, if can settle it with anyone—Government coming to wrong conclusion on question of possession—Settlement, if confers title only on grantee.

The Government had the right to make settlement of Noabad lands with anybody it pleased. Although in making the settlment, the fact of previous possession is taken into account, yet if the Sub-Deputy Collector had come to the wrong conculsion on the question of possession, still the settlement made would confer a right on the grantee alone in the land.

C. A. from Appellate Decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, First Court, Chittagong, dated July 17, 1931.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff for declaration of his alleged 8-annas share in a certain holding and for confirmation of possession. The subject-matter of the suit is the watery portion of a tank recorded in Dag No. 1609 of the settlement map. The plaintiff's case is that the said tank was recorded as Dag No. 328 of the Chitta of 1200 M. E. in the possession of Srimanta and Kalidas. The plaintiff's further case is that on the death of Srimanta, the property was inherited by Srimanta's son Radhakrishna on whose death the same passed to Brajeswari. The plaintiff is the daughter's son of Radha Krishna. The plaintiff's further case is that Kalidas' rights devolved ultimately upon Harapriya who is defendant No. 1. The other defendants are sons of Harapriya. It appears that in the 1871 Biswambar purchased at an execution sale Brajeswari's alleged right whereupon Brajeswari instituted a suit to recover possession of her alleged share challenging the decree and the execution sale. In that suit Biswambhar, Harapriya and Harapriya's husband were parties defendants. The said suit ended in a compromise in the year 1872. By the terms of the compromise decree, to which Harapriya and Biswambhar were parties, the right of Brajeswari to a moiety share was recognised and the said share was leased out in Temami right for six years by Brajeswari to Lakhshmi Kanta, the husband of Harapriya. The plaintiff's further case is that although Brajeswari was in possession jointly with Harapriya. Harapriya's husband Lakshmikanta who looked after the affairs fraudulently caused the name of Harapriya to be entered in the records of Fasson's survey which took place in the year 1878. It is on the basis of this record, he says, that the Government granted in the year 1881 a jote settlement to Harapriya. In the year 1895, there was a Cadastral Survey. Brajeswari was recorded as an under-raiyat under Harapriya, but she having repudiated through Rasik the said position, her name was removed from the Record of Rights and Harapriya's name alone continued to be on the record. It appears that in the year 1914, a tank was re-excavated by defendant No. 1 with the help of the District Board. She herself contributed a substantial sum of money. From the year 1914 to 1917 there were proceedings under s. 9, Specific Relief Act between the plaintiff and the defendants in respect of the banks of the tank and in respect of some of the proceedings the plaintiff was successful. In the year 1928 the Khas Tahsildar recorded the name of the plaintiff along with the name of Harapriya in the Government Register. It is on these facts that the plaintiff says that he has a moiety share in the jote which was created in the name of Harapriya in the year 1881. The plaintiff also based his claim to a moiety share on title by adverse possession.

The Court of first instance gave effect to some of the contentions of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court has, however, dismissed the same. It is admited by both the parties that the tank in question appertained to a Noabad taluk belonging to the Government and that the Government had the right to make any settlement it liked. It is the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the banks of the tank in respect of which proceedings were taken under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, do not appertain to the Noabad taluk, but they appertained to Taraf Mehals and were held under different titles. The learned Subordinate Judge points out that in the Mughi Chitta the possession of Srimanta and Kalidas was simply recorded but they had in fact at the time or thereafter no rights to the land. They assumed they had rights and on that footing dealt with the property by the transactions as mentioned above. In the year 1877, Mr. Fasson started his survey and in the course of the same it was found that Maghi Survey plot No. 328 together with some other plots was lying unsettled. The Sub-Deputy Collector Pran Krishna Das enquired into the fact of possession and came to the conclusion that Harapriya was the only person in possession and was entitled to a settlement from the Government. Accordingly, in the year 1881, the land in suit was settled with Harapriya. That settlement for the first time created a right in the lands in suit. He accordingly held that so far as title is concerned, Harapriya is alone entitled to it. On the question of possession the learned Subordinate Judge in more places than one after reviewing the evidence came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not in possession of the land in suit for a considerable period, much more than 12 years before the suit, and, therefore, held that the plaintiff's claim based on a title by adverse possession was also not substantial. In my opinion, both these findings of the learned Subordinate Judge dispose of the matter. The right to the property was first created in the year 1881. The Government had the right to make settlement of Noabad lands with anybody it pleased. No doubt, in making the settlement the fact of previous possession is taken into account, but if the Sub-Deputy Collector had come to the wrong conclusion on the question of possession still the settlement which was made with Harapriya would confer a right on her alone in the land. In this view of the matter the plaintiff cannot claim any interest in the jote so created. The mere fact that for some time, the husband of Harapriya looked after the properties of the plaintiff would not make him a trustee so as to give to the plaintiff on equitable principles a right to the settlement made by the Government in favour of Harapriya. The plaintiff's claim based on adverse possession must also fail on the findings that he had no possession at least after the Cadastral Settlement which was finally published in the year 1898. For these reasons, I affirm the judgment and decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

D. Appeal dismissed.

Cr. A, against an order of the Sessions Court, North Arcot, in C. C. No. 21 of 1934.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—In this case the accused have been convicted of house-breaking and theft, offences under ss. 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code. There is no direct evidence that any of them were seen at the place of house-breaking and the conviction rests on the subsequent recovery of certain of the stolen articles. The learned Sessions Judge says in his charge to the jury:

"there is hardly little or no evidence on record that these accused were arrested with these articles in their possession."

So the evidence against them is that of third person to whom they handed over the property. One of these is P. W. No. 6 to whom 6 brass vessels, M. O. s. 2 to 7 and a silk saree, M. O. 10 were sold. As regards this witness the learned Judge instructed the jury as follows:

"What P. W. No. 6, Abdul Rahim Sahib, says is that accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4 who are all brothers brought to him these brass vessels and one silk saree, M. O. s 2 to 7 and 10, and wanted him to give them Rs. 2. As he had no money then he gave them six annas. You have seen this witness in the box. These three accused were living in his land. He knew them very well. He was compelled to say that these brass articles could not have been owned by these accused. He was also forced to answer that the silk saree, M. O. 10, is one which the womenfolk of accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4 could not have owned. This may show that he might have known at the time when he received these articles that they were stolen. But he is not at present in the dock. If it is an offence, it is for the authorities to proceed against him. What you are now concerned with is whether his testimony is true or not. That these articles were recovered from his possession is proved by P. W. No. 5 as well as by the Village Munsif of Desur. A Mahazar, too, was prepared at the time which has been filed as Ex. C. Desure is not far away from the place of occurrence Salai Arugavur; it is only three miles from it. So then, it comes to this: that if you believe the testimony of P. W. No 6, it follows that very soon after the theft most of the articles that had been stolen were sold or pledged with him by accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4."

Curgenven, J., admitted this appeal with the note that the Sessions Judge omitted to point out the need for caution in accepting the evidence of a receiver of stolen property as that of an accomplice. Mr. Bewes, for the Crown, raised the point whether a person who receives stolen property knowing it to be stolen is an accomplice. Woodroffe in his Evidence Act says the term "accomplices" may include all "partcipes criminis" and there is a note below that in English Law it includes both principals of the first and second degree and accessories before and after the fact, but that in India it was held that an accessory after the fact (under the law prior to the Penal Code) stood on a very different footing from an accomplice. Mayne says (p. 756, 2nd Edition),

"abettors of crime are accomplices and must be looked at as such if they are produced as witnesses against the principal offenders."

Section 107, Indian Penal Code, says:

"A person abets the doing of anything, who first instigates any person to do that thing; or secondly engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing; or thirdly, intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission the doing of that thing."

It appears to me that a person who knowingly aids in the disposal of stolen property falls under the third definition and is an accomplice, and that whatever may have been the case in India before the Penal Code, he is an accomplice under that Code. If so, the Judge was, I think, bound to tell the jury this that P. W. No. 6 being, on the evidence, a receiver of property which he must have known to be stolen was a tainted witness whose evidence must be received with great caution. I therefore hold that there has been a failure to direct the jury on a material point and that the accused have been thereby prejudiced. On looking through the records I found another matter, which, in my opinion also vitiates the charge and which I pointed out to Mr. Bewes. As stated above, there was no direct evidence that the accused committed the house-breaking and theft. Yet the charge against them was framed solely under ss. 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code, with no alternative charge under s. 411, Indian Penal Code. In his charge to the jury the learned Judge did not mention s. 411, Indian Penal Code, nor inform the jury that it was open to them either to find on the facts that the accused committed the house-breaking and theft or that they were guilty under s. 411, Indian Penal Code, or tell them that they might convict them in the alternative. He left them no choice between a conviction under ss. 457 and 380, Indian Penal Code, and an acquittal. The offence under s. 411 being punishable with a lesser sentence than offences under the two former sections, this was an omission which prejudiced the accused. For both these reasons the conviction and sentence must be set aside and a re-trial ordered. The case will be transferred to the Sessions Judge, Chittoor, for disposal according to law. The convictions and sentences passed on accused Nos. 2 and 4 who have not appealed and whose cases are indistinguishable are also set aside under ss. 423 (d) and 439 (1) Criminal Procedure Code, for the reasons given in the judgment above and their re-trial is ordered.

Customary Rights—Villagers having certain legal rights—Court's duty to defend and enforce them—Equity—Applicability to question of legal rights.

Where it is a question of legal rights, there is no scope for the application of equitable principles.

A. from appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Tippera, dated March 31, 1930.

Mr. Rashindra Nath Sarkar and Syed Forhat Ali, for the Appellants.

Mr. Upendra Kumar Roy, for Respondents.

Mr. Bireswar Chatterji, for the Deputy Registrar.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by two of the defendants, and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs on their own behalf and on behalf of the other inhabitants of a village called Piparia, for a declaration that a certain strip of land forms part of the village Gopat, for an order on the defendants to fill up a tank that they have excavated in such a way as to block the Gopat, and for certain other reliefs. The strip of land in suit lies to the west and north of the defendant's charabari, and according to the defendants' case, it forms part of their charabari, while according to the plaintiffs' it is the zemindar's khas land and forms part of a village Gopat that has existed and has been used by them from time immemorial.

It is undisputed that a village Gopat runs from south to north through the part of the village to the south of the defendants' charabari, and also that a similar Gopat runs from south to north through the part of the village to the north thereof. The plaintiffs' contention was and is that these two Gopats were really one and the same Gopat, and that the land in suit was the portion of the Gopat connecting the northern and southern portions. The defendants' case was, inter alia, that the people of the village had at most a customary right to pass across the defendants' charabari, but not by any defined path, from its south-western corner where the southern Gopat ended, to its north-eastern corner where the northern Gopat began and that the tank had been dug and the path diverted with the consent of all the villagers concerned, including the plaintiffs themselves.

The trial Court dismissed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court decreed it, and one of the principal grounds of appeal that has been urged before this Court is that the lower Appellate Court did not reverse some of the findings on the strength of which the trial Court had dismissed the suit, and in some cases did not even refer to the points to which those findings related. There is, in my opinion, no substance in this contention, for the findings of the lower Appellate Court appear to me to be conclusive, and are such as to render the consideration of those of the trial Court's findings to which no reference has been made quite necessary. The lower Appellate Court has found, on a consideration of all the evidence that has been adduced on both sides, including the Settlement Records and the records of the butwara proceedings: (1) That the land in suit is a village Gopat and not part of the defendants' raiyati; (2) that for a long time—(by which is evidently meant 'from time immemorial,' to use the legal phrase),—there had been a village Gopat over the land in suit connecting the northern and the southern Gopats; (3) that the defendants gradually encroached on and finally appropriated the land in suit; and (4) that the villagers never gave their consent to the old Gopat over the land in suit being closed, and a new path opened up. These are findings of fact which cannot be questioned on second appeal and they are, as has already been stated, conclusive.

It has been contended that the lower Appellate Court ought to have considered the evidence with regard to an earlier diversion of the path that is said to have taken place some 14 or 15 years ago, and especially with reference to the question of limitation; but it has been held that limitation does not apply in a case of this sort, obstruction to a right of way being a continuing nuisance: Nazem v. Wazedulla (1). It has further been contended that customary rights, such as the right now under consideration, must be exercised in a reasonable manner, and attention has been drawn to the finding of the trial Court to the effect that the new path provided by the defendants is quite convenient, and is in fact being used by the majority of the villagers without complaint. This contention would have had great force, if the lower Appellate Court had merely found that the villagers had some sort of right of way over the defendants' land, but it becomes entirely irrelevant in view of the finding of that Court to the effect that the land in suit is a village Gopat that has existed from time immemorial and that it does not form part of the defendants' raiyati at all.

As the matter now stands, it is a question of legal rights, and there is, therefore, no scope for the application of equitable principles. It has been found that the villagers have certain legal rights in the land in suit, and that they have never surrendered those rights, and this being so, it is the duty of the Courts to defend and enforce those rights. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs to the appearing respondents, and the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are affirmed. Leave to appeal under s. 15, Letters Patent, is refused.

GURCHARAN SINGH—CONVICT—APPELLANT
versus

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 300, 302, 304, Part. II—Sudden quarrel—Single dang blow on head—Death—Offence.

Where in a sudden quarrel, the accused deals a single blow with a dang on the head of his antagonist, an old man whose weakness and enlarged spleen might have hastened his death which ensues, the accused is guilty not of murder but of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

Mr. Ram Lal Anand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The appellant Gurcharan Singh alias Mahna Singh, has been convicted of the murder of one Jamal, a blacksmith of Chak No. 549, G. B. in the District of Lyallpur, and has been sentenced under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, to suffer the penalty of death. The convict has preferred an appeal to this Court, and the record has also been submitted to us for confirmation of the capital sentence.

The prisoner, who has read up to the Intermediate Examination of the Punjab University, was residing in the month of April 1933, with his brother Pritam Singh in Chak No. 549, G. B. where the latter was working as a Patwari. On the evening of April 21, the prisoner went to the shop where the deceased Jamal worked as a blacksmith, and asked him to repair his bicycle. Jamal expressed his inability to undertake the repair, and an altercation then ensued between them, which led to an exchange of abuse between Jamal's son Ahmad on the one side and the accused on the other side.

The evidence for the prosecution shows that on the morning of April 22, Jamal was assaulted by the prisoner when the former was going to a field in order to collect heaves of wheat. The accused inflicted a blow on the head of the victim with his dang with the result that the wounded man fell down on the ground and became unconscious. In the afternoon he was being taken to the hospital.

The medical witness, who conducted the post mortem examination, deposes that the deceased sustained, besides two abrasions, a contused wound on the head which caused a fracture of the parietal bone and resulted in his death. The abrasions could, in the opinion of the medical witness, be caused by a fall. The witness also deposes that a moderate blow on the head would have caused the fracture of the parietal bone, because the deceased was an old man of 60 years of age; and that "his weakness and emaciated condition and enlarged spleen might have hastened his death."

The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that only one blow was struck on the deceased and that the evidence of the prosecution witness Shah Ahmad to the effect that three or four blows were struck is contradicted by the statement made by him to the Police, in which he attributed only one dang blow to the assailant. This contention also receives support from the testimony of the medical witness, who found only one wound on the head of the deceased. It appears that the assault was preceded by a quarrel between the accused and Jamal, and this is the opinion which was expressed by three assessors. The learned Counsel for the Crown admits that the the prisoner struck one blow upon a sudden quarrel, and that he had no intention such as is contemplated by the definition of murder contained in s. 300, Indian Penal Code. The offender must, however, be deemed to possess the knowledge that the blow inflicted by him was likely to cause death.

The circumstances of the case show that the offence committed by the prisoner was one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, as contemplated by s. 304, Part 2, Indian Penal Code. I would, accordingly, accept the appeal so far as to alter the conviction to one under s. 304, Part 2, Indian Penal Code, and to reduce the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for five years.

Hilton J.—I agree.

N. Conviction altered.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 52—Attachment of properties of debtor in execution of decree—Subsequent appointment by insolvency Court, of interim Receiver — Order of stay of execution and order under s. 52 by insolvency Court—Legality—Remedy—Proper procedure.

Where after the attachment of property of a debtor in execution of a decree against him, the insolvency Court admits a petition for insolvency by the debtor and appoints an interim Receiver, it is only the Executing Court that can pass an order under s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act, on an application made to it and not the insolvency Court and where, on an application by a petitioning creditor the execution proceedings are already stayed by the insolvency Court and also an order passed under s. 52 of the Act, on an application by the decree-holder, directing the Receiver to sell the property for realising the costs of the suit and of the execution, there are two alternatives either of which may be adopted. One of these alternatives is for the insolvency Court to direct the Receiver to make a proper application to the Executing Court in order to obtain the necessary order under s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act ; and the other alternative is for the decree-holders to apply to the Executing Court for the sale of the properties under attachment in order that their dues may be realized, in which case the insolvency Court has to vacate the stay order which he had already made.

A. from original order of the District Judge, Hooghly, dated August 23, 1933.

Messrs. Narendra Nath Choudhury and Fanindra Mohan Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by a debtor against whom insolvency proceedings are pending in the Court of the District Judge of Hooghly. The facts necessary to be stated for the purpose of this appeal are quite simple. The debtor was a surety against whom a certain money decree was being executed in the Miscellaneous Execution Case No. 101 of 1930 of the Second Subordinate Judge's Court, Hooghly. In the course of the said execution proceedings, certain properties of the debtor were attached. Long after the attachment a petitioning creditor, namely, Pramatha Nath Chatterjee, started proceedings in insolvency as against the debtor alleging that the latter was indebted to him for a certain amount. The petitioning creditor, after his application was registered, filed a petition praying for restraining the decree-holders Sovaram Ramprasad Mills, Ltd., from selling the properties of the debtor in the said execution case until the disposal of the insolvency proceedings and for the appointment of a Receiver. The learned Judge appointed an interim Receiver and also issued an order staying the sale. Thereafter certain proceedings followed but with them we are not concerned in the present appeal.

The result of those proceedings was that it was ordered by this Court that the said Sovaram Ramprasad Mills, Ltd., could not be brought in in the schedule of creditors because they were alleging that there was collusion between the debtor and the petitioning creditor and also because no order of adjudication had yet been passed but that they would be entitled to show that the insolvency application should not be granted, or in other words, that the acts of insolvency alleged in the petition of the petitioning creditor have not been established. Thereafter an application appears to have been made by the said Sovaram Ramprasad Mills, Ltd., to the learned District Judge before whom the insolvency proceedings are pending that the Receiver might be directed to sell the property for satisfying the costs of the suit and of the execution under s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act. Upon this petition the learned District Judge has made this order which is complained of in this appeal. The order in effect was that the Receiver should sell the properties involved in the execution proceedings which had been stayed by the previous order of the learned District Judge to which reference has already been made and should deposit the sale proceeds in Court. It appears, therefore, that the interim Receiver was appointed by the insolvency Court long after the attachment order had been issued from the Court in which the execution proceedings were taking place, and the order complained of in the appeal was made by the insolvency Court upon the view that s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act, would entitle the Court to make such an order. On reading s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act, it seems to us to be perfectly clear that an application under that section has got to be made to this Court which was executing the decree and it is that Court which on such an application being made can direct the property to be delivered to the Receiver in order that a sale may be held. The learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order for sale under the provisions of the said section. The order complained of in the appeal, therefore, must necessarily be set aside.

The question then is what direction should be given by us in order that the respondents who are executing the decree may proceed to realize their costs of the suit and of the execution. We have considered the matter carefully and we think that there are two alternatives either of which may be adopted. One of these alternatives is for the learned District Judge to direct the Receiver to make a prope application to the executing Court in order to obtain the necessary order under s. 52, Provincial Insolvency Act; and the other alternative is for the said respondents to apply to the executing Court for the sale of his properties under attachment in order that their dues may be realized. In case it be necessary for the said respondents to adopt that course, it will be necessary for the learned District Judge to vacate the stay order which he had already made because so long as that order stands, it will not be open to the said respondents to make any application to the Executing Court for the sale of his properties attached. We, therefore, direct that on receipt of the record from this Court the learned District Judge will either direct the Receiver to apply to the executing Court for an order under s. 52 for the sale of the properties or he will vacate the interim order of stay which he made at the time when the application was made by the petitioning creditor for restraining the respondents from selling the properties so that the said respondents may have an opportunity to apply to the Executing Court for the sale of the properties attached. We make no order as to costs of this appeal.

LAKKARAJU ANANDA RAO AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT —RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Widow—Alienation—Alienation of part of estate for religious ceremonies of daughter's son—Acts done for spiritual welfare of deceased husband—Alienation, if binding on daughter's son as reversioner.

It is very difficult under the Hindu Law, to distinguish positively between sincere religious feeling and idle sentiment. All that can safely be said is that where the point is doubtful and where there is not the slightest suspicion of ulterior motive or fraud, the benefit of the doubt should be given to religious feeling. It is not for a Court of law to disparage the pious acts of devout people.

Under Hindu Law, a daughter's son who offers the funeral oblation is particularly worthy of honour. Consequently, where a widow who is in possession of her deceased husband's estate alienates a part of the estate, to defray debts contracted for family expenses and thread and marriage ceremonies of her daughter's son, the latter act being done as an act conducive to the spiritual welfare of her deceased husband, and not through any compelling necessity, and there was no suggestion of undue extravagence or of fraud: the alienation is binding on the daughter's son as a reversioner In such cases the test is whether the expenditure was reasonable according to the common notions of Hindus. Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari Lal (2) relied on.

L. P. A. against the decree of Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., dated October 7, 1929.

Mr. P. Satayanarayana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Lakshmanna, for the Respondents.

Judgment.- One Lakshmayya died leaving a widow (defendant No. 2) and daughter Subbamma, mother of two sons defendant No. 3 and plaintiff, who are the nearest reversioners to Lakshmayya's estate. On November 20, 1918, with the assent of defendant No. 3, the widow, defendant No. 2, sold a parcel of the estate for Rs. 1,500 for debts contracted for family expenses and the thread and marriage ceremonies of the plaintiff. Four years later the plaintiff with more sense of humour than of decency sued to invalidate this sale on the ground that the estate had been dissipated for improper purposes. The District Munsif decreed, the Subordinate Judge dismissed, and this Court decreed the suit; and it now comes up for final decision with the vendee as appellant. The facts as stated above are not in dispute. The elder brother's participation in the transaction has precluded any question of fraud, and there is the plain first issue:

"Whether the suit alienation in favour of defendant No. 1 was made for legal necessity and for purposes binding on defendant No. 3 and plaintiff;" ?

Defendant No. 3 and plaintiff were not so indigent as to be dependent upon their grandmother, and it cannot be said that her giving them this help was an act of compelling necessity. The question is whether the act was conducive to the spiritual welfare of Lakshmayya when admittedly it would be justifiable. That this is a question which admits of no simple answer is clear not only from the conflict of decisions in the reported cases, but from this case itself; for it so happens that we have on this very case the opinion of two learned Judges of this Court, either of whom we should have been prepared unhesitatingly to follow in a matter of Hindu Law, cf., the judgment under appeal and the comment upon it in Mallayya v. Bapi Reddi (1). An ancient text of Brihaspathi runs:

"A widow inheriting her husband's estate should honour with food and presents . . . . a daughter's son."

As pointed out in Mallayya v. Bapi Reddi (1) at p. 44* it is the daughter's son who offers the funeral oblation, and who therefore is particularly worthy of honour. Mr. Lakshmanna argues that this is mere sentiment, but it is just here that the line of cleavage appears. Who is to distinguish positively between sincere religious feeling and idle sentiment? All that can safely be said is that where the point is doubtful and where there is not the slightest suspicion of ulterior motive or fraud, the benefit of the doubt should be given to religious feeling. It is not for a Court of law to disparage the pious acts of devout people. And this principle has been followed by the Judicial Committee. In Sardar Singh v. Kunj Bihari Lal (2), an alienation by a widow was being considered where its avowed object was to offer food to an idol and the following passage from Vuppuluri Tatayya v Ramakrishnamma (3) at p. 291† was quoted with approval:

"We think we are warranted in holding that if the property sold or gifted bears a small proportion (which it is impossible to define more exactly) to the estate inherited, and the occasion of the (disposition or) expenditure is reasonable and proper according to the common notions of the Hindus, it is justifiable and cannot be impeached by the reversioner."

And the Judicial Committee proceeds:

"In the present case the purpose for which the alienation was made was undoubtedly not for the performance . . . . of any such duty as might be regarded as obligatory under the Hindu Law. But at the same time there can be no question that it was a pious act."

And accordingly the alienation was allowed. The quantitative ratio approved in this judgment is not, at first sight, easy to understand. If a small gift to an idol is conducive to the husband's spiritual bliss, would not a larger gift be still more conducive? Probably human nature being what it is, Courts are not prepared to sanction transactions which offend ordinary common sense and good husbandry. If a widow devotes the whole of her estate to an idol, there may be suspicion of fraud or undue influence. In our present case there is no suggestion of undue extravagance, and it must be remembered that the quantitative ratio works in both directions. Her pious duty for her husband's satisfaction is to honour the daughter's son, and some meagre gift for his ceremonies which would only make him ridiculous in the eyes of the neighbours would not fulfil this obligation. It may be taken then that the quantum of this alienation is reasonable, and one need not embark on an argument as to whether feeding an idol is or is not more meritorious than honouring a daughter's son. Both involve an expenditure "reasonable according to the common notions of Hindus," and that is sufficient justificatian for the impugned sale.

In the judgment under appeal, it is stated "we have here no purpose connected with the husband's spiritual welfare" a proposition which we should not think of questioning as an authoritative statement of Hindu doctrine, but we are not so much concerned with what is the correct doctrine as with "the common notions of the Hindus." The pious endeavour of this widow to promote her husband's spiritual bliss by honouring his daughter's son may, for aught we know, in its result, fall short of her intention; but so long as she acted with piety and in consonance with prevalent notions, we do not think it incumbent upon us to interfere any more than the Judicial Committee interfered with the gift to the idol. No doubt there is much conflict in the authorities as observed by our late Chief Justice in Srinivasa Raghavachariar v Rajagopalachariar (4) and little will be gained by attempting to piece them together into coherent pattern, for instance, discussing whether if a daughter's daughter may be honoured at marriage, the same does or does not apply to a son and so on. We prefer to base our judgment simply upon Sardar Singh v Kunj Bihari Lal (2) with the satisfaction that substantial justice has been done, and the result is not, as is candidly admitted in the judgment under review, one which a Court of law would like to avoid. The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

BISHUN PRASAD SINGH AND OTHERS— RESPONDENTS

Minor—Persons dealing with property of minor—Law applicable—Bona fide lender—Certificate from District Judge—When can be got and relied on—Guardian acting under authority from District Judge—Stranger purchasing minor's property from guardian—When entitled to protection—Alienation setting aside of—Burden of proof—Fraud—Sale, when can be impugned on ground of fraud—Appeal—Findings of trial Court should not be disturbed unless manifestly incorrect.

The ordinary law applicable to those who deal with the property of a person under disability is that he must make a proper inquiry to satisfy himself (a) that there is legal necessity for the money and (b) that there is a necessity for the loan or sale to produce that money. A bona fide lender or purchaser may satisfy this obligation to inquire by demanding from the borrower or vendor a certificate from the District Judge that the money is required for a legitimate purpose and sanctioning the loan or sale to supply the need certified. But if he is already aware or has materials in his possession which reasonably put him on inquiry, he is not entitled to substitute the opinion of the Judge in place of his own opinion. Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (1), followed. [p. 83, col. 1.]

A stranger purchasing from a guardian acting under authority from the District Judge, would be entitled to every protection from Courts so long as it is not shown that he acted in a fraudulent or collusive manner, knowing that the debts for the liquidation of which the purchase-money would be applied were not debts lawfully binding on the minor. The burden of proof would, in such a case, lie heavily on any one seeking to set aside such an alienation. But where the purchasers were themselves the creditors of the family whose debts it was the object of the alienations to liquidate, inasmuch as they have the means of satisfying a Court as to the origin and nature of those debts and how they are binding on the minor, the burden of proof is shifted on their shoulders as soon as the plaintiff has established a prima facie case. Sikher Chand v. Dulputty Singh (2), followed. [p. 83, cols. 1 & 2.]

In order that a sale may be impugned on the ground of fraud, knowledge on the part of the purchaser or reasonable notice to him, should be established as a fact. Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (1), followed. [p. 86, cols. 1 & 2.]

An appeal is not in the nature of a re-hearing. Where the Judge has heard the evidence and come to his own conclusion, that finding should not be disturbed in appeal unless it is manifestly incorrect. [p. 84, col. 1.]

Messrs. Khurshaid Husnain, N. K. Prasad II, H. R. Kazimi and Rajani K. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—These appeals arise out of a suit by the plaintiffs who, at the time of the transactions in question, were minors to set aside alienations by the mother of the plaintiffs who was their certificated guardian acting under the directions of the District Judge. Appeal No. 265 is by a group of defendants (Nos. 8 to 11), Appeal No. 33 is by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. These defendants also stand in the place of defendant No. 4 who has transferred her rights to them. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 have not appealed against the decree setting aside the alienations in their favour and defendant No. 7 is in a similar position. Defendant No. 12 is a relative of the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge found, and there has been no appeal from his finding, that this defendant colluded with or controlled the mother of the plaintiffs, and that with a single exception, the alienations in question were for the purpose of satisfying his debts for which the estate of the plaintiff was in no way liable.

We have to deal with two separate appeals, and I approach first the case of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 which is the subject-matter of First Appeal No. 33 of 1931. Certain points, however, in common with both cases must first be related. The family to which the plaintiffs and defendant No. 12 belonged are the descendants of Babu Dayal Narain Singh. This man had two sons, the elder Parmeshwar Nath Singh, who in turn was the father of Babu Basdeo Prasad Singh. Basdeo died in the year 1910 leaving a widow Musammat Deolochan Kuar and two sons who are the plaintiffs, Babu Bishun Prasad Singh, plaintiff No. 1 and Babu Paraspat Prasad Singh, plaintiff No. 2 who is still a minor. The younger son of Dayal Narain Singh was named Keshonath Singh and he was the father of Jagdeo Prasad Singh, who is defendant No. 12. The widow of Babu Basdeo Prasad was appointed by the District Judge guardian of the two minor plaintiffs, Jagdeo Prasad, defendant No. 12, was the sole adult member of the family. It has been decided by the Subordinate Judge, and the finding is accepted by these defendants, that in point of fact Jagdeo was separate from Besdeo and his branch of the family. It is true that they lived in the same house and that Jagdeo seems to have transacted the family business both on account of his own share and that of the minors and his conduct was such that outsiders might well have believed that he was in fact joint with the minors and the karta of the family.

In the case of defendant Nos. 1, 2 and 3 two sale-deeds in their favour are impeached by the plaintiffs. The first (Ex. SS) is dated August 1, 1918. The transferors are defendant No. 12 and the widow as mother and Court guardian of the minor plaintiffs. It recites that Jagdeo and the minors are members of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara Law; it recites that certain debts are due by the family to the defendants (these will be dealt with later) and it recites that the permission of the District Judge had been obtained to raise money to pay off these debts and for the sale, for a consideration of Rs. 10,000—of, a 4 annas share in a village named Simra and a 4 annas share in another village named Lerua. In point of fact the deceased Basdeo and Jagdeo had between them owned the entire proprietary interest in these villages each having 8 annas. It is noteworthy that on the same date the same defendants took zarpeshgi (Ex. M) from Jagdeo. This zarpeshgi is executed by Jagdeo alone; he purports to execute the deed as karta of the joint family of which he states that he and the minor were members. He recites that he and the minors were in urgent need of money for paying certain debts which are specified and will also be referred to and mortgaged 7 annas out of the entire 16 annas in Mauza Lerua which is recited as the milkiat interest in possession of Jagdeo and the minors of the joint family, so that, whereas under the deed impeached the share of the minors is recited as separate from the share of Jagdeo and the guardian is, therefore, brought in as a necessary party on their behalf, in this deed on the very same date the same transferees treat the property as undivided and treat Jagdeo as the karta of the family and entitled to deal with it. These two methods of treating Jagdeo are entirely inconsistent. The defendants seek shelter under the order of the District Judge by which the sale was sanctioned and certain debts were allowed to be paid out of the purchase money as binding upon the minors.

Now, the Subordinate Judge has found, and it is not denied by the defendants, that some of the debts were owned to the defendants who are, therefore, creditor-purchasers. It is also clear that the directions of the District Judge with regard to the sale were not strictly followed. Furthermore, many of the debts were clearly incurred by Jagdeo not only after the death of Basdeo but after the appointment of the guardian and could not possibly, therefore, have been binding on the estate of the minors. These defendants do not attempt to disturb the finding of the Subordinate Judge that Jagdeo acted fraudulently towards the minors by saddling the minors' estate with his personal debts and further they admit that the order of the District Judge appointing the mother as guardian and sanctioning the sale in question was obtained at their instigation. Not only are these facts found, but all the debts recited in the deed (with the exception of the first) towards the satisfaction of which the purchase money was devoted do not appear in the schedule of debts upon which the petition for sanction was obtained.

The argument on behalf of the defendants is that they were entitled to rest upon the sanction of the District Judge. One of the debts which was discharged by the defendants out of the purchase money was a mortgage by Jagdeo, dated May 9, 1915, to the defendants themselves to secure a loan of Rs. 4,500 on the security of his separate 8 annas share in Mauza Simra and his 8 annas share in Mauza Lerua, and it is argued that the bona fide of the defendants in taking a sale of the minor's interest is evidenced by their abandonment of their undoubted right to enforce this mortgage against the separate share of Jagdeo in favour of a sale of the minors' interest and a weakening of their position and by the fact that in certain litigation in the year 1929, to which all the parties were then parties, it had been held that Jagdeo and the minors were joint. It is contended that defendants were justified in assuming their jointness. In my opinion, in view of the fact that the defendants were old creditors of Jagdeo and in view of the fact that they themselves insisted on the appointment of the guardian, they were, if not parties to the frauds by Jagdeo on the minors, certainly possessed of information which should have put them on their guard. It is true that the sanction of the District Judge gives a certain measure of protection to the lendor of money or the purchaser of a property of a minor. The ordinary law applicable to those who deal with the property of a person under disability is that he must make a proper inquiry to satisfy himself (a) that there is legal necessity for the money, and (b) that there is a necessity for the loan or sale to produce that money. A bona fide lender or purchaser may satisfy this obligation to inquire by demanding from the borrower or vendor a certificate from the District Judge that the money is required for a legitimate purpose and sanctioning the loan or sale to supply the need certified. But if he is already aware or has materials in his possession which reasonably put him on inquiry, he is not entitled to substitute the opinion of the Judge in place of his own opinion. This was made clear by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (1):

"Their Lordships think that when an order of the Court has been authorizing the guardian of an infant to raise a loan on the security of the infant's estate, the lendor of the money is entitled to trust to that order and that he is not bound to inquire as to the expediency or necessity of the loan for the benefit of the infant's estate. If any fraud or underhand dealing is brought home to him, that would be a different matter, but apart from any charge of that kind, their Lordships think that he is entitled to rest upon the order."

In that case the Court had sanctioned a loan of a certain amount but had omitted to state the rate of interest. The plaintiff had lent money at 18 per cent. The Court held that the order could not be construed at extending further than a permission to borrow money at a reasonable rate of interest and having held that 12 per cent. was a reasonable rate, they decided that the plaintiff was entitled to recover interest at that rate only. In Sikher Chand v. Dulputty Singh (2), at p. 371*. the plaintiffs were a firm of money lenders (as in the case before us) who were sued by the minors to set aside sales by a certificated guardian acting under the orders of the Court of the District Judge. The learned Judge said:

"It cannot be denied that a stranger purchasing from a guardian acting under authority from the District Judge under s. 18, Act XL of 1858, would be entitled to every protection from our Courts so long as it is not shown that he acted in a fraudulent or collusive manner, knowing that the debts for the liquidation of which the purchase-money would be applied were not debts lawfully binding on the minor. The burden of proof would, in such a case, lie heavily on any one seeking to set aside such an alienation. But where as in the present case, the purchasers were themselves the creditors of the family whose debts it was the object of these alienations to liquidate, it appears to me that inasmuch as they have the means of satisfying a Court as to the origin and nature of those debts and how they are binding on the minor the burden of proof is shifted on their shoulders as soon as the plaintiff has established a prima facie case.

We should not in such a case exact from a plaintiff the same amount of proof as in the case first put. In every one of the cases now before us, the defendants are either the actual purchasers or their heirs. In some of these cases the defendants are men of business, money-lenders or bankers who may not unreasonably be considered to have at hand evidence of the nature just stated. They may have paid some money in these transactions, but the question before us is whether they made sufficient and proper inquiry or had means of knowing whether the money was to be applied in payment of debts for which the minor's estate was liable."

To my mind this case is directly in point and the principle enunciated is clearly applicable. It was argued on behalf of the defendants that equity demanded that if we should be disposed to set aside the sale, we should restore the position of the defendants as mortgagees in respect of the debt which the sale was intended to discharge and it was contended that as the mortgagors had sold a portion of the security, such equitable condition was no longer possible. To this contention the answer in my opinion; is that it is only a bona fide purchaser who is entitled to equitable consideration. The defendants abandoned their security under circumstances which entitled them to no protection. If they should have any remedy in respect of the mortgage money they may pursue it in such manner as they may be advised but we cannot restore their position as mortgagees, nor are they entitled to any equitable condition upon an order which we must make setting aside this transaction.

These defendants are also concerned with a second deed (Ex. II (e), dated May 14, 1934, which also was executed with the sanction of the District Judge. This was a sale by the mother-guardian of the minors of a 1 anna share out of the 4 annas belonging to the minors in Mauza Simra to one Musammat Sahodra Kuer (defendant No. 4) for a consideration of Rs. 1,575. The interest of this defendant had been bought up by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and she is no longer before the Court. The matter to be investigated is the title of Musammat Sahodra Kuer as a purchaser. The position of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 with regard to this deed is no better and no worse than that of defendant No. 4, had she still been contesting the case. It was contended on the evidence that this was really a benami transaction behind which stood the present defendants. Even if that were the case, it would be necessary to consider the tansaction on its own merits. The sale to Musammat Sahodra Kuer, which was sanctioned by the District Judge was to raise money and to pay off a debt due to one Raja Lal and this money had been required to finance the marriage of a daughter of Basdeo, a sister of the minors. It is clear that if there was such a daughter and if the marriage in fact took place, it was a debt for which the estate of the minors could be made liable, the marriage of a daughter being a matter of family necessity. As to the marriage, it took place if at all in the year 1922. The plaintiffs contend that in fact they only had one sister who was married before the death of her father. We have little doubt on the evidence that there was in fact a daughter who was in fact married about the year 1910 and the conflict upon the evidence has turned upon the question of whether there was a second daughter who was married in 1922. The learned Judge came to the conclusion, on the evidence that the plaintiffs' story was true that there never had been a second daughter and that of any marriage did take place in the year 1922, it was of the daughter of Jagdeo and that Jagdeo raised the money for that purpose and appropriated it to his own use.

I am well aware that an appeal is not in the nature of a rehearing. The Judge heard the evidence and came to his own conclusion and we should not disturb that finding unless it is manifestly incorrect. The impression on my own mind is that his finding was mistaken and that in fact there was a marriage in the year 1922 and that notwithstanding the denial of the widow of Basdeo she had in fact two daughters, the marriage of the second of whom was the subject of this loan. But whatever be the correct view of the facts and whether or not Jagdeo was a party to a fraud upon the minors, the question still remains as to whether the knowledge of the fraud or information sufficient to put them on their guard has been brought home to the defendants. To this part of the question the learned Judge has devoted very little attention. They could hardly be expected to know of the precise number of the female relatives of the minors. It is clear that Jagdeo, notwithstanding the separate nature of his interest had been behaving in a manner which might reasonably lead outsider to believe that he was at any rate the man of affairs employed by the widow who lived within the pardah. Even if the whole story of Jagdeo was untrue as to the identity of the girl who was to be married, the knowledge of the false identity cannot be imputed to the defendants and the position is not altered even if we held as the plaintiffs contended that the defendants had actually paid off the debt of Raja Lal and had bought up the interest of the purchaser Musammat Sahodra Kuer. In my opinion the case against these defendants in respect of (Ex. 11 (e) fails and the order of the Subordinate Judge setting it aside must be discharged. The consideration of these two matters concludes the case of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Their appeal is allowed as to Ex. 11 (e) and is dismissed with regard to Ex. SS. Exhibit SS is the most serious part of the case and on this part of the case t ey have lost. To my mind the fairest way of dealing with the costs is that the order for costs awarded by the Subordinate Judge as against these defendants will stand, but there will be no order for costs of this appeal.

Appeal No. 265 is by defendants Nos. 8 to 11. The plaintiffs seek to set aside a sale-deed (Ex. R), dated March 11, 1927, by which Jagdeo sold to these defendants 7 annas of Mauza Bhagli Khurd bearing tauzi Nos. 2779 and 2803. In this case the defendants were creditors either of Jagdeo or of the minors. They actually advanced cash and discharged with the purchase money liabilities which are undoubtedly the liabilities which were contemplated by the District Judge when he sanctioned the sale. The appointment of the mother as guardian long preceded the execution of the sale-deed and there was no evidence of earlier transactions between Jagdeo and these defendants which would give reasonable cause to the defendants to doubt the validity of the sanction given by the District Judge. The 16 annas in the tauzis was as to annas 8 owned by Jagdeo and annas 8 belonged to the plaintiffs. The scheme originally sanctioned was subsequently slightly modified. It is true that the Subordinate Judge has found and there is no appeal against that finding that certain of the debts which were sanctioned by the Judge and were discharged with the purchase money were debts which were not binding on the estate of the minors, and it may well be that Jagdeo perpetrated a fraud upon the minors.

The sanction was obtained as a result of an application for permission which was numbered as permission case No. 80 of 1916 in the file of the District Judge and a number of debts were scheduled to the application dated August 25, 1914, amounting in all to about Rs. 24,000.

The particular sale, however, with which we are concerned, realized only a portion of the amount required to satisfy the total indebtedness. It is, therefore, clear that the whole of the debts could not be paid off out of the purchase money. The third item on the list was undoubtedly a debt of Jagdeo's due to Gobind Lal and this debt was discharged out of the purchase money and accounted for Rs. 6,952 out of the total purchase money. It was a mortgage on the very property which the purchaser was acquiring and by its payment the minor's estate was relieved of the interest. Item Nos. 15, 16 and 17 were handnotes. The creditor had taken a mortgage bond in place of these handnotes, so that the debts instead of being secured by the handnotes were secured by the mortgage bond, and the property mortgaged was the very property which the purchaser was about to acquire, that is to say village Bhagli. The defendants applied part of the purchase money towards the payment of this mortgage bond. That the debt secured by the mortgage bond is identical with that secured by the handnotes is clear and in fact the defendants received the handnotes as one of the terms of the discharge of the mortgage. Similarly, Item No. 14, a debt to one Banwari Lal secured by a handnote, has been substituted by a mortgage of village Bhagli executed by Jagdeo and this was also paid off by the defendants. They can hardly be blamed for selecting such of the debts as were burdens upon the property they were about to pay purchase for payment. They also paid a sum of Rs. 534 in cash. This sum seems to have been paid to Jagdeo, but it is hardly fair to demand that the defendants should pay this directly into the hands of a pardah-nashin woman, and having regard to Jagdeo's conduct and the way in which he was allowed to manage the lady's affairs, it was not unreasonable for the defendants to accept him as her man of business even if he were not the karta of the family The balance of the purchase money. Rs. 1,070 was employed by the purchasers in the discharge of a mortgage by Jagdeo in favour of Musammat Sahodra Kuer of 2 annas in Mauza Bhagli, the subject of the sale-deed to the defendants.

It is true that another piece of property, the precise nature of which was not clear, was also mortgaged. This mortgage is not part of the scheduled debts, but I do not think that the defendants can be blamed for discharging it, nor can it be inferred from the payment of this particular mortgage that the defendants had any reasonable warning of fraud which Jagdeo was perpetrating upon the minors. Moreover, the accounts had to be filed as a term of the Judge's sanction and there is no evidence that the devotion of this part of the purchase money was made the subject of comment. Upon the evidence, it is perfectly clear that before this transaction there had been no business of any kind between these defendants and the plaintiff, nor were any questions put to the principal defendant as to any participation by him in Jagdeo's fraud. Whatever be the position of the mother under the Judge's direction, Jagdeo was the de facto guardian of the minors. Jagdeo has all along been looking after her affairs, and although there was no evidence as to his present activities, there is no indication that the plaintiffs have repudiated him or that he is not still in the closest relation with them. It is true that only Item No. 3 in the petition is a genuine debt binding on the minors: it is true also that the names of the executants of the deeds creating the other debts are not given in the petition, but the defendants cannot be held to blame for this. The burden of showing that the defendants have acted dishonestly has not been discharged, and in the absence of evidence to that effect, it is of no avail to the plaintiffs to show that they were defrauded by Jagdeo.

The plaintiffs also seek to avoid a sale (Ex. Q) to these defendants of a 1 anna share in Mauza Bhagli effected on November 22, 1922, for a consideration of Rs. 1,503. There had been an original proposal to raise a sum of Rs. 5,000—Rs. 2,500 by sale and Rs. 2,500 by loan. The Judge had sanctioned the sale but the amount of the loan had been drastically reduced. The sale-deed in question is executed by the widow in favour of the principal defendant She recites the authority of the District.

Judge and recites the previous sale of March 11, 1917, by herself jointly with Jagdeo of 7 annas in Mauza Bhagli as joint property and further recites her need of Rs. 1,500 for the marriage of her daughter, and the sale of the 1 anna share in Bhagli is said to be effected for that purpose. She acknowledges receipt of the Rs. 1,500 at the time of the marriage of her daughter. Her explanation of this transaction is that she knew nothing of it and signed whatever Jagdeo put before her and that she never received the purchase money. It is clear that the money was paid to Jagdeo, who in fact gave receipts; but here again the defendant could hardly be expected to force his way into the presence of the lady and there was nothing dishonest in paying it into the hands of Jagdeo, whether or not there was a daughter and whether or not a fraud was played by Jagdeo on the minors, there is no evidence whatever of any complicity by these defendants or any of them in that fraud. Nor in spite of his ultimate conclusion does the judgment of the learned Judge contain an indication of the evidence upon which he holds the defendant responsible. The judgment extends to about 70 printed pages and is certainly a monument of conscientious industry, but the case would have been much shortened and the labours of the Judge much lightened if he had held clearly in his mind the burden of proof which rested on the shoulders of the plaintiffs. Had he done this, he might have dealt with the case in a comparatively brief manner.

In discussing the preliminary point whether, even assuming that Jagdeo was a fraudulent person, either of the two sets of defendants could reasonably be expected to have knowledge or notice of his conduct. An attempt was made on behalf of the plaintiffs to argue that even in the event of the defendants being held to be entirely innocent, the sale must be set aside because the consent of the District Judge, had been obtained by fraud, although it was conceded that in such case the defendants might be entitled to an order in their favour imposing equitable conditions. But I have been unable to find any authority which would justify this argument and indeed the judgment of the Privy Council in Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (1), above referred to, indicates clearly that for a sale to be impugned knowledge on the part of, or reasonable notice to the purchaser, must be established as a fact.

In my opinion, the appeal of defendants Nos. 8 to 11 must be allowed with costs throughout. There was an application in Civil Revision No. 506 of 1930 by the plaintiffs relating to the matter of costs. It has no merit and is of no importance in view of the decision in the appeals. But it was not made a matter of argument and will be dismissed, but without costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 41—Whether applies to auction-purchasers.

The transfer referred to in s. 41, Transfer of Property Act, must be a voluntary transfer which is effected by an act of the ostensible owner. It is not, therefore, applicable to an auction-purchaser. Mangat Lal v. Ghasi Khan (1), followed.

L. P. A. from an order of Niamatullah, J. dated July 26, 1932.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Appellants.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs appeal under the Letters Patent from a judgment of a learned Judge of this Court reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

It appears that one Inayat Khan and his three brothers were entitled to 5-6th share in a village, the remaining 1-6th belonged to a lady. Instead of mortgaging his 1-4th out of the 5-6th, Inayat Khan made a mortgage of 1-4th share in the village to the present plaintiffs. This came to about 17 bighas odd and the remaining 1-4th of 1-6th came to about 2 bighas. Subsequently a sale-deed was taken from the lady in the names of the sons of Inayat Khan and their wives whose names were entered in the revenue papers. The defendants, in execution of a money decree against the sons and their wives, got 1-4th of 1-6th share belonging to the lady attached and put up for sale, and they purchased it themselves. Now, the plaintiffs have brought this suit for sale on the basis of their mortgage-deed and wish to enforce the security against the extra share, namely,

1-4th of 1-6th which had been included in the mortgage, but which at that time did not belong to Inayat Khan. In the plaint there was no reference to s. 43, Transfer of Property Act, and accordingly there was no issue on this point, but the point appears to have been pressed before the trial Court which went into the question. The point was again considered by the lower Appellate Court and the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were entitled to enforce their equitable right under s. 43 against the defendants auction-purchasers. On appeal a learned Judge of this Court felt that the question of s. 43 being a mixed question of law and fact ought to be investigated. He accordingly sent down two issues to the Court below for determination with liberty to the parties to produce fresh evidence. The findings returned by the lower Appellate Court were to the effect that Inayat Khan was the real owner and that his sons and their wives were mere benamidars and that the plaintiffs were entitled to enforce their rights against the defendants.

The learned Judge of this Court, on the basis of these findings, came to the conclusion that in spite of them the suit should fail as regards this extra share. The basis of this decision is that the word "transferee" in the proviso to s. 43 is wide enough to cover an auction-purchaser and that therefore the present defendants who purchased the property for consideration and in good faith and without notice of this equitable charge are protected. He further expressed the opinion that the defendants, having purchased the supposed interests of the benamidars who were the ostensible owners of the property with the implied consent of Inayat Khan, are entitled to protection on account of Inayat Khan's conduct. In appeal it is urged before us that neither s. 41 nor the proviso to s. 43 can apply to an auction-purchaser.

It is significant to point out that the preamble to the Transfer of Property Act, suggests that it was to define and amend certain parts of the law relating to transfer of property by act of parties that the Transfer of Property Act was passed. Section 2 (d) also indicates that nothing in the Act is to affect any transfer by operation of law, or by or in execution of, a decree or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction save as provided by s. 57 and Chap. IV of the Act. Both ss. 41 and 43 are based on the principle of estoppel where, on a representation made by one party and acted upon by another, the rights of the latter are prejudiced so as to enable him to the benefit of the principle of estoppel as against the other. It may therefore be very doubtful whether the word "transferees" in the proviso to s. 43 would expressly cover an auction-purchaser. But we think that in this particular case it is not necessary to express any final opinion on this point.

The defendants are auction-purchasers of the right, title and interest of Inayat Khan's sons and their wives. They are not people who have taken a voluntary transfer from the ostensible owners. Indeed they made the purchase without the consent, and it may well be, against the will of their judgment-debtors. Inayat Khan no doubt had put his sons and their wives in possession and was holding them out to be ostensible owers to the world. But the defendants have not acquired rights by virtue of any act directly done by these ostensible owners, but have acquired the property under an involuntary or compulsory sale and therefore prima facie against the will or at any rate without the consent of these ostensible owners.

Section 41, Transfer of Property Act, applies to a case where the true owner allows his benamidar to remain in possession of the property as an ostensible owner and to deal with it as full owner. Where such ostensible owner "transfers" property to a person who takes it in good faith after having taken reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, the transaction binds the true owner. But obviously the transfer spoken of in s. 41 must be a voluntary transfer which is affected by an act of the ostensible owner. On this point there is a direct authority of this Court, namely, Mangat Lal v. Ghasi Khan (1), which does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judge of this Court. The learned Judges were of opinion that in view of the language of s. 41 it would not be applicable to auction-purchasers.

It is also equally clear that the Bench did not think that any general principle underlying s. 41 would be applicable to auction-purchasers. Indeed it is difficult to see how such a principle would be applicable, because auction-purchasers are not expected to take any reasonable care to ascertain that the judgment-debtor has any power to make the transfer. They merely purchase the right, title and interest if any, of the judgment-debtor which are put up for sale and take a certain amount of risk in bidding for the property.

We are, therefore, of opinion that even if either the proviso to s. 43 or any principle underlying that section were applicable to an auction-purchaser like the defendants-respondents, that principle is of no avail to them because they have not taken the property from Inayat Khan himself, but purchased at auction the rights and interest of his sons and wives, who were his benamidars and who are now found to have no title. They are not entitled to the protection afforded by s. 41, Transfer of Property Act, nor by any principle on which that section is based. We must, therefore, allow this appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court restore that of the lower Appellate Court. In view of the fact that the plea of s. 43 was not raised in the plaint, but relied upon by the plaintiffs, and an issue had to be remanded and fresh evidence recorded, we direct that the parties do bear their own costs of both the hearings in this Court.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145—Period of sixty days—When begins to run—Dispute as to possession of immovable property—Proceeding under s 145 should be preferred to that under s. 144.

The period of sixty days referred to in s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code begins to run from the date on which the notices are issued. Thomson v. Emperor (1), referred to.

Held, that on the materials before the Court that it would not interfere after the order had spent itself.

Where the dispute is with regard to possession of immovable property, a proceeding under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a poor substitute for a proceeding under s. 145 which settles once for all so far as the Criminal Courts are concerned, the question of possession with regard to a particular piece of immovable property. Such cases should be decided under s. 145.

Cr. R. from an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Jehanabad, dated December 6, 1934.

Mr. Raj Kishore Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This petition is against an order under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure made against the present petitioner who was the first party before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jehanabad. On November 24, 1934, notices were issued against both the parties restraining them from going into the disputed plot and to show cause, if any, by December 6, 1934. The parties shewed cause on December 6, but the Magistrate passed the order against which the present petitioner has moved this Court.

It would be clear on the authority of the case reported in Thomson v. Emperor (1) that the period of sixty days begins to run from the date on which the notices are issued. Therefore by to-day the sixty days have expired. Although in certain cases where the High Courts found that the party against whom the order was passed was seriously prejudiced, they interfered with the order under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure even after the expiry of the period of sixty days. But in this case on the materials before me I am not in a position to hold that the case is such as to call for the interference of this Court after the expiry of sixty days. Reading the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jehanabad it seems that the dispute is with regard to the possession of a plot of land No. 2776 in village Kamta. Both the parties have filed documents and were content to make their submissions through their Pleaders. In a case of this kind where the dispute is with regard to possession of immovable property a proceeding under s. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a poor substitute for a proceeding under s. 144 which settles once for all so far as the Criminal Courts are concerned, the question of possession with regard to a particular piece of immovable property. Although I am not prepared to interfere or set aside the order under s. 144 as it has spent itself, I am clearly of opinion that in case any future dispute arises, this case should be decided under s. 145.

The application is dismissed.

The expression "cross-objection" is clearly indicative of the fact that it should be directed against the appellant, but it may be taken against a co-respondent also, if there is a community of interest between the latter and the appellant. When the cross-objection is directed solely against a co-respondent, whose case has nothing in common with that of the appellant but proceeds on the same grounds on which the appeal does, it is not maintainable. Co-operative Hindustan Bank v. Surendra Nath De (1), Nursey Virji v. *Alfred H. Mr. Mushtaq Ahmed, for the Applicant.

Messrs. A. M. Khwaja, G. S. Pathak and Krishna Murari Lal, for the Opposite Parties.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Objection.

Judgment.—This is a cross-objection filed by one of the defendants-respondents in an appeal which has been compromised between the appellant and the plaintiff-respondents. A preliminary objection has been taken by the plaintiffs-respondents that the cross-objections which are directed solely against them are not maintainable under O. XLI, r. 22, Civil Procedure Code. To appreciate the arguments addressed to us, it is necessary to bear in mind the following facts. The property in dispute is village Tewar Khas. It belonged to one Muhammad Husain who had a son Ahmad Husain and three daughters, only two of whom need be mentioned, namely, Bashiruzzaman Bibi and Shaukatuzzaman Bibi. Muhammad Husain executed a deed of gift in favour of his son Ahmad Husain sometime in 1883. Not long afterwards he instituted a suit for the cancellation of that deed. The principal defendant was his son Ahmad Husain, the donee. The controversy was referred to an arbitration by a common friend whose award dated September 13, 1884, was made a rule of the Court by decree dated November 13, 1884. The award provided that Muhammad Husain would remain in possession of village Tiwar Khas, that after his death Ahmad Husain would become the owner thereof but would have no power of transfer and would be bound to allow the property to descend upon his own heirs unfettered by any encumbrances created by himself. Ahmad Husain was made liable to pay Rs. 30 a month to each of his two sisters Shaukatuzzaman Bibi and Bashiruzzaman Bibi. Muhammad Husain died in 1886. Ahmad Husain who entered into possession made default in payment of the monthly allowance which he was bound to pay under the award and the decree of 1884.

His sisters instituted suit for arrears of their allowance in 1892. The dispute between the brother and sisters was referred to arbitration. The award which was again made a rule of the Court directed that the village Tewar Khas be made over to one of the two sisters, namely, Bashiruzzaman Bibi who should pay herself the monthly allowance and thereafter the monthly allowance of her sister Shaukatuzzaman Bibi. If any surplus was left, the same was to be paid to Ahmad Husain. The award was given effect to and Bashiruzzaman Bibi was placed in possession of village Tewar Khas. In 1910 Shaukatuzzaman Bibi made a simple mortgage of her interest in village Tewar Khas to Asfandayar Beg who has since died and is now represented by his son Husain Yar Beg. In 1912 Asfandayar Beg enforced his mortgage and had the rights of Shaukatuzzaman Bibi sold. He himself became the auction-purchaser. The result of this was that he became entitled to Rs. 30 a month which his mortgagor Shaukatuzzaman Bibi was entitled to receive in terms of the award of 1884. An arrangement was arrived at between the auction-purchaser Asfandayar Beg and Bashiruzzaman Bibi who was in possession of the village Tewar Khas, under which part of that village was made over to Asfandayar Beg who was to recover Rs. 30 a month from its rents and profits. The arrangement appears to have been given effect to. In 1922 Bashiruzzaman Bibi executed a deed of waqf, the particulars to which need not be stated in detail. In 1924 she executed another deed of waqf. One related to her right in that portion of the village Tewar Khas which was in possession of Asfandayar Beg. The other related to the rest of her rights in that village. By one or both of these deeds she made her daughter's daughter Musammat Sabiri Begam the present cross-objector a beneficiary entitled to receive Rs. 10 per month. Nazir Ahmad, the son of Shaukatuzzaman Bibi who had died in the meantime was made the mutwalli entitled to manage the waqf properties. Accordingly Nazir Ahmad obtained possession of that part of Tewar Khas which was not in possession of Asfandayar Beg. The plaintiffs Radha Kishan and his three brothers claim to be the auction-purchasers of the right and title and interest of Ahmad Husain. They instituted a suit against Nazir Ahmad the mutwalli, Hussain Yar Beg, the son of Asfandayar Beg, who has since died, Musammat Sabiri Begam, one of the beneficiaries under the waqf and two others. They claimed the relief of possession and mesne profits on the ground that Shaukatuzzaman Bibi and Bashiruzzaman Bibi were entitled to receive Rs. 30 a month only for life and both having died, their legal representatives by inheritance or by transfer are no longer entitled to that allowance and that the plaintiffs being the representatives in interest of Ahmad Husain, the paramount owner, are entitled to actual possession of the entire village Tewar Khas. It will appear that the plaintiffs repudiate the title of Husain Yar Beg and Sabiri Begam precisely on the same ground. Husain Yar Beg claims to derive his right partly from Shaukatuzzaman Bibi and partly from Bashiruzzaman Bibi. Sabiri Begam claims to derive title from Bashiruzzaman Bibi. The nature of the rights of Bashiruzzaman Bibi and Shaukatuzzaman Bibi as precisely identical. The suit was contested by Husain Yar Beg and Sabiri Begam on identical grounds. They pleaded that the plaintiffs acquired no interest by auction purchase because Ahmad Husain whose interest they purchased had no transferable rights. Sabiri Begam took the additional plea that she is entitled to Rs. 10 a month under the deeds of waqf of 1922 and 1924, but this plea is of no consequence as against the plaintiffs, as if the plaintiffs' rights prevail—and they can prevail only of Shaukatuzzaman Bibi and Bashiruzzaman Bibi had only life interest—the deeds of waqf lapsed on their deaths and Sabiri Begam ceased to be entitled to anything thereunder. If on the other hand the plaintiffs' rights do not prevail for the alleged reason that their predecessor-in title Ahmad Husain had no transferable right, their suit should be dismissed and it would not be necessary to adjudicate on Musammat Sabiri Begam's additional plea. The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiffs' suit in its entirety. The mutwalli Nazir Ahmad did not appeal nor did Musammat Sabiri. Husain Yar Beg preferred appeal which was numbered as F. A. No. 421 of 1932. On receipt of summons Musammat Sabiri Begam filed cross-objections which it is not disputed were filed after the expiry of the period of limitation for an appeal by her against the decree. Husain Yar Beg and the plaintiffs entered into a compromise, the effect of which was that the former's appeal was dismissed. There only remain the cross-objections of Musammat Sabiri Begam, which, if otherwise maintainable, remain unaffected by the fact that the appeal has been dismissed.

The plaintiffs-respondents have taken the preliminary objection that in the circumstance of the case Musammat Sabiri's cross-objections which are directed against them alone are not maintainable and should be dismissed without a hearing thereof on the merits. From the narrative of the facts given above, it is clear that Musammat Sabiri Begam's cross-objections proceeded on the same grounds as Husain Yar Beg's appeal which has been dismissed. They are not, to any extent, directed against the appellant Husain Yar Beg. The position of Sabiri Begam in the litigation was such that she could very well have joined Husain Yar Beg in the appeal filed by him. They both attack the plaintiffs-respondents on the same grounds. On the one hand it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that cross-objections can be directed only against the appellant and that it is not open to one of the respondents who has preferred an appeal to file cross-objections under O. XLI, r. 22, Civil Procedure Code against his co-respondents. On the other hand it is argued on behalf of Musammat Sabiri Begam that the language of O. XLI, r. 22, is general enough to allow cross-objections by a respondent, who could have appealed from a part of the decree but had not done so. It seems to us that the correct view lies mid-way between the extreme contentions which have been put forward before us on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents and Musammat Sabiri Begam. The expression "cross-objection" is clearly indicative of the fact that it should be directed against the appellant, but it may be taken against a co-respondent also if there is a community of interest between the latter and the appellant. It is clear to us that where the cross-objection is directed solely against a co respondent, whose case has nothing in common with that of the appellant but proceeds on the same grounds on which the appeal does, it is not maintainable. The case-law on the point does not militate against this view. In Co-operative Hindustan Bank v. Surendra Nath De (1) it was held that:

"A cross-objection which seeks to raise a question as between two respondents inter se and is a purely lateral attack in which the appellant is not concerned or interested, cannot be entertained in view of the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court both under the old and under the present Code."

The facts of this case were different, but the view taken is that a cross-objection unless it is directed against the appellant also is not maintainable. In Nursey Virji v. Alfred H. Harrison (2), it was held that—

"The ordinary rule is that the cross-objections provided for by O. XLI, r. 22, Civil Procedure Code are cross-objections which are aimed against an appellant from a decree of a lower Court and are not cross-objections against a co-respondent. In any case such cross-objection will not be allowed as against a co-respondent where the respondent could have preferred them by way of appeal."

In the case before us Musammat Sabiri Begam could have have not only preferred an appeal of her own but as already stated could have joined with Husain Yar Beg as appellant in the appeal which the latter filed in Official Trustee of Bengal v. Charles Joseph Smith (3) the point has been considered at great length. It was held that:

"Order XLI, r. 22 (1) in so far as it relates to a cross-objection, was provided to meet the case where a respondent, although the decree is not entirely in his favour, is content to let matters rest provided his opponent does not appeal, but who may not be willing to run the risk of having the findings in his favour varied or reversed without an opportunity of appealing against the findings which are adverse to him. The rule should ordinarily be confined to cases of cross-objections urged against the appellant, but O. XLI, r. 33, gives the Court a wide discretion, where justice requires it, that cross-objections against a co-respondent should be heard. The rule should not be invoked to enable a litigant to avoid the provisions of other statutes such as the Limitation Act or the Court Fees Act."

In Abdul Ghani v. Muhammad Fasih (4), which was decided under the Code of 1882, it was held that:

"Where it is necessary for the proper decision of an appeal before it, it is competent to an appellate Court to take into consideration objections filed under s 56 (1), Civil Procedure Code, by one of the respondents, not only as against the appellant, but, it may be, as against the co-respondents with the objector also, and to modify the decree as against them accordingly."

In that case the appeal was filed by one of the defendants who impleaded the plaintiff and a defendant who had a common interest with the appellant. The plaintiff filed cross objection which was directed against the defendant-appellant and the defendant-respondent. The question was whether the plaintiff should be allowed to impugn the decree by his cross-objections so far as it affected his co-respondent. It was observed as follows:—

"The Court of first instance had decided the suit upon a ground common to all the defendants Consequently, under s. 544, Civil Procedure Code on the appeal of only one of the defendants, the appellate Court could modify or set aside in favour of all the defendants the decree of the lower Court. The whole case was thus opened out in appeal not only as between the plaintiff and the defendant who had appealed, but also as between the plaintiff and other defendants, who had been made respondents apparently because they had not joined in the appeal. Having regard to the nature of the suit, and of the decree passed by the Court of first instance, those defendants were necessary parties to the appeal and complete justice could not be done without having them before the Court. Under the circumstances of the case they were to all intents and purposes appellants in the lower appellate Court. The objections under s. 56 (1) were preferred not only against these other defendants, the co-respondents of the plaintiff, but also against the appellant .... .. As the Court on the appeal of one of the defendants could have varied or set aside the decree in favour of all the defendants, it seems to us to be just and equitable that it should also have the power upon objections taken by the plaintiff to vary the decree against all the defendants."

It will be seen that in this case the cross-objections were directed against the defendant-appellant to the same extent as against the defendant-respondent, the cross-objector being the plaintiff who had partly succeeded in the Court of first instance. None of these cases countenances the view that cross-objection can be permitted by one respondent against another where the effect of the cross-objection, if successful, cannot be adverse to the appellant to any extent. We hold that in the circumstances of the present case, the cross-objections filed by Musammat Sabiri Begam which are directed solely against the plaintiffs-respondents are not maintainable under O. XLI, r. 22, Civil Procedure Code. Accordingly we dismiss them with costs.

Jurisdiction—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 233 (m)—Suit for recovery of amounts realisable by the Collector from a person on a requisition to the Collector by the Registrar, Co-operative Societies—Whether entertainable by Civil Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—New plea involving question of jurisdiction — Whether can be raised for first time in second appeal.

No suit can be brought into the Civil Court for recovery of an amount realisable by the Collector from a person on a requisition to the Collector by the Registrar Co-operative Societies, as that is a sum recoverable in the same manner as arrears of Land Revenue, for s. 233 (m) of the Land Revenue Act bars institution of such a suit. Abdulla v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2), relied on.

The Court of second appeal can, in the interests of justice allow to be raised for the first time a plea involving a question of jurisdiction Official Liquidator of M. E. Moola Sons, Ltd. v. Perin R. Burjorjee (1), relied on.

S. C. A. against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated July 13, 1933.

Messrs. Hakimuddin and Naziruddin, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—This is an appeal on behalf of defendant No. 1 against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, dated July 13, 1933, upholding the decree of the learned Munsif of Havali, at Lucknow, dated November 28, 1932.

The appellant is represented through a Counsel. The respondents have been served but are absent, and no body has appeared for them.

The appellant Bank obtained a decree against Ram Charan, defendant-respondent No. 2 and others for a sum of Rs. 456-5-0 and in execution of the said decree, attached a house and a gondah alleging that they belonged to Ram Charan. Bhagwan Din, father of Ram Charan, judgment-debtor filed objections under O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but they were dismissed. He then filed a regular suit in the Court of the learned Munsif, Havali, Lucknow, for a declaration that the house and the gondah belonged to him. The suit was contested by the appellant-Bank. The trial Court decreed the suit of the plaintiff with respect to the house in dispute, but dismissed it in respect of the gondah.

The Bank then appealed to the Court of the learned District Judge of Lucknow, and the appeal was decided by the learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow who dismissed it.

The appellant-Bank has now come up in appeal to this Court, and it is contended on behalf of the appellant that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit.

This point was neither raised in the written statement nor in the grounds of appeal before the learned District Judge. It is for the first time raised in this Court, but as it involves a question of jurisdiction I have in the interest of justice allowed the learned Counsel to raise the plea.

In the case of Official Liquidator of M. E. Moola Sons, Ltd. v. Perin R. Burjorjee (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down, that "when a question of law raised for the first time in a Court of last report upon the construction of a document or upon the facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting the course may be doubted when the plea cannot be disposed of without deciding nice questions of fact in considering which the Court of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the Courts below. But the course ought not in any case to be followed unless the Court is satisfied that the evidence upon which they are asked to decide establishes beyond doubt that the facts if fully investigated would have supported the new plea".

In the present case the point can be decided without entering into questions of fact.

The sole question for decisione in the appeal is whether the provisions of O. XXI, r. 58 of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable in which case the remedy of the plaintiff would be by bringing such a suit as that from which this appeal arises, or whether such a remedy is barred to him by the provisions of s. 253 (m) of the Land Revenue Act.

It is proved that Ram Charan was a member of the Co-operative Society and used to borrow money from the said Society.

Under r. 20 (1) of the Rules of the Manual for Co-operative Societies, framed by the Local Government, any dispute touching the business of a registered Society between members or persons claiming through a member, should be referred to, and decided by the Registrar, or by arbitration.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has filed with my permission, the original award accompained by an affidavit which clearly shown that the dispute was referred to the arbitration of one Pandit Gaya Prasad, who awarded against Ram Charan a sum of Rs. 456-5-0.

Under Government Notification No. 2633-1-343, dated December 4, 1919, r. 20 (13) of the Rules of the Manual for Co-operative Societies, awards of arbitrators and decision of the Registrar are enforced in the following manner;

"On a requisition to the Collector of the District made by the Registrar, all sums recoverable under the award or decision shall be recovered as if they were arrears of land revenue".

It is thus perfectly clear that the amount awarded against Ram Charan is recoverable as land revenue, under s 233 (m) of the Land Revenue Act (Act III of 1901) no person shall institute any suit or other proceedings in the Civil Court with respect to any claims connected with or arising out of, the collection of revenue, or any process enforced on account of an arrear of revenue, or on account of any sum which is by this, or any other act realisable as revenue.

It is clear that no suit can be brought into the Civil Court for recovery of an amount realisable by the Collector from a person on a requisition to the Collector by the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, as that is a sum recoverable in the same manner as arrears of Land Revenue, for s. 233 (m) of the land revenue Act bars the institution of such a suit.

The above view is supported by a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Abdulla v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2).

I, therefore, hold that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Court and allow the appeal but as this point was not raised in the pleadings, I do not award any costs to the appellant. He will bear his own costs right through.

It is only when the person is dispossessed that he can apply under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code Where no possession has been given to the decree-holders, an order under O. XXI, r. 101, cannot be passed as the Court has no jurisdiction to determine the matter in the form of an anticipatory application. Ibrahim Mullick v. Ramjadu Rakshit (1), referred to.

Where a decree has been made against the father of the petitioners the petitioners will prima facie be bound by the decree and cannot therefore be said to be persons other than the judgment-debtors within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 100.

Mr. Girindra Nath Mukharji, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This rule is directed against the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the decree-holders' application for delivery of possession.

The question is whether the Court had jurisdiction to determine the matter in the form in which the matter came before it. It purported to be an application by persons other than the judgment-debtors under O. XXI, r. 100. In the first instance it is quite clear that if the application was properly maintainable under O. XXI, r. 100, the order which the Judge had jurisdiction to make was not an order dismissing the application by the decree-holders for possession but an order under O. XXI, r. 101, that is, putting the applicants into possession. In my judgment the very fact that it became necessary for the Judge to make the order in the form in which he has made it, shows that both the application and the order were entirely without jurisdiction because no such order as he has made is known to the Code of Civil Procedure, that is to say, in an application of the kind which was before him. Order XXI, rr. 97 to 99, deal with an application or a complaint by the decree-holder who is resisted or obstructed in obtaining delivery of possession of a property sold in execution, and, when such an application is made, the Code provides for the determination of the dispute and eventually for making an order under O. XXI, r. 98 or r. 99 according to the facts proved in the case. Now the only application which is contemplated by the Code by a person in the position of the present petitioners is one under O. XXI, r. 100, in a case where a person in that position is dispossessed. There are a number of points raised in this case as to whether the petitioners come within the rules on the merits, that is to say, whether they are persons other than the judgment-debtors. But I should feel inclined to hold, if the matter came up for determination, that having regard to the fact that a decree was made against their father, the petitioners who are the sons of the judgment-debtor would be prima facie bound by that decree and could not therefore be said to be persons other than the judgment-debtors. Be that as it may, it seems to me that the objection to the jurisdiction of the Judge is based on the plain meaning of the words of O. XXI, r. 100, to which I have referred. The order provides that a person may make an application 'when he is dispossessed'. In the Calcutta High Court it has been held in Ibrahim Mullick v. Ramjadu Rakshit (1), that such a person is not dispossessed within the meaning of the order when symbolical possession is given, and I should feel inclined to come to the same conclusion if that was the point determining this case. But in this case the parties have not gone so far as they had in the Calcutta case referred to. Nothing more has been done in this case than an application by the decree-holders for possession. It cannot be said that persons other than the judgment-debtors have been dispossessed because there has been no possession given to the decree-holders, that yet remains to be done, and to put it shortly there is no jurisdiction in the Judge to determine in the form of an anticipatory application a matter of this kind. It is only when the person is dispossessed that an application of this kind can come before the Judge and he certainly could not make such an order as he has done under O. XXI, r. 10'.

In those circumstances I think the Rule must be made absolute and the order of the Subordinate Judge discharged with costs: hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act (II of 1929), s. 2—'Sister', whether means only sister of the full blood.

The word 'sister' as used in s. 2, Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act must be interpreted according to the plain meaning of the word in the English language, which ordinarily means a sister of the full blood Ram Adhar v. Sudesra (1), relied on.

S. C. A. against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, dated July 18, 1933.

Mr Hyder Husain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and N. Banerji, for the Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal against the decree dated July 18, 1933, of the learned Subordinate Judge of Gonda, reversing the decree dated November 1, 1932, of the learned Munsif of Utraula in that District.

It arises out of a suit for possession. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to half of the property of Mahabir deceased as one of his next reversioners. The suit was contested by the defendant-appellant who claimed to be the full sister of Mahabir. The learned Munsif held that the fact of the appellant being the full sister of Mahabir had been satisfactorily established and that she was entitled to succeed to the property of her brother Mahabir in preference to the plaintiff under the Hindu Law of Inheritance (Amendment) Act, 1929.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge did not agree with the finding of the learned Munsif and after a careful scrutiny of the evidence came to the conclusion that the defendant-appellant was a half-sister of Mahabir being born of his step-mother. Relying on the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Adhar v. Sudesra (1), he held that being a step-sister she was no heir of Mahabir under Act II of 1929.

(1) 145 Ind. Cas. 529; 55 A 725; A I R 1933 All. 491; (1933) A L J 680; 6 R A 117 (F B.)

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant has not questioned the correctness of the lower Appellate Court's finding that the defendant-appellant is only a half sister and not the full sister of Mahabir deceased. The only contention urged by him is that the interpretation placed by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court on the meaning of the word "sister" as used in s. 2 of Act II of 1929 is not correct. He has conceded that as between a full sister and a half sister the full sister will be entitled to preference on the principle that a relation of the full blood excludes a relation of the half blood. If the word "sister" as used in s. 2 of the Act is to include a half sister, then it seems to me that on a proper interpretation of s. 2 of (the Act?) the full sister as well as the half-sister must take together. If the intention of the legislature had been to include a half sister and to give preference to the full sister over her, it was to be expected that instead of using the single word "sister" they should have used the words "full sister" and after her mentioned "half sister". In the absence of any indication to that effect, I am of opinion that the word "sister" as used in this section must be interpreted according to the plain meaning of the word in the English language which ordinarily means a sister of the full blood. I need not repeat the other reasons given by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in support of this interpretation with which I am in full agreement. I am accordingly of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where a suit for a sum of money below Rs. 500 was rightly filed in the Honorary Munsif's Court but on the Honorary Munsif writing to the District Judge that as he was related to one of the parties, he would not like to try the suit, the District Judge under s. 24, Civil Procedure Code transferred the suit from the Court of the Honorary Munsif to another Court which was not a Court of Small Causes, and the suit was heard by that Munsif:

Held, that it was not obligatory on the District Judge to transfer it to the Court of Small Causes but as the suit was of a nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court and was heard by a Munsif against whose decision an appeal did lie, the decision of the lower Appellate Court was not appealable by way of a second appeal to the High Court under s. 102, Civil Procedure Code.

S. C. A. from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Farrukhabad, dated June 11, 1932.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. C. Ghatak, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit brought by him for the recovery of a sum of money less than Rs. 500. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. There is, therefore, a preliminary objection that no second appeal lies because the suit was of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The contention of the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-appellant, however, is that the suit ought to have lain in a Small Cause Court and the entire proceedings are vitiated and the proper order that I should pass in the present case is to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.

In order to appreciate the contention of the appellant and the preliminary objection of the respondent it is necessary to state a few facts. The suit was filed in the Court of the Honorary Munsif at Shamshabad which Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is contended by the plaintiff that although he filed this suit in the Court of the Honorary Munsif at Shamshabad he should have filed it in the Court of Small Causes at Farrukhabad. He has not been able to support his contention by a reference to any enactment or notification except s. 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which says that save as expressly provided by this Act or by any other enactment for the time being in force a suit cognisable by a Court of Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable. I shall assume for the purposes of this appeal that there is a Court of Small Causes at Farrukhabad which might have had territorial jurisdiction over the present suit, but s. 7, cl. 4 of the Honorary Munsif Act provides that nothing in s. 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887 shall be deemed to affect the jurisdiction of Honorary Munsifs or Benches under the Honorary Munsifs Act.

It would, therefore, appear that the suit was rightly instituted in the Court of the Honorary Munsif at Shamshabad and there was nothing to prevent that Court from proceeding to dispose of the suit. The learned Honorary Munsif, however, wrote to the learned District Judge that as he was related to one of the parties he would not like to try the suit. The learned District Judge then under s. 24, Civil Procedure Code, which is applicable to the Honorary Munsifs Act by reason of s. 9 of the said Act transferred the suit from the Court of the Honorary Munsif to the Court of the Munsif at Kaimganj. It is said that the learned Disrtict Judge ought to have transferred the suit to the Court of Small Causes at Farrukhabad but it was not obligatory for the learned District Judge to do so and he could transfer the suit to any Court subordinate to himself and competent to entertain the same. The suit was, therefore, of a nature cognizable by a Small Cause court, but it was heard by a Munsif against whose decision an appeal did lie, but the decision of the lower Appellate Court is not appealable by way of a second appeal to this Court under s. 102, Civil Procedure Code.

The result is that the preliminary objection is sound and there is no force in the contention advanced by learned Counsel for the appellant that the suit ought to have been instituted in the Small Cause Court and I should return the plaint for presentation to that Court. Moreover, the objection comes with a very bad grace from the mouth of the appellant who himself filed the suit in the wrong Court and invited that Court to give a decision in his favour. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is a finding of fact which is fatal to the appellant's claim, the finding being that the amount of the debt was paid up by the defendant. There is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

Cess—Liability to pay cess — When can be contracted out—Absence of contract — Cess so far paid included in rent—No mention that further cess assessed would not be payable by tenure-holder —Liability to pay additional cess imposed on tenure

Although the liability to pay cess under the Cess Act can be contracted out, but in order to make the legal provisions for the responsibility to pay cess ineffective, the contract must be clear and expressive. Where there is no such contract and the plain meaning of the lease is that the cess so far paid has been included in the rent, and there is no mention that further cess assessed upon the tenure would not be payable by the tenure-holder by whom it must be paid under the provisions of law, increased cess for the period after the re-assessment should be allowed. Mahanand Sahai v. Sayedunnissa Bibi (1), relied on.

A. from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated June 12, 1931, reversing that of the Deputy Collector of Purulia, dated January 13, 1931.

Messrs. K. B. Dutt and S. C. Mazumdar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. K. Roy and S. Biswas, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The simple question involved in this second appeal is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to get a decree for the cess which has increased since the tenure was created. The defendants held two tenures on one lump rental of Rs. 42 annually. This rent according to the lease was fixed inclusive of cesses. The plaintiffs brought the suit for realization of cess at half anna per rupee on this Rs. 42 up to Chait 1334 Fasli and, since then, for cess payable by the defendants under the revised assessment. Both the Courts below have disallowed cess for the period before the re-assessment. The learned Deputy Collector, however, allowed the increased cess for the period after the re-assessment. This has been disallowed by the learned Judicial Commissioner. The plaintiffs have appealed.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has in my opinion rightly, not pressed the claim for cess so far as the period prior to the re-valuation is concerned. The only question is whether under the terms of the lease and under law the plaintiffs are entitled to get the increased cess. The patta, as I have said, makes the jama inclusive of cess. In my opinion, this case is on all fours with Mahanand Sahai v. Sayedunnissa Bibi (1). It is true, as the learned Judicial Commissioner has pointed out, that the liability to pay cess under the Cess Act can be contracted out. But in order to make the legal provisions for the responsibility to pay cess ineffective the contract must be clear and expressive. In this particular case there is no such contract and the plain meaning of the lease is that the cess so far paid has been included in the rent. There is no mention that further cess assessed upon the tenure would not be payable by the tenure-holder by whom it must be paid under the provisions of law. In my opinion the view taken by the learned Deputy Collector was right, and, had the Calcutta case referred to above been brought to the notice of the learned Judicial Commissioner, I am sure his decision would have been the same. I hold that the cess payable up to Chait 1334 Fasli is included in the sum of Rs. 42 which the defendants have to pay as rent and defendants are liable to pay the additional cess imposed upon the tenure. The learned Deputy Collector fixed this amount on calculation at Rs. 7-3-6. There is, however, one mistake in this calculation, namely, that the amount of cess included in the sum of Rs. 42 ought to have been deducted and the rent should have been calculated by deducting cess from Rs. 42. The correct calculation should be as follows:—

Rent inclusive of cess

	Rs.	A.	P.
Rent	40	11	3
Cess on the amount at 6 pies in the Rupee	1	4	9
Value of tenure under the new assessment	136	11	0
Cess at one anna per rupee ...	8	8	6
Deduct landlord's share at 6 pies a rupee on Rs. 40-11-0	1	4	9
Cess after deduction ...	6	3	9
Deduct cess included in the... rent	1	4	9
Cess payable	5	15	0

The decree of the learned Judicial Commissioner is set aside and that of the Deputy Collector is restored with this modification that the plaintiffs will get a decree for cess allowed by him for the period after Chait 1334 Fasli at the rate of Rs. 5-15-0 per annum and not Rs. 7-3-6. The plaintiffs will get three-fourths of costs in this Court and also of the Court of Appeal below.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 76 — Scope of—Damages not caused by misconduct and negligence of Railway servants—Consignor, if entitled to benefit of s. 76—Court relying on s. 76—Misdirection as to law—Interfernce in revision.

The provisions contained in s. 76, Railways Act were made for the protection of plaintiffs who had suffered loss but who were not in a position to prove in what manner the property had been damaged or destroyed after it had been consigned to the Railway, because in the ordinary course of events they are not in a position to know how the loss has been caused. But the Act has not anywhere provided that a plaintiff is absolved from the duty of proving that a Railway Administration is liable for causing the loss or deterioration of the goods. If it is clear that the damage has been caused by the misconduct of the Railway servants, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove how their misconduct had caused the loss. But where from the evidence it seems to be highly probable that the goods which were consigned in a damaged condition and remained in the train for over ten days had deteriorated for this reason and not through any misconduct and negligence on the part of the Railway Administration, and the Judge relies entirely on s. 76, the Judge in doing so misdirects himself as to the law on the point and his decision being a result of the misdirection, is liable to be interfered with.

C. R. App. against the order of the Judge of Small Cause Court, Aligrah, dated July 24, 1934.

Mr. Muhammad Ismail (Government Advocate), for the Applicant.

Judgment.—This is an application on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council through the Agent of the Eastern Bengal Railway and the East Indian Railway for the revision of an order of the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Aligarh, in which the suit of the Opposite Party for Rs. 32 damages was decreed. The circumstances are stated in the judgment of the trial Court. It appears that the plaintiff had consigned a number of bags of rice for despatch to Aligarh, and that when the rice arrived at the station of destination, damage was found to have been caused to the extent of six maunds, and the plaintiff, therefore sued for compensation to the amount of Rs. 30, the value of the rice.

In decreeing the suit the Judge noticed the evidence brought by the Railway to prove that the wagon was water-tight, and he also noticed that in the Risk Form A which represented the contract between the parties, a note had been made when the goods were despatched that the bags in which the rice was consigned were in a damaged condition some were rescued, others showed signs of probing and damp storage, so that they were liable to deteriorate in transit. Risk Form A is a form that is used when goods are already damaged and it is one of those forms which are known as owners risk forms, but the Judge in giving the plaintiff a decree has relied entirely on s. 76 of the Indian Railways Act in which it is laid down that in a suit against a Railway Administration for compensation for..... deterioration of...goods delivered to a Railway Administration for carriage by Railway, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove how the loss, destruction or deterioration was caused. This provision was made by the Legislature no doubt for the protection of plaintiffs who had suffered loss but who were not in a position to prove in what manner the property had been damaged or destroyed after it had been consigned to the Railway because in the ordinary course of events they are not in a position to know how the loss has been caused. But the Act has not anywhere provided that a plaintiff is absolved from the duty of proving that a Railway Administration is liable for causing the loss or deterioration of the goods, and from the terms of the contract it appears that the plaintiff knew of the fact that the goods tendered to the Railway were either in bad condition or defectively packed and understood to hold the Railway "harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same except upon proof that such loss arose from misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration's servants."

In the present case the plaintiff did not prove that the loss or damage to the rice had arisen from misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration's servants, and the Judge apparently believed that he was relieved of the necessity of proving this by s. 76 of the Act. This, however, only shows that if it is clear that the damage has been caused by the misconduct of the Railway servants, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove how their misconduct had caused the loss. In this case, from the evidence that was before the Court, it seems to be highly probable that the goods which were consigned in a damaged condition and remained in the train for over ten days had deteriorated for this reason and not through any misconduct and negligence on the part of the Railway Administration. At any rate, it is quite clear that the learned Judge misdirected himself as to the law in a matter of this sort, and that his decision is a result of his misdirection. No one has appeared on behalf of the opposite party in this Court. I therefore allow the application, set aside the decree and order of the trial Court, and direct that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

JAGDISH PRASAD SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Public Purposes Land Acquisition Act (VI of 1857)—Works of Public Utility Companies Act (XXII of 1863), s. 26—Scope of—Declaration made under Act VI of 1857—Courts, if can hold that it was not for a public purpose—Acquisition of land declared to be for public purpose—Effect of.

The Works of Public Utility Companies Act (XXII of 1863), is for works of public utility to be constructed by private persons or companies in contradistinction to the Public Purposes Land Acquisition Act (VI of 1857), which was for the acquisition of land for "public purposes". The earlier sections of the Act of 1863 make provision for the machinery by which the promoters, as they are called in the Act, are to satisfy the Government that the matter in hand is a matter of public utility and a matter for the purpose of which the land should be acquired under the Act, and, amongst other things, provision for the survey of the lands which are sought to be acquired. [p. 100, col. 1.]

ing under the Act of 1863 and that the land is required for the said work; and that when once that declaration is made the declaration is conclusive for the authorities to exercise their powers under the Act to acquire land for purposes of public utility. The latter part of the section merely provides that after the declaration has been made under the earlier part of s 26 the Government proceeds to acquire the land by the use of the machinery provided in the earlier sections of the Act of 1857. [p. 100, col. 2.]

Having exercised powers under Act (VI of 1857), and made the declaration, it is not open to any Court to hold that it was not for a public purpose. The two Acts give powers of acquisition for different purposes. The declaration under the one Act that the acquisition was for a public purpose is conclusive as is the declaration under the other that "the land may be taken under the Act." Consequently where it has been declared that the land is acquired for a public purpose, it is not competent for any one to canvass the question whether the land was used for a public purpose or not. [p. 101, col 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Deoghor, dated April 25 1932.

Messrs. P. R. Das and S. C. Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and J. C. Sinha, for the Respondent:

Wort, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Sudordinate Judge of Deoghor given on April 25, 1932, in which he allowed the plaintiff's claim which sought a declaration that the mineral rights in village Madankata between miles 173 and 174 now occupied by a line of the East Indian Railway Company were his property. That learned Judge also allowed an injunction against the defendants restraining them from working the coal mines under that land.

The question which we have to consider is what was the effect of a declaration made on February 7, 1886, by the Government purporting to be under Act VI of 1857 by which the Government for the purpose of constructing a railway line between Sitarampur and Luckiserai acquired the land in dispute together with other lands.

The defendants who are the appellants before us, are the Jainty Central Colliery Co., Ltd., who at a time which is not material to mention acquired the mining rights from the plaintiff on either side of the railway line in question abutting on what are called "B" lands are the lands immediately on either side of the railway lines between miles 173 and 174 as I have stated. One of the questions which came to be determined by the learned Subordinate Judge was whether the plaintiff being a Ghatwal of Birbhum was entitled to the mineral rights. That was decided in favour of the plaintiff and no question arises before us with regard to the matter.

Another question which was canvassed before the Judge was whether on a proper construction of an agreement made on January 13, 1927, between the Secretary of State for India in Council and the defendant Colliery Co. the right to work the coal under "B" lands passed to the defendants. But whatever view may be taken of this point the question is immaterial. If it is once established that the plaintiff is entitled to the mineral rights under the "B" lands no agreement entered into between the Secretary of State and the Colliery Co. could give the defendants those rights. The question, therefore, as I have said, is to be determined upon the exact effect of the declaration of February 7, 1866, which purported to be made under Act VI of 1857.

It was the view of the learned Judge that the Act of 1857 was amended by Act XXII of 1863 or so it appears and the rights of the parties depended upon the latter Act. If that view is correct, the case of the plaintiff would necessarily succeed by reason of s. 50 of Act XXII of 1863 which is as follows:—

"Whenever land shall be taken under this Act for the construction of any work, the taking thereof shall not be held to convey, or include, the right to any mine of coal, or other minerals, laying under such land; except only such part thereof as shall be necessary to be dug or carried away or used in the construction of the works, unless compensation for the same shall have been expressly allowed in the award made in favour of the persons interested in the land."

It is admitted that if this section does not apply then by the acquisition of 1866 the land and the minerals passed to the Government. Had the declaration acquiring the land been made under the Act of 1863 and having regard to the fact that compensation was not allowed as provided by s. 50, it is admitted that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge would be correct. But the question arises as, to the effect of Act VI of 1857 and Act XXII of 1863. It seems to me that a perusal of the two Acts will show that the conclusion of the learned Judge is clearly erroneous. Act VI of 1857 by its preamble provides:

"Whereas it is expedient to make better provision for the acquisition of land needed for public purposes within the territories in the possession and under the Government of the East India Co. and for the determination of the amount of compensation to be made for the same, it is enacted follows," and then the first section of importance which is to be noticed is s. 2 which provides :

"Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any land is required to be taken by Government at the public expense for a public purpose, a declaration shall be made to that effect under the signature of a Secretary to the Government or of some officer duly authorised to certify the orders of the Government and such declaration shall be conclusive evidence that the purposes for which the land is needed is a public purpose ; and after making such declaration the Government may take any such land in the manner hereinafter provided."

The subsequent provisions of the Act, the details of which it is unnecessary to state provide the machinery by which the Government may take land which is the subject-matter of the declaration which is made under s. 2.

The Act of 1857 contains no such provision as s. 50 of Act XXII of 1863. There was Act II of 1861 which repealed ss. 9 and 37 of the Act of 1857 but those sections it is necessary to consider.

We come to Act XXII of 1863 which I have stated, the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below held amended the Act of 1857. It is the contention of Mr. Sushil Madhav Mullick who appears on behalf of the respondent, admitting that Act XXII of 1863 does not amend the Act of 1857 that the rights given to the Government under the latter Act are these only which are given to the Government under the Act of 1857 : in other words the two Acts are to be read together.

Now the scheme of Act XXII of 1863 must be noted. In the first place the preamble states :

"It is an act to provide for taking land for works of public utility to be constructed by private persons or companies, and for regulating the construction and use of works on land so taken."

The first thing to be noticed is this, that this Act is for works of public utility to be constructed by private persons or companies in contradistinction to the purpose of the Act of 1857 which was for the acquisition of land for "public purposes." The earlier sections of the Act of 1863 make provision for the machinery by which the promoters, as they are called in the Act, are to satisfy the Government that the matter in hand is a matter of public utility and a matter for the purpose of which the land should be acquired under the Act, and among other things, provision for the survey of the lands which are sought to be acquired. Section 26 of the Act provides :

"When the boundaries of the land acquired for the work shall have been settled as aforesaid and the promoters shall have caused the said land to be measured and suitable land plans to be prepared of the same, the Local Government shall cause a declaration to be made under the signature of a Secretary to such Government or some officer duly authorised to certify the orders of the Local Government that the land aforesaid is required for the said work and such declaration shall be conclusive that the land may be taken under this Act."

A distinction is sought to be drawn by Mr. Mullick in his favour between the words which I have just read in s. 26 and the words in s. 2 of the Act of 1857. The distinction is based on the provision in s. 26 of the Act of 1863 :

"After making such declaration the Local Government may proceed to take any such land, as though it had been required to be taken at the public expense and for a public purpose ; and as though a declaration had been made as required under Act VI of 1857 for the acquisition of land for public purposes."

Mr. Mullick's argument is that the declaration under s. 26 of Act XXII of 1863, is merely for the purpose of giving the acquisition of the land, the sanction of law and that the declaration contemplated by the section is always that provided for by s. 2 of the Act of 1857, whether the acquisition is under the Act of 1857 for a public purpose or for "public utility" under the Act of 1863, in other words the mere mention of Act VI of 1857 in the declaration is immaterial and that if the acquisition is for a work of public utility to be constructed by a private person or company, the acquisition is under the Act of 1863 whatever the declaration may state. In my judgment that argument cannot be supported. What is quite clearly contemplated by s. 26 is a definite declaration by the Government that they are proceeding under the Act of 1863 and that the land is required for the said work: and that when once that declaration is made, the declaration is conclusive for the authority to exercise their powers under the Act to acquire land for purposes of public utility. The latter part of the section is equally clear, and that merely provides that after the declaration has been made under the earlier part of s. 26, the Government proceeds to acquire the land by the use of the machinery provided in the earlier sections of the Act of 1857.

The argument to which I have referred is based on the contention that under the Act of 1857, the Government were not authorised to acquire land for a third party. Exactly what the position in this case was, does not appear. We do know that the East Indian Railway Company was incorporated under a private Act of the Imperial Parliament (12 and 13 Vict. Chap. 93) but whether the Government having acquired the land under the declaration of 1866 handed the land over to the Railway Company or retained its rights over the land as I have said, does not appear but it does seem to be abundantly clear that whatever the Government may do with the land which it purported to acquire under the Act of 1857, when once it is declared that the land is for a public purpose, it is not competent for any one to canvas the question whether the land was used for a public purpose or not. This argument addressed to us on behalf of the respondent was partly based upon the wording upon the declaration itself which was to the effect that

"Whereas it appears to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal that land is required to be taken by Government at the public expense for a public purpose, namely, for a line of railway between Sitarapmpur and Luckhisrai, it is hereby declared, etc"

The mention of the purpose for which the land had been acquired, it is said, modified the declaration that the land was acquired for a public purpose and that, therefore, the Government was proceeding under Act XXII of 1863. This position is untenable. Having exercised powers under Act VI of 1857 and made the declaration, it is not open to any Court to hold that it was not for a public purpose. The two Acts give powers of acquisition for different purposes. The declaration under the one Act that the acquisition was for a public purpose is conclusive as is the declaration under the other that "the land may be taken under the Act." It is these words that are conclusive of the matter and as in this case it had been declared that the acquisition had been made for a public purpose, and as the acquisition was for a public purpose in contradistinction to the acquisition for public utility, it can be made only under the Act of 1857. Whether that Act was mentioned or not, it is equally conclusive that the act of acquisition was made under Act VI of 1857. On this view of the effect of the declaration the mines and minerals under the land so acquired did pass to the Government and consequently the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief which he claims in the action.

In my judgment, therefore, this appeal must succeed, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge will be set aside, and the action dismissed with costs throughout.

Agarwala, J.—I agree.

Criminal Revision Application No. 302 of 1934

September 10, 1934

BEAUMONT, C. J., RANGNEKAR AND DIVATIA, JJ.

RAMCHANDRA BABAJI GORE— PETITIONER

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 209, 437—Discharge of accused by Magistrate—Order set aside by Sessions Judge and re-trial in Sessions Court ordered—Jurisdiction to set aside the order—"Improper", meaning of.

Under s. 437, Criminal Procedure Code, the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate has jurisdiction to set aside the order of a Magistrate discharging the accused under s. 209, Criminal Procedure Code, if he is of opinion that the order is improper. It is not necessary that the order should be perverse or manifestly contrary to the evidence in the case. Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), overruled.

Per Beaumont, C. J.—The order of discharge may be set aside on the ground that the Magistrate has, however competently, taken upon himself the discharge of a duty which under the Code is entrusted to the Sessions Court, that is to say, the duty of appreciation of evidence of doubtful credibility or in a proper case on the ground that he disagrees with the appreciation of evidence by the Magistrate In re Narainan Venkatesh (2), dissented from. [p. 101, col. 2.]

Per Rangnekar, J.—In a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Sessions Judge can set aside the order of discharge and commit the accused for trial: (1) when he considers that the charge was not groundless, and (2) when he considers that there are sufficient grounds for commitment, both on facts and on legal grounds, or even when the proceedings before the inferior Court were not regular and that is the meaning of the expression "improperly discharged." [p. 107, col. 1.]

The result of a careful consideration of the sections and the cases is, as follows:—(1) That it is competent to the committing Magistrate at any stage of the preliminary inquiry to discharge the accused if he considers the charge to be groundless for reasons to be recorded by him. (2) The commiting Magistrate is entitled to weigh and appreciate the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution and on behalf of the defence, and if on a consideration of this evidence he is of opinion that there are not sufficient grounds of committing the accused for trial, in other words, there is no case which would fairly justify or sustain a conviction at the trial, or no evidence on which any reasonable person can hold the accused to be guilty, then it is his duty to discharge the accused. (3) If after a charge is framed and a list of further witnesses put in by the accused and the Magistrate after examining any such witnesses thinks that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, it is his duty to cancel the charge and discharge the accused. (4) The expression "sufficient ground" means, when credible witnesses make statements which, if believed, would sustain a conviction. (5) The Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to interfere in revision but such jurisdiction should be exercised only if he thinks that the order is illegal or incorrect or otherwise improper. (6) The expression "improper" in this connection means that in the opinion of the Sessions Judge there were sufficient grounds before the Magistrate on which he ought to have made an order for committal. (7) The power in revision must not be used freely. (8) The Sessions Judge must give reasons for his interference, so that if the matter comes to the High Court, there may be materials before it for deciding whether the Sessions Judge acted properly in interfering with the order of discharge. [p. 107, col. 2; p. 108, col. 1]

Cr. R. App. from the order of the Session Judge, Ahmednagar.

Messrs. C. H. Carden Noad, G. K. Chitale and J. G. Rele, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Crown.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an application in revision which comes before the Court in the following circumstances. The present applicant was charged jointly with accused No. 2, who was his first wife and who has recently died, with the murder of a woman called Tulsa, who was the second wife of the applicant, accused No. 1, so that the charge was under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. The matter was inquired into by the City Magistrate, First Class, Ahmednagar, who discharged the accused. Against that order of discharge, the complainant, who was the uncle of the deceased woman, applied in revision to the Sessions Judge of Ahmednagar, and the Sessions Judge set aside the order of discharge and directed the accused to be tried in the Sessions Court. From that order this application is made. On the application for a Rule, it appeared to the Bench which heard the application that, whether or not the order of the Sessions Judge was right on the merits, the order was contrary to the ruling of this Court in Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), and as the Bench felt some doubt as to whether the ruling in that case was correct, the Rule was made returnable before a Full Bench.

This being a charge under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, the case is one exclusively triable by a Court of Session, and therefore, the inquiry before the Magistrate had to be conducted under s. 206 and the sections following in Chap. XVIII, Criminal Procedure Code, s. 208 provides that in such a case the Magistrate shall hear the complainant and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or on behalf of the accused or as may be called for by the Magistrate. Then s. 209, provides that when the evidence referred to in s. 208, has been taken and he has, if necessary, examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Magistrate shall, if he finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, record his reasons and discharge him. That was the section under which the Magistrate discharged the accused in this case. Then s. 436, enables the Sessions Judge to direct further inquiry to be made in a complaint which has been dismissed under s. 203 or s. 204, or in the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged. So that that section covers the discharge of an accused person in respect of an offence not exclusively triable by a Court of Session. Then s. 437 deals with the discharge of an accused exclusively triable by the Court of Session, and under that section the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, if he considers that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inquiring Court, may cause him to be arrested, and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh inquiry, order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been in the opinion of the Sessions Judge improperly discharged. In Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), the Magistrate had discharged the accused person under s. 253, Criminal Procedure Code, which deals with inquiries before a Magistrate in warrant cases triable by a Magistrate. But the Court held that the discharge should really have been under s. 209, and that the principles governing discharges under the two sections, viz., ss. 209 and 253, are the same. The gist of the decision is contained in the judgment of Broomfield, J. at p. 440*, where he says this:

"The view we take is that the Magistrate is both entitled and bound to value and weigh the evidence and that, if he disbelieves the evidence and makes an order of discharge, the question whether it ought to be set aside in revision depends on whether it is a reasonable order, the criterion being, not whether the revising Court agrees with it, but whether it is rational in the sense that it cannot be fairly described as perverse or manifestly contrary to the evidence."

If that ruling is right, it involves a considerable departure from the language of s. 437. Section 437 empowers the Sessions

Judge to set aside an order of discharge whenever he thinks that the order is improper. If the ruling of this Court is to be accepted, the power can only be exercised when the order is perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence before the Court. In considering the circumstances which may entitle a Sessions Judge to come to the conclusion that an order of discharge is improper, it is necessary, in the first instance, to notice, what the Magistrate is required to do in the inquiry before him, that is to say, to consider what would be a proper order. Now, it is quite clear, I think, that under s. 209, the Magistrate has got to consider the evidence. He has got to satisfy himself that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, and to do that he must consider the evidence, both its nature and credibility; but he has not got to satisfy himself that there is a proper case for convicting the accused; he is not to try the accused, that being a duty imposed by the Code on the Sessions Court. It is no doubt difficult and undesirable to attempt to define precisely the limits of the powers of Magistrates conducting preliminary inquiries. Experienced Magistrates do not in practice find any great difficulty in dealing with inquiries under s. 206, and the following sections. They have to be satisfied before committing the accused that there is a fit case to be tried. If the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that there is evidence to be weighed, he ought to commit the accused for trial and he ought not to discharge the accused merely because he thinks that if he were to try the case himself, he would not be prepared to convict the accused on the evidence before him. But if he comes to the conclusion that the evidence for the prosecution is such that no tribunal, whether a Judge or jury, could be expected to convict the accused, then he ought to discharge him. Sometimes cases arise which are near the line, and the Magistrate may feel legitimate doubt as to his proper course. If he commits a case where he ought to discharge, result is a waste of public time and money in conducting an unnecessary trial, and this result Magistrates should try to avoid. On the other hand, if he discharges an accused whom he ought to commit, then the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has power either under s. 436 or s. 437, to take action in the matter. By these sections the legislature has imposed checks upon improper orders of discharge, and the powers conferred ought not to be frittered away by the Courts. Under s. 437, which applies in this case, all that the Sessions Judge has to do is to come to the conclusion that the order for discharge was improper. He may, as it seems to me, reach that conclusion not only on the grounds indicated in the judgment of Broomfield, J., in Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), that is to say, that the order was perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence in the case; but also on the ground that the Magistrate has, however competently, taken upon himself the discharge of a duty which under the Code is entrusted to the Sessions Court, that is to say, the duty of appreciation of evidence of doubtful credibility. On that ground, I think, the Sessions Judge clearly can set aside an order of discharge, but I am prepared to go further and to hold that in a proper case he may do so on the ground that he disagrees with the appreciation of evidence by the Magistrate. In saying that, I am differing from the view expressed by this Court in In re Narainan Venkatesh (2).

In that case the District Magistrate had differed from the inquiring Magistrate in regard to the appreciation of the evidence. The Court held that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to set aside the order of discharge, but they went on to say that in the exercise of his discretion the District Magistrate ought not to exercise that power merely because he disagreed with the appreciation of the evidence of the Magistrate conducting the inquiry. I quite agree that in such a case the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge must bear in mind that the inquiring Magistrate has seen the witnesses, and the Court acting in revision has not done so, and for that reason the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate should be slow to set aside an order of the Magistrate merely because he disagrees with the Magistrate's appreciation of the evidence. But I am not prepared to say that in a proper case such a power cannot be exercised.

In so far as the powers of the Magistrate under s. 209, are concerned, I think that the views I have expressed are in accordance with all the earlier authorities in this Court, particularly Queen-Empress v. Namdev Satvaji (3), In re Bai Parvati (4) and Emperor v. Varjivandas (5), and in so far as the judgment of Broomfield, J., in Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), restricts or enlarges the powers of the Magistrate under s. 209, beyond the extent to which they have been laid down in those cases, I think the decision cannot be supported. But the main criticism upon Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), is in regard to the restriction which it places upon the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge to interfere under s. 437. In my opinion the words of the Code are quite general, and enable the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate to interfere whenever he thinks that the order of the Magistrate is improper, and there was no justification for restricting that power in the manner in which the case of Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), seeks to restrict it. I think that that case was wrongly decided and should be overruled. With regard to the merits of the present case, there is no doubt that where the Sessions Judge does interfere with an order of discharge under s. 437 and directs the accused to be tried by the Court of Session, this Court has power to interfere in revision, but we should be slow to exercise that power. Generally speaking, if the Sessions Judge thinks that there is a case to be tried, it ought to be tried. But, in my opinion, this is one of those rare cases in which we ought to interfere.

The learned Magistrate gave a detailed judgment in which he discussed the prosecution evidence, and it is clear that in discharging the accused he so acted, not because in weighing the evidence of the prosecution and the evidence of the defence he thought that the prosecution failed ; he discharged the accused because he was satisfied that no tribunal could possibly convict on the evidence before him. He points out that, of the witnesses called by the prosecution only one man named Mukunda gave evidence which in any way supported the charge of murder. The evidence of that witness is that he saw the dead body of the woman alleged to have been murdered being brought out of the hut of the accused and thrown into a well. Even if that evidence be accepted, it would hardly lead to more than an inference that the evidence of a crime had been concealed which might support a charge under s. 201, Indian Penal Code, but would afford no evidence as to who committed the murder, if murder had been committed. But apart from that, the witness came forward with his story to the complainant at the late stage, and there is some reason for thinking that he was not on the scene of offence when he says he was, and all the witnesses that he relies upon to corroborate his story contradict him. I think, therefore, the Magistrate was right in the view he took that no Court could possibly convict the accused upon the uncorroborated evidence of that witness. The learned Sessions Judge in setting aside the order of the Magistrate says that there are suspicious circumstances about the case, and I am not disposed to differ from him as to that. But suspicious circumstances alone cannot lead to conviction. The Sessions Judge, apart from suspicious circumstances, says that he sees no reason for disbelieving Mukunda. It may be that Mukunda is telling the truth, but as I have said, it would be quite impossible for any Court to accept his evidence, contradicted as it is by other witnesses, and base a conviction solely upon it. That being so, it seems to me that, though the learned Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Magistrate, he was wrong in this case in doing so. I think, therefore, we must allow the application, set aside the order of the Sessions Judge, and direct the accused to be discharged and his bail bond cancelled.

Rangnekar, J.—On the merits of the case I desire to say nothing and I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the application must be allowed. The other question raised before us is, whether the decision in Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1) is correct, and if so, to what extent, the applicant's contention being that the ruling in that case was ignored by the Sessions Judge. There are four propositions which my brother Broomfield has laid down in that case, viz. (1) that there is no distinction between an order of discharge passed under s. 253 and under s. 209, Criminal Procedure Code; (2) that under s. 209 the Magistrate is both entitled and bound to weigh and value the evidence ; (3) that if the Magistrate disbelieves the evidence and makes an order of discharge, the Sessions Judge ought not to set aside the order merely because he disagrees with it and substitute his own opinion on the facts in place of that of the Magistrate ; and (4) that an order of discharge made by a Magistrate after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution and defence ought not to be set aside unless it can be said that the order is perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence before the Court. It is obvious that the real question is, first, what is the extent of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate in an inquiry into cases triable by the Court of Session under Chap. XVIII, Criminal Procedure Code and, secondly, the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate to interfere with an order of discharge made by the Magistrate, and this depends upon the true construction of certain sections of the Criminal Procedure Code. I propose to deal with the questions raised in the light of the relevant sections, apart from any authority in the first instance.

Chapter XVIII deals with inquiry into cases triable by the Court of Session or the High Court. Section 207 provides that the procedure in the sections following in that Chapter shall be adopted in inquiries where the case is triable exclusively by a Court of Session or in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court. The distinction between these two classes of cases is clear from the Code itself. Schedule II shows that there are certain offences which are exclusively triable by the Court of Session. It also shows that certain classes of Magistrates have concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Session. As to these latter class of cases, the Magistrate may commit the accused for trial if in his opinion the case is one which ought to be committed to the Sessions Court. Section 208, provides that the Magistrate has to hear the complainant and take all evidence in support of the prosecution and also on behalf of the accused, or such evidence as may be called for by the Magistrate. Section 209 (1) provides that when the evidence referred to in s. 208, i. e., the evidence on behalf of the prosecution as well as any led on behalf of the accused, has been taken and the accused has been examined, if necessary, if the Magistrate finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, after recording his reason, he should discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate. This shows that the Magistrate has to consider the evidence which is led before him carefully, and where the offence disclosed is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session, it is open to him to try the accused or to transfer the case to some other Magistrate competent to try it. Sub-s. (2) of s. 209 provides that it is competent to a Magistrate at any stage in the course of the inquiry, for reasons to be recorded by him, to discharge the accused if he considers the charge to be groundless. Then comes s. 210, which says that if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he should frame a charge, and under s. 211 require the accused to give in a list of witnesses whom, he wishes to summon at the trial. Section 212, however, allows the Magistrate to examine any such witnesses named in the list, and s. 213 says that after examining such witnesses if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, he is competent to cancel the charge and discharge the accused.

It will be seen from these sections that an order of discharge can be made at three distinct stages : (1) at any stage of the inquiry, if the Magistrate considers the charge to be groundless ; (2) upon a consideration of the evidence for the prosecution and for the accused and (3) even when he thinks that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused and frames a charge, upon examination of further witnesses called by the accused after the charge is framed, if in the opinion of the Magistrate there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused, he may cancel the charge and discharge the accused. It seems to me to be impossible to hold upon the plain construction of these sections that the Magistrate is a recording machine—a view often pressed before the Courts. In my opinion, these sections show that a Magistrate holding an inquiry has wide powers, and for the proper and effective exercise of the same, he must weigh and appreciate the evidence before him. But, excepting the case where in his opinion, the charge is groundless, he can discharge the accused only when he considers that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial. The question then arises, when it can be said that there are "sufficient grounds" for committing the accused for trial. The words in question were considered in Queen-Empress v. Namdev Satvaji (3) and the test there laid down was that when credible witnesses make statements which, if believed, would fairly sustain or justify a conviction at the trial, the Magistrate must commit the accused for trial. The same view was taken and this case was approved in Emperor v. Varjivandas (5) in which the Court observed as follows (p. 88*) :

"The words in s. 209, [Criminal Procedure Code] 'sufficient ground for committing' have been explained to mean, not sufficient ground for convicting, but where the evidence is sufficient to put the accused on his trial, and such case arises when credible witnesses 'make statements' which, if believed, would sustain conviction. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should satisfy himself fully of the guilt of the accused before making a commitment. It is his duty to commit when the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the accused, and he exercises a wrong discretion if he takes upon himself to discharge an accused in the face of evidence which might justify a conviction."

In my opinion, the test laid down in this case is correct. To put it in simple language, all that the Magistrate has to see is whether there is a prima facie case on which the accused can be put on his trial. In most cases no difficulty arises, but cases do occur which are on the border line as to which no hard and fast rule can be laid down. But I do not see why a Magistrate cannot discharge the accused when on a consideration of the whole of the evidence before him he is of opinion that there is no credible evidence against the accused. I do not see why he cannot say so. There is no harm in taking this view as the Magistrate has to give his reasons, and if they do not appeal to the Sessions Judge, it is, as I shall presently show, open to him to set aside the order. In this respect, therefore, I agree with my brother Broomfield. There has been some discussion before us as to the distinction between an order of discharge under s. 209 and one under s. 253. I do not propose to examine the question, as it is not strictly necessary to do so on this application.

This brings me to the other opint in the case as regards the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge. The relevant sections are ss. 435 to 438 in Chap. XXXII, which deals with reference and revision. Section 435 empowers the Courts mentioned therein including a Sessions Judge to call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any Criminal Court inferior to it or him. The object of the power which is thus conferred on the Courts mentioned therein is to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceeding of the inferior Court. It will be seen from the terms of this section that the revisional powers conferred upon the Courts named in this section are very wide. Then ss. 436, 437 and 438 provide for the action to be taken by the Sessions Judge in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction. Section 436 empowers the Sessions Judge to order further inquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under s. 203 or s. 204 (3) or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged. Section 437 provides that upon examining the record of any case under s. 435, or otherwise, the Sessions Judge considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session and that the accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, he may cause him to be arrested and may order him to be committed for trial. Section 438 enables the Sessions Judge to report for the orders of the High Court, the result of his examination of the record in all other cases. A careful examination of these sections shows that s. 436 explains the revisional jurisdiction of the Courts mentioned therein over inferior Courts and as to the true meaning of the section. I can do no better than to refer to the observations of Mr. Justice Wilson in Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (6).

This is what he stated (p. 618*):

"This I read as an express enactment that every finding, sentence or order is liable to review not only on the ground of illegality or irregularity but also on the ground of incorrectness, that is to say, on the ground that it is wrong on the merits. And an order of discharge is no exception to the general rule."

Then ss. 436, 437 and 438 state the action the Sessions Judge can take when he acts in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction or in simple language, tell him what he can do. Now with reference to orders of discharges by the inferior Courts, it will be seen that under s. 436 the Sessions Judge can set aside the order of discharge and order further inquiry in any case except when the order of discharge is made in a case exclusively triable by a Court of Session, and when the order of discharge is in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Sessions Judge can only act under s. 437.

Now there is some distinction between these two sections and it is this. Section

*Page of 15 C—[Ed.]

436 provides that the Sessions Judge can set aside an order of discharge and order further inquiry when he is acting in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction, whereas s. 437 provides that he can make an order of commitment when the accused was improperly discharged. The question then arises whether there is any real distinction between the revisional jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge when he acts under s. 436 and when he acts under s. 437. One thing is clear and that is, the action to be taken under both the sections by the Sessions Judge when he considers that interference is necessary only in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction. It is not easy to understand why the legislature has used the words "improperly discharged" in s. 437. The learned Government Pleader argues that in spite of the use of this expression, there is substantially no difference between ss. 436 and 437 as to the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge in revision as to orders of discharge made by the Court holding an inquiry under Chap. XVIII, and I am inclined to agree with his contention. I think what is meant by this particular expression is nothing more than what Crowe, J., said in Emperor v. Varjivandas (5), to which I have referred, in these words (p. 88*):

"The next point which arises is whether the order of discharge was illegal or incorrect or otherwise improper, i. e., was it wrong on the merits."

Confining myself to the order of discharge falling under s. 437, the position seems to me that in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session the Sessions Judge can set aside the order and commit the accused for trial: (1) when he considers that the charge was not groundless, and (2) when he considers that there are sufficient grounds for commitment both on facts and on legal grounds or even when the proceedings before the inferior Court were not regular, and that is the meaning of the expression "improperly discharged." This then being the extent and scope of the revisional jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge, it is difficult to see how it can be said that an order of discharge made by a Magistrate after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution ought not to be set aside unless "the order is perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence by the Court." Nor is there with sincere respect for Broomfield, J., any warrant for the proposition the learned Judge laid down in Parasharam Bhika v. Emperor (1), in these words (p. 440*):

"... the question whether it ought to be set aside in revision depends on whether it is a reasonable order, the criterion being not whether the revising Court agrees with it but whether it is rational in the sense that it cannot be fairly described as perverse or manifestly contrary to the evidence."

Having said this there are some points to which I might usefully refer. The first is that this Court has always held that the power in revision has to be used not freely but sparingly, not as if the revising Court is sitttng in appeal from a judgment of the lower Court. That rule is good enough for the guidance of the High Court and a fortiori I think that rule is binding on all Subordinate Courts. The second point is that the Sessions Judge must remember first, that the Magistrate who discharged the accused had the advantage of seeing the witnesses for himself. Thirdly, the object of the legislature in requiring an inquiry before a trial in the Court of Session is to prevent commitment of cases in which there is no reasonable ground for conviction and to save people from the anxiety of undergoing prolonged and expensive trials and to save the time of the Sessions Court from being wasted. These considerations, I think, should be borne in mind by the Sessions Judge when he is acting in the exercise of his revisional jurisdiction and will make it obvious that the power to interfere in revision is not to be exercised freely. If these considerations are borne in mind, then I have no doubt that the powers under s. 437 would not be exercised as freely as one would think. When, however, the Sessions Judge interferes with an order of discharge, he must clearly indicate the reasons which would justify him for doing so, so that the order of the Sessions Judge may in turn be examined by this Court if, and when, it is challenged.

In this view it is not necessary to refer to the cases cited before us. The result of a careful consideration of the sections and the cases is in my opinion as follows: (1) That it is competent to the committing Magistrate at any stage of the preliminary inquiry to discharge the accused if he considers the charge to be groundless for reasons to be recorded by him. (2) The committing Magistrate is entitled to weigh and appreciate the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution and on behalf of the defence, and if on a consideration of this evidence he is of opinion that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, in other words, there is no case which would fairly justify or sustain a conviction at the trial or no evidence on which any reasonable person can hold the accused to be guilty then it is his duty to discharge the accused. (3) If after a charge is framed and a list of further witnesses put in by the accused and the Magistrate after examining any such witnesses thinks that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused for trial, it is his duty to cancel the charge and discharge the accused. (4) The expression "sufficient grounds" means, when credible witnesses make statements which, if believed, would sustain a conviction. (5) The Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to interfere in revision but such jurisdiction should be exercised only if he thinks that the order is illegal or incorrect or otherwise improper. (6) The expression "improper" in this connection means that in the opinion of the Sessions Judge there were sufficient grounds before the Magistrate on which he ought to have made an order for committal. (7) The power in revision must not be used freely. (8) The Sessions Judge must give reasons for his interference so that if the matter comes to this Court, this Court may have materials before it for deciding whether the Sessions Judge acted properly in interfering with the order of discharge.

Divatia, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Supreme Court of Cyprus

April 12, 1934

LORD BLANESBURGH, LORD MERRIVALE AND SIR SIDNEY ROWLATT.

OTTOMAN BANK, NICOSIA—

APPELLANT

DASCALOPOULOS—RESPONDENT

Exchange—Plaintiff employed in Turkey—Salary in terms of Turkish pounds—Plaintiff transferred to Bank's branch in Cyprus—Salary paid in accordance with currency of Cyprus — Retirement—Pension, in what currency payable—Rate of exchange prevalent as each instalment falls due—Whether should be adopted.

The plaintiff was employed by the Ottoman Bank in 1905 and was taken on the pensionable staff thus being entitled on retirement to a pension on the basis of his salary in the year previous to his retirement. His salary was at the beginning expressed in terms which in the result made it payable in Turkish gold pounds. In 1915 paper currency was made legal tender in Turkey. The plaintiff was subsequently transferred to the Bank's branch, in Cyprus and he retired in 1931 while in service there. In Cyprus his salary was paid in Cyprus pounds at the exchange rate of 100 Cyprus pounds to 110 Turkish pounds. Subsequently the Cyprus currency depreciated in terms of gold. The question was whether on retirement, the plaintiff became entitled to a pension payable in Turkish gold pounds translated into Cyprus currency at the exchange of the day:

Held, that his pension was to be calculated on the basis of Turkish gold pounds and he was entitled to a monthly pension in Cyprus currency of a sum equivalent to the amount of Turkish gold pounds to which he would be entitled and that the Cyprus currency was to be calculated in accordance with the rate prevailing at the date when each instalment of pension became due. [p. 111, col 1.]

Messrs. Govin Simonds, Ronald Smith and T. W. G. Barry, for the Appellant.

Messrs. William Jowitt and Kenelm Preedy, for the Respondent.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Cyprus affirming the judgment of the District Court of Nicosia at the trial. The appellants, defendants in the action, are the Ottoman Bank of Nicosia, and the respondent, the plaintiff, is a former official of the Bank. Prior to his retirement on December 31, 1931, the respondent was serving in the Larnaca branch in Cyprus and the one question which survives for determination upon the present appeal is whether the pension to which, in accordance with the terms of his employment, he then became entitled is, as both Courts in Cyprus have held, a pension payable in Turkish gold pounds translated into Cyprus currency at the exchange of the day, or whether, as the appellant Bank contends, it is due only in pounds of Turkish currency or, whether so or not is in Cyprus payable only in the currency of the Island at the fixed rate of exchange of 100 Cyprus for 110 Turkish pounds and that whether the salary pounds be gold or not. The respondent's pension, in other words, according to the view of the Bank, so far from being based upon gold, is really in Cyprus a sum expressed in Cyprus currency fixed and invariable, whatever, either intrinsically or in exchange, the value of that currency may be or become. As the Cyprus pound is no longer on a gold basis, and bears in actual exchange to a Turkish gold pound a very much higher ratio than 100 to 110, the question at issue is even now one of substantial consequence to the respondent.

To the Bank the issue may also be of general importance as affecting the pension claims of others of its retired officials in a position similar or analogous to that of the respondent. In 1903 the respondent entered the service of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, with which, for all present purposes, the appellant Bank may be regarded as identical. In March 1905 he joined the permanent and pensionable staff, and he then signed a declaration by which he bound himself to adhere to the regulations governing the pensions and superannuation fund of the Bank, which, adopted by the Director General in December 1898, had been in force as from January 1, 1899. These regulations, as the respondent then further declared, formed an integral part of the conditions of his engagement with the Bank.

The regulations are voluminous. Only a few of the articles constituting them need however here be specifically referred to. By Art. 2, the general management of the Bank may at all times of the year discharge an employee, but (Art. 3) he receives an indemnity from the pension fund applicable to his case. Each employee (Art. 9) cedes to the Bank prescribed proportions of his fixed salary and increments. These sums are retained by the Bank each month, and lodged by it to the account of the fund. The Bank, for its part, is to lodge, every month, to the same account, 6 per cent. of the salaries of the personnel and undertakes to make good the deficiency, if the total of the fund, as so composed, is insufficient to meet pensions then already granted. By Art. 14, the amount of a retired employee's pension is fixed "on the basis of the salary which [he] received on December 31 of the year preceding that in which he is retired." The date applicable to the respondent's case accordingly is December 31, 1930. By Art. 15 the amount of pension is calculated for 10 full years' service at 30 per cent. of the employee's annual fixed salary, with 2 per cent. for each of the subsequent years. Article 30 is striking:

"The general management reserve unto themselves the right to modify these regulations every time they think it necessary, and in so far as the rights and interests of the personnel will not be injured by these modifications."

It is complained that the general management have, on occasions, purported to exercise this power without due or any regard to the qualification imposed by the words above italicised. The powers of the Bank, in this behalf, are not, however, in the present case directly in question. But incidentally the article must again be referred to. There is in the regulations no direct statement as to the currency in which any salary is to be paid. There is, however, in Art. 16, expressed in Turkish pounds, a minimum as well as a maximum pension which employees of a particular type may claim. A similar provision in the case of a pension payable to the widow of a deceased employee is to be found in Art. 22. It may also be observed that at the date of the regulations the only Turkish pound either known, or (with the possible exception of pounds of equivalent intrinsic value issued in paper by the Bank itself), in circulation, were gold coins of a special gold content, and their Lordships can have no doubt that the reference in the regulations was a reference to these Turkish gold pounds. Nor is the salary to be paid to the respondent referred to in any document then signed by him. The amount was no doubt agreed, and increased from time to time. That it was ab initio, expressed in terms which in the result made it payable in Turkish gold pounds can hardly be doubted. It is indeed stated in evidence by the Bank that in Turkey prior to the war the employees' salaries were always paid in Turkish gold pounds.

And here it may be convenient to allude to the origin, with the meaning to be attached to it, of the conversion of Turkish into Cyprus pounds at the rate of 110 to 100. To this conversion, as has already been indicated, and as will later more clearly appear, final importance is attached by the Bank. Cyprus pounds were here the equivalent of the English sovereign and this particular ratio which as is explained was always followed in the books of the Bank in relation to English sovereigns represented a real ratio founded on the actual gold content of two gold coins—a Turkish pound and an English sovereign. In fixing it, the gold content of the Turkish pound was taken to be 7·216 grammes, and that of the English sovereign 7·988 grammes. It is further in evidence and it may here be conveniently added that during the term of the respondent's service in Cyprus—certainly at the critical date, December 31, 1930—the Cyprus £1 note and the sovereign were in practice interchangeable. In Cyprus, said Mr. Jones, a witness for the Bank, there was no difference between gold and paper. Now the respondent, on the permanent staff of the Bank since March 1905, was, in 1923, serving temporarily in Constantinople. He had previously been employed in branches in other parts of Turkey. In 1923 he was transferred to Cyprus, and became Chief of the Larnaca office. In that post he remained until December 31, 1931, when he was retired. Thenceforth he was eligible for pension, and it is not now in question that in accordance with the pension regulations above summarised, and in view of his length of service, the respondent was entitled to a monthly pension of 64 per cent. of the fixed salary he was receiving on December 31, 1930. It is now further agreed that the fixed or pensionable salary of the respondent on that date was one which, expressed in terms of Turkish currency, was a salary of 45 Turkish pounds per month. The first, and it may the final question, for determination is whether these Turkish pounds were any other than Turkish gold pounds representing the pensionable portion of the salary to which, under the terms of his employment, the respondent was then entitled.

It is vital to remember in the consideration of this question that the respondent at the date of his retirement was being employed outside Turkey. Had he then been employed within Turkey – for example, in Constantinople, where the official in Ottoman Bank v. Chakarian (1) had been employed, different considerations as to his pension rights might have arisen. Here, however, their Lordships are concerned only with the case of an official of the Bank who had continuously for about eight years before his retirement been serving abroad – to wit in Cyprus. Now it is in evidence that on transfer for service abroad no fresh agreement was normally entered into as to the salary payable to the transferred employee by the Bank. In the particular case of the respondent, however, when in 1923 he was transferred to Cyprus, he was informed by the Director of the Bank, so he says, that his salary—then a salary of 45 Turkish pounds a month, would be as formerly, and that he would draw it in parity, that is he would draw salary at 110 Turkish gold pounds to 100 English. Objection was taken by the Bank to the admission of this evidence; but the fact that the Turkish pounds on which the translation into Cyprus or English currency depended were throughout the respondent's service Turkish gold pounds is, their Lordships think, clearly shown by what actually happened in Cyprus. First on May 21, 1926 the respondent was granted an increase in his emolument – a so-called indemnity—, expressed as 2 Turkish pounds to be added to the 45 Turkish pounds he was then receiving. He was granted a similar increase as from January 1, 1929. It is not open to doubt their Lordships think, that in each case there were and were intended to be, additions of two Turkish gold pounds to the fixed salary then described in the same currency. But the most conclusive evidence as to nature of the Turkish pounds in which the respondent's salary in Cyprus was expressed is supplied by the salary book of the Bank framed in terms, which, for the present purposes, are of great significance. Every month the respondent on receipt of his salary was required to sign and did sign the salary book. The details specified are always in the same form. For convenience, their Lordships take the entry of which those printed in the appendix is latest in date. It is the entry for January 1929.

There in the first column the name of the respondent appears at the head of the "Directing Staff." In col. 2 headed "Salary £tq" his salary is entered as 45 Column 3 is headed "Indemnity £tq." In this column the respondent's two increases are entered as £tq. 4. Passing over cols. 4 and 5 indicating deductions from the £tq. 49 shown in cols. 2 and 3, we find under col. 6 headed "Net salary in £tq," that the respondent's net salary is brought out at £tq. 46·75. Column 7, the most important perhaps of all in this connection, is headed "Equivalent in £ s cp" and the respondent's equivalent is entered at £42 10s. Then under col. 8 headed "Total in £ s cp," the same figure as in col. 7 is brought out, namely, £42 10s. The whole is signed by the respondent. This entry appears to be free from ambiguity. That the £tq. 45 and £tq. 4 are Turkish gold pounds is proved by the fact not really in dispute—that the so-called "equivalent" in col. 7 is the Cyprus equivalent for a Turkish gold pound and for nothing else. Equally clear is it, when the actual facts are remembered, that the real function of this column was to equiparate in the Cyprus currency, in which payment was actually being made and accepted, the respondent's contractual salary in Turkish gold pounds.

The Bank does not accept this view. Even if, contrary to its submission, based upon reasons later to be stated, the Turkish pounds referred to are held to be Turkish gold pounds, even so, it contends that the respondent is not entitled, in Cyprus at all events, to any payment other than one in Cyprus currency exchanged at the rate of 110 Turkish pounds for 100 Cyprus pounds. Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention. They are satified that the "equivalent" in Cyprus currency ascertained by that formula was, and intended to be, a real equivalent. It is merely exegetical of the basic contract. It was a formula applicable only where the result was to produce parity in terms of gold. To both parties it was a convenience that the salary of the respondent, stationed in Cyprus as he was, should be paid in Cyprus currency. But the salary remained a salary due in Turkish gold pounds, and if it had been tendered by the Bank in that form, it must have been accepted by the respondent. In short, these monthly entries express with clearness, as their Lordships think, the respondent's contractual rights in the matter of salary, and it being now agreed that his pensionable salary on December 31, 1930, was 45 Turkish pounds a month, they justify the declaration of the learned trial Judge that the respondent is entitled to a monthly pension of a sum equal to 28·80 Turkish gold pounds; with as a necessary corollary, now that Cyprus currency has so depreciated in terms of gold, that the "equivalent" in Cyprus currency must be calculated according to the rate of exchange, whatever it may be, prevailing at the date when each instalment of pension becomes due. Their Lordships have reached this conclusion without so far considering the possible effect upon it of the fact that whereas up to 1915 there was substantially no Turkish pound existing other than a Turkish gold pound, there was brought into being on April 15, 1915, as the result of an Ordinance of that date, an issue of Turkish paper pounds to which were attached the privileges specified in the Ordinance.

The Bank goes so far as to say, and it relies in support of its contention on a decision of this Board in the case already cited, that as one result of the issue of these paper pounds, the salaries of the Bank's employees, whatever may have been the case before, ceased to be payable in gold. So far, however, as the respondent's salary is concerned, it will be found, their Lordships think, that for so long as he was employed outside Turkey—and that is the only case with which their Lordships are concerned—his position was unaffected either by the Ordinance or by any pronouncement of the Bank following upon it. In order, however, to appreciate the true position in this respect and also to ascertain the bearing, if any, of the Chakarian decision upon the respondent's rights, it is necessary to go into some little detail.

By Art. 1 of the Ordinance in question the Ministry of Finance was authorized to issue £tqs. 6,583,094 of paper money against the deposit of effective gold for 150,000,000 francs. By Art. 2 the acceptance and circulation of this paper money exactly in the same way as cash was made obligatory in all the territory of the Empire in all transactions, either between private parties and the Government or between private parties themselves. By Art. 3 the counter-value of this paper money was to be reimbursed in gold at sight and to bearer, six months after the conculsion of peace at Constantinople. By Art. 4 such of the paper money as should not have been presented for reimbursement within the five years following the date fixed in Art. 3 was to be prescribed to the profit of the Treasury.

Now the effect of this Ordinance is of course a matter of Turkish Law with reference to which no evidence was tendered at the trial. But its somewhat remarkable provisions are alluded to in the Supreme Court. It is pointed out by Sertsios, J., that the notes were to be legal tender only up to a date of six months after peace, an event which the Chief Justice points out occurred on August 6, 1924. It may also be questioned whether these currency notes were ever made legal tender for any payment under a Turkish contract which by that contract had to be made outside of Turkey. These matters, however, have not been discussed in the Courts below and their Lordships in the absence of evidence as to Turkish Law, are not in a position to pronounce upon them now. They need not, however, do so. For it is clear to them that not even in Turkey did the Bank ever assert a right to meet the claims of its employees hitherto paid in Turkish gold pounds by tendering them Turkish paper pounds. So far as the employees of the Bank outside of Turkey were concerned, there is no indication that any change at all was made in the manner of paying their salaries hitherto always paid on a gold basis. As for the employees in Turkey proper, the Bank did, from time to time purport to alter the salaries, but nearly always by way of increase.

In the present case, which is not concerned with an employee serving in Turkey at any relevant date, these variations are not important, and their Lordships are, for present purposes, content to accept the summary statement of the Chief Justice with reference to them that salaries in Turkey were being paid on a gold basis, each employee receiving in Turkish currency a sum, which had Turkish gold pounds been procurable, would have enabled him to obtain these to a number equal to the Bank's original figures of his month's salary. The Bank, however, in 1920 made the following notable pronouncement applicable to the staff of Constantinople and the agencies in Turkey:

"As from 1st January 1920 the gross monthly salary of each employee will be converted into pounds sterling at the rate of 110 Turkish pounds for 100 pounds sterling and the proceeds of conversion so obtained will be paid to each employee in Ottoman Treasury notes at the average selling price of the pound sterling registered at the head office during the three months immediately preceding the current month."

This method of payment was followed for nearly a year and a half. It was superseded by a decision of May 1921, of the Management Committee, arbitrarily fixing 451 piastres—a number far less than the proper number in exchange as the number to be taken as the equivalent of the pound sterling and finally, in 1923, after the respondent had gone to Cyprus, the Bank adopted a method of directly converting the Turkish gold pound, "the gross monthly salary," into paper by treating it as the equivalent to 410 piastres. Now the action of the bank in this matter has not passed unchallenged in the Cyprus Courts. It has in the case of Esmerian v. The Ottoman Bank been condemned, as an attempt by the Bank, under cover of Art. 30 of the pension regulations above set forth, to alter a fundamental term of their contracts in the case of its employees in Turkey. This may or may not be so. Upon such a question their Lordships in this case naturally express no opinion. But they draw attention to its existence in order that the meaning and effect of the judgment of the Board in Ottoman Bank v. Chakarian (1) may be made clear.

That case is claimed by the Bank as an authority for the proposition that the salaries of the Bank's employees are no longer payable in gold. This claim seems to rest upon a complete misapprehension of the decision. The plaintiff there was an employee of the Bank who, when employed at the Constantinople Office, had, as he alleged, been wrongfully dismissed. His action against the Bank brought in Cyprus was one for damages for such wrongful dismissal. For the purpose of assessing the damages, and only for that purpose, it was necessary to value the plaintiff's pension rights on the footing that he had been retired at the date when he was dismissed. He had, in fact, received on December 31 of the year preceding his dismissal, without protest or objection on his part, his salary calculated according to the above decision of May 1921. In these circumstances it was held by the Board that for the purpose of fixing his pension rights the plaintiff, was, under Art. 14 of the regulations, bound by and could not go behind that receipt which as a receipt of 451 piastres for every pound sterling, was an essential part of the decision of May 1921. The validity of the decision of May 1921, was not itself in question: it was assumed to be valid: the only question under discussion was what it meant, and upon that question practical agreement was reached during the argument.

In the judgment of the Board therefore delivered by Lord Thankerton, it was not necessary to do more than record the result. It follows that so far as any general question as to payment in gold is concerned, the decision is only relevant now as showing that by common consent the "gross monthly salary" of the pronouncement of January 1920—the exact counterpart of the respondent's £tq 45—was assumed to be even in Turkey, a salary in Turkish gold pounds. But the case has no further application to the present, which relates to an employee of the Bank serving out of Turkey: nor can it be any authority in any case, even of an employee serving in Turkey: where the validity of the decisions of May 1921 and 1923 is not admitted or, if questioned, is not established. In the view their Lordships take of the case it is unnecessary, they think, to deal with other questions canvassed during the argument. For the reasons given they are of opinion that the concurrent judgments of the Courts in Cyprus to the effect above stated were in the result right, and they will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss this appeal. Their Lordships understand that the costs have been arranged between the parties.

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Opponent.

Judgment.—This is a criminal revisional application under ss. 439 and 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code. It is presented by the Public Prosecutor and we are informed that he is acting under instructions from Government. We are asked to vacate a bail order passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Sukkur on September 11, 1933. The allegations made by the Public Prosecutor are these: Khan Bahadur Muhammad Panah is a man of wealth, dignity and influence. Amongst other offices he is Chairman of the School Board. He was instrumental in securing the appointment as peon of a man named Imambux. On April 13, this Imambux was sent to the Treasury at Garhiyasin to collect a sum of Rs. 2,937 which was required for the payment of salaries. Imambux went to the Treasury and collected the money. He set out on his return journey. But the money was never delivered. Shortly after Imambux left the Treasury, startling news came to the ear of Muhammad Panah. It was reported that Imambux had been waylaid by four foot-pads who had knocked him on the head with their hatchets and robbed him of the money which he was carrying. Muhammad Panah was one of the first to reach the place where Imambux was lying. The man had upon his head certain marks which were alleged to be the wounds which the foot-pads had inflicted. He was carried to a medical officer who reported that the wounds were fictitious. Proceedings were taken against Imambux for giving false evidence and an action was also taken with a view to recover from his sureties the money which had disappeared. Imambux absconded and was for some time at large. He was eventually arrested and taken before the District Magistrate. There he made a remarkable statement. He said that the whole story of the attack by foot-pads was a falsehood and that the theft of the money was the result of a conspiracy in which K. B. Muhammad Panah and Rasulbux had also been involved. On August 28, Imambux was pardoned on condition that he gave a full and true account of all that he knew. On 31st of the same month Rasulbux was arrested. On the following day an application was made for bail not only on account of Rasulbux who was under arrest but also for Muhammad Panah, who had not yet been apprehended. The learned Judge on September 1, made an order in these terms.

"The applicant K. B. Muhammed Panah be released on bail of Rs. 10,000, if arrested, till final order is passed on his application."

Such an order as this is not warranted by law. Section 497, Criminal Procedure Code, begins with the words

"When any person is arrested or detained ..or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail ....."

The first step which must be taken by any person who wishes to be admitted to bail is to appear before the Court and to surrender. We are not, however, at present concerned with the order of September 1. That order has been vacated by the learned Judge himself. The Public Prosecutor made an application in which he appears to have said that:

"K. B. Muhammad Panah will be formally arrested and kept in private house at Sukkur and a guard would be kept over the house and that he will not be handcuffed and no man will be allowed to see him except his Pleaders without the permission of the Police He will have two private servants at his disposal"

Under the circumstances mentioned above, the learned Judge cancelled the order passed on September 1, about bail. This procedure was also wholly incorrect and unwarranted by law. The Public Prosecutor did wrong in proposing conditions such as those which are set forth by the learned Judge in his order and the learned Judge himself did wrong in accepting and acting upon them. In due course the opponent was sent up to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rohri, under ss. 120-B, 409 and 109, Indian Penal Code. To this Magistrate an application for bail was made and by him it was rejected on the ground that the accused would take advantage of his freedom and intimidate witnesses. The opponent then applied once more to the learned Sessions Judge. That officer passed an order in these terms:

"I order that the applicant be released on bail on his passing a bond of Rs. 10,000 and agreeing not to go beyond the Municipal limits of the town of Sukkur without the permission of the lower Court, with two sureties of Rs. 5,000 each. The lower Court will be at liberty to remand the accused if a charge is framed against him."

The grounds upon which this order was made are thus worded:

"(i) We have no evidence on record to show that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the applicant is guilty of an offence punishable with transportation for life."

Now the learned Judge has here slightly gone beyond the language of the law. The question of bail arises at a time when the opportunity for recording of evidence has not yet occurred. Section 497 does not therefore speak of evidence. It speaks of reasonable grounds. Now the learned Magistrate who refused bail and the learned Judge who granted it had before them the charge sheet and the statement of Imambux and other witnesses, and these are the only indications which are usually available at this stage. If these could not be counted as reasonable grounds, then it would be necessary in every case whether a man be charged with murder or with any other offence, however heinous, to admit him on bail until some evidence against him could find its place on the record. This however is not the law. The second reason is given by the learned Judge in these terms:

"The only ground given by the learned Magistrate is that the applicant might take advantage of his freedom and intimidate the witnesses. But this is not a sufficient ground."

It is probable that the learned Judge's attention was not called to the rulings which have been recorded by this Court for the guidance of Magistrates upon this point. In Emperor v. Wahidino (1) at page 313* a case is reported in which Percival, J. C., quoted with approval the following words from the judgment of a Sessions Judge:

"The complaint made is that the evidence has been tampered with I am of opinion that the complaint of the learned A. P. P appears justified. To enlarge the accused on bail would be to encourage further tampering and consequent failure of justice."

Very recently the law has been re-stated upon this subject in these terms. Bail will not be withheld merely as a punishment. But in granting or refusing bail the Courts will take into consideration, amongst other things, the question whether the accused, if released on bail, is likely to tamper with the prosecution evidence or get up false evidence in support of the defence. The law has been laid down to the same purpose by other High Courts also. In Emperor v. Nga San Htwa (2), the High Court laid down for the guidance of Magistrates the lines on which they should exercise their discretion in this matter. Magistrates are bound to consider whether a prisoner, if released, will suborn evidence and they may well refuse to enlarge on bail a prisoner who is of such a character that his presence at large will intimidate witnesses. In Krishna Chandra Jagati v. Emperor (3), a similar rule is laid. The learned Judges say that, although other authorities are of the contrary opinion, in India any allegation that the accused is tampering or attempting to tamper with the witnesses would be a very cogent ground for refusing bail. To the like effect is the ruling in Hikayat Singh v. Emperor (4). The order made by the learned Judge cannot be sustained. It proceeds upon erroneous ground and it is in itself not in accordance with law. There is nothing to be found in the Code which would justify the conditions imposed upon the opponent by this order. *Page of 23 S. L. R.—[Ed.]

he is released on bail yet he is required to agree not to go beyond the Municipal limits of the town of Sukkur without the permission of the lower Court. We must of necessity vacate this order. But we then find it necessary to apply our own minds to the question whether the accused in this particular case should or should not be released on bail. In Harchand v. Emperor (5) the conditions upon which this Court is accustomed to grant or refuse bail have been laid down in these terms:

"The High Court's power to grant bail under s. 498, Criminal Procedure Code, is not limited by the restriction imposed by s. 497 (1). The High Court will not, however, grant bail in non-bailable cases except in special circumstances, and according to the exigencies of each particular case."

Now the special circumstances of the present case to which our attention has been called are these. The accused is a man of very high standing in his community. He has been a member of the Legislative Council of Bombay and also the Legislative Assembly of all India. He is also a Magistrate of the Second Class. A second circumstance to be taken into consideration is that an important part of the evidence against him is the evidence of an accomplice who has been admitted to a pardon. This is tainted evidence which would require corroboration. The third circumstance which we cannot overlook is that the opponent has been much hampered by the unjustifiable condition imposed upon him by the order of the learned Judge. He is debarred from coming out of the limits of the town of Sukkur and it has therefore been impossible for him to come before us in person and to give his own instructions to the Advocate who appears for him. The proceedings in the Magistrate's Court are to begin to-morrow, and to avoid interposing an unnecessary delay, we have not called for the record and proceedings. This was a further obstacle in the way of the opponent. It was imposed for his advantage; but it has nevertheless to a certain extent hampered him in the presentation of his case. In the absence of the record we do not touch the question whether any attempt to tamper with the evidence has or has not been made. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, we pass the following order: The opponent is admitted to bail in the sum of ten thousand rupees (Rs. 10,000) with two sureties jointly and severally bound in the like amount. This bail will be effectual unless and until the learned Magistrate may find that a prima facie case has been made out either to commit for trial or to frame a charge. In that case should he think fit to remit the prisoner to custody, he need not wait to record any evidence which may be tendered for the defence. This order is passed on the condition that the case do begin to morrow and go forward from day to day without interruption. The order will be ipso facto vacated if any attempt is made on the part of the accused in any way to postpone or interrupt the continuous prosecution of the case. The order relating to Rasulbux will be in the same terms.

Lunatic—Co heirs refusing to maintain lunatic—Person who is not strictly a co-heir maintaining and supporting—Inheritance to property of lunatic after his death—Co-heirs, if excluded—Rule, if equitable—Burmese Law—Inheritance.

The share of a person who is insane and incapable of taking care of himself or his affairs should go on his death to the co-heir who maintained and looked after him during his life-time. The same principle applies to a person who is not strictly a co-heir of the lunatic if all the co-heirs of the lunatic refused to undertake his custody. In an extreme case, these rules are neither inequitable nor opposed to the present day ideas of the Burmans. Mi Kan Yon v. Nga Pwe (1), relied on, Ma Miya v. Maung Kywet (2), followed.

Sp. S. C. A. against the decree of the Assistant District Court of Akyab, dated April 25, 1933, in Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1933, arising out of the decree of the Additional Township Court of Pauktaw, in Civil Suit No. 49 of 1932, dated February 1, 1933.

Mr. Sein Tun Aung, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tun Aung, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—It is now admitted that the land in suit was the property of the lunatic, Ma Kra Nye Khine. During her life-time the lunatic was looked after by her brothers in succession, and during the time that she lived with each of them that one obtained the rents and profits of this land for the maintenance of the lunatic. Unfortunately, her occupation of the house of a brother was invariably followed, after a time, by the death of the brother, and consequently, about 10 years or more ago, after the death of one brother, Maung Zan, none of the lunatic's natural heirs was prepared to take her into his house, for, the whole family had concluded that her presence in the house brought ill-fortune. At that stage the plaintiff-respondent, Ma Ni Ma, who is the widow of one of the lunatic's deceased brothers, took over the custody of the lunatic, obtaining the rents and profits of this land for the lunatic's maintenance. It is admitted that for the last 10 years of the lunatic's life the respondent looked after her and that the lunatic died in her house. The respondent alone performed the funeral ceremonies and bore all the expenses of the funeral.

The respondent has set up that at the time that she took over the custody of the lunatic she was persuaded to do so because all the natural heirs of the lunatic agreed that on the lunatic's death she should inherit the latter's property to the exclusion of her natural heirs. But, although the respondent has succeeded in establishing that the defendants-appellants did enter into such an agreement with her, she has failed to establish that all the natural heirs of the lunatic agreed to this course, and, therefore, her case as based upon the agreement must fail.

Consequently, the sole point for consideration is whether, under the circumstances of this particular case, the respondent ought to be allowed to inherit the property of the lunatic to the exclusion of the latter's natural heirs. In my opinion, there is ample authority for holding that she should so inherit. In the case of Mi Kan Yon v. Nga Pwe (1), it was held that the share of a person who is insane and incapable of taking care of himself or his affairs should go on his death to the co-heir who maintained and looked after him during his life-time. This authority, if accepted, is really conclusive of the present case, for, although the respondent is strictly not a co-heir of the lunatic, nevertheless, in my opinion, the same principle applies, because all the co-heirs of the lunatic refused to undertake the custody of her. It was further held in the case of Ma Mya v. Maung Kywet (2), that persons naturally entitled to inherit can be excluded from inheritance by the person who supports the deceased and performs the funeral ceremonies, when desertion and intentional and deliberate neglect of the ordinary duties of affection and kindred are proved against them.

On behalf of the appellants it is argued that these authorities are now obsolete and are unsuited to the conditions of modern life, but this is a contention with which I am unable to agree in its entirety, for it seems to me that in an extreme case, such as I look upon the present to be, these rules are neither inequitable nor opposed to the present day ideas of the Burmans themselves. The respondent looked after the lunatic for a long period, when she had been abandoned by her co-heirs, and she attended to the lunatic in her last illness, and performed the funeral ceremony and bore the expenses thereon. The lunatic was deliberately and intentionally deserted by her own blood relations and they neglected the ordinary duties of affection and kindred to her. In these circumstances, I think that I shall be right in following the ruling in Ma Mya v. Maung Kywet (2), and holding that the lunatic's blood relations should be excluded from the inheritance.

Consequently, in my opinion, the decision of the Assistant District Court was correct, and this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Trees planted by zemindar and standing in holding of tenants—Right of zemindar to timber of trees—Fruits of trees—Right of tenants, in absence of contract to contrary.

When a land is let out to a tenant by a zemindar it is to be presumed that it is let out with the trees. If there was any contract to the contrary reserving the right to appropriate the fruits of the trees standing on the land for the zemindar, it is for the zemindar to set up and prove that contract. Consequently in the absence of any contract to the contrary the tenants on whose land the tree is standing have a right to appropriate its fruits. But the timber of trees planted by the zemindar before land is let out to tenant and standing on the holdings of tenants, whether occupancy or ex-proprietary tenants, belongs to the zemindar.

[Case-law reviewed.]

S. C. A. from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Basti, dated June 16, 1932.

Mr. Wali-ullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kanhaya Lal Misra, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal and arises out of a suit brought against them by the plaintiff for possession over a mahua tree and to recover Rs. 10 as damages for fruits and branches of the tree alleged to have been wrongfully appropriated by the defendants. The plaintiff's case was that he was the zamindar and the tree in suit had been planted by him and he had been appropriating its fruits. The defendants contend that the tree was in their occupancy holding and that they and their predecessors-in-title had all along been appropriating its fruits. The trial Court found that the tree belonged to the plaintiff and gave a decree for possession but dismissed the suit for damages holding that the defendants were entitled to appropriate the fruits. In appeal the learned Additional Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiff and held that the plaintiff had a right to appropriate the fruits and decreed the suit in full as the tree had been planted by the plaintiff.

As already stated, it is apparent from the findings of the Courts below that the tree was planted by the plaintiff himself before his land was let out to the defendants. It is a settled law that the timber of the trees standing on the holdings of tenants whether occupancy or ex-proprietary tenants belongs to the zamindar. In Nazir Khan v. Faiz Muhammad Khan (1), it was held that the timber of a tree belongs to the zamindar when the tree is growing on a tenant's land and that it makes no difference if the tenant happens to be an ex-proprietary tenant who himself has planted the tree. In Khan Chand v. Chandan, 24 Ind. Cas. 81 (2). It was observed by Justice Piggott :

"I take it to be established by a number of rulings of this Court, of which the cases of Lachman Das v. Mohan Singh (3) and of Ganga Dei v. Badam (4), may be taken as specimens, that the trees planted by tenants on their holdings will be the property of the zamindar and the tenants will have no transferable rights therein. This will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary."

The defendants, therefore, had no right to appropriate the timber of the branches as the timber belonged to the plaintiff. The defendants are liable for damages for the branches of the tree appropriated by them. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to a decree for Rs 6 for the price of the branches appropriated by the defendants.

As regards the fruits, it is also an equally settled law that a tenant has a right to appropriate the fruits of the trees growing in his holding whether they were planted by him or not. In Kamta Prasad v. Sheo Prasad (5), it was held that in the absence of a custom or contract to the contrary, an occupancy tenant has a right as against his zamindar to the fruit of trees standing upon his holding, though the trees themselves may be the property of the zamindar. The same view was taken in Imdad Khatun v. Bhagirath (6) and Ganga Dei v. Badam (4). In the latter case it was laid down :

"The presumption of law, and the general rule in the absence of custom, is that the property in timber on a tenant's holding vests in the zamindar, and that the tenant has no right to cut and remove such timber. But it appears to us to be clear that in the absence of a custom or a contract to the contrary, a zamindar has no right to interfere with the enjoyment by his tenant of the trees upon his holding as long as the relation of landlord and tenant subsists."

When a land is let out to a tenant by a zamindar it is to be presumed that it is let out with the trees. If there was any contract to the contrary reserving the right to appropriate the fruits of the trees standing on the land for the zamindar, it is for the zamindar to set up and prove that contract. No such contract was set up in this case by the plaintiff nor any has been proved. Consequently in the absence of any contract to the contrary the defendants on whose land the tree is standing have a right to appropriate its fruits. The plaintiff is, therefore, not entitled to a decree for possession or for damages for the fruits. It is, therefore, ordered that the appeal be partly allowed. The decree of the lower Court be modified inasmuch as the plaintiff's suit for Rs. 6 for the branches appropriated by the defendants shall be decreed and the rest of the case shall be dismissed. The parties shall get and pay costs in all Courts in proportion to their success and failure.

Appeal partly allowed.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 637 of 1933

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

KURA—ACCUSED—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 417—Acquittal, appeal against—Principles of interference.

In the case of appeals from acquittals, the decision of the Court below must be clearly wrong before the High Court will interfere, that is to say, a reasonable decision of a Court entitled to deal with the matter should not be set aside merely because the High Court took a different view.

Cr. A. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated February 24, 1933.

Mr. Norman Edmunds, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Respondent.

Addison, J.—Six persons were tried by the Additional District Magistrate, Karnal. One of them Kura was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, together with a fine of Rs. 200, for the offence of causing grievous hurt with a sharp-edged weapon to Musammat Lachhmi, under s. 326, Penal Code, and to one year's rigorous imprisonment, under s. 324, Penal Code, for causing simple hurt with a sharp-edged weapon to Chandgi, husband of Musammat Lachhmi. He was also sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment for committing house-trespass after preparation for causing hurt under ss. 452-149, Penal Code. These sentences were to run consecutively. The others who were tried with him, namely, Lakhi Ram, Badlu, Phula, Telu Ram, son of Chhajju Mal, and Telu, son of Shadi, were sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment each under ss. 324 and 326, Penal Code, and to one year's rigorous imprisonment each under ss. 452 and 149, Penal Code, the sentences to run consecutively. They were also sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 100 each under ss. 324 and 326, Penal Code.

On appeal, the Additional Sessions Judge gave Kura the benefit of the doubt and acquitted him. He also reduced the sentences of the others, i. e., they were sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment together with a fine of Rs. 100 for the offence of causing simple and grievous hurt and also to three months' rigorous imprisonment each for the offence of house-trespass after preparation to cause hurt: the sentences to run concurrently. Against the acquittal of Kura, the Crown has preferred an appeal. It has also put in a revision petition, asking for the sentences of the five persons, whose convictions were maintained, to be enhanced, while the five convicts have put in a revision petition against their convictions and sentences. (His Lordship referred to the prosecution story, and defence story, and proceeded). As regards the appeal of the Crown, it has to be noted that the reasons given by the Additional Sessions Judge for acquitting Kura are as follows:

Chandgi had a motive to implicate him as he was the decree-holder while Juman, chaukidar, P. W. No. 3, must be held to be a friend of Chandgi seeing that he went with him to the Police Station to report the offence, while Badam is the brother of Juman and the two brothers had already given evidence in another case on behalf of Chandgi. Then Daulat was positive that he was not there while Musammat Lachhmi could not identify him. Similarly Lal Singh could not identify him in the parade. Thus only Chandgi, Juman and Badam, his brother, had identified Kura. For these reasons the learned Additional Sessions Judge thought it unsafe to uphold the conviction of Kura even though he did not believe Kura's defence, part of which consisted in getting a false entry made in a report by a Girdawar Kanungo.

It has been held in the case of appeals from acquittals that the decision of the Court below must be clearly wrong before this Court will interfere, that is to say, a reasonable decision of a Court, entitled to deal with the matter should not be set aside merely because this Court took a different view. It has been contended before us that Musammat Lachmi was wearing a veil, and thus might easily not have noted Kura's face with sufficient distinctness to remember it. This may be correct but the fact remains that Kura was not identified by her. It was next argued that Daulat (P. W. No. 4) had been won over because he was indebted to Amin Chand, father-in-law of Kura. Daulat admitted that he was once indebted to him but stated that the debt had been paid off. Another prosecution witness Sis Ram has said that Daulat is indebted to Amin Chand. At the same time Daulat is a Jat of the same caste as Chandgi. It may be that the Additional Sessions Judge has attached too much importance to Daulat's statement that Kura was not there but here again, the fact remains that Daulat states that he was not there. It was further contended that Lal Singh may, in the first instance, have been unable to identify Kura and to pick him out of a large number of people but that he may have been able to do so later after seeing Kura in Court when his features had come back to his memory. This may be so but Lal Singh is not a witness of very high status and the fact that he did not identify Kura at the parade is, I think, important.

It was argued on behalf of the Crown that Chandgi should not be considered to be a witness who had enmity with Kura as, at the time he made the first information report to the Police he considered that Lakhi Ram was the decree-holder of his uncle, Udmi, though, as a matter of fact Lakhi Ram, was only an attorney of Kura and that in spite of this belief the principal part in the attack was given to Kura in the first information report. This again has some importance, while I agree that merely going to the Police Station with Chandgi should not have been made a ground for partially rejecting Juman's evidence because it was his duty as a chaukidar to accompany an injured person to the Police.

On the whole, however, I am unable to hold that the guilt of Kura is so clear that it was the duty of the Additional Sessions Judge to uphold his conviction. There are certain circumstances in his favour. Some of them may be accidental but they reduce the amount of evidence against him with the result that the offence against him was not so clearly proved as it was against the others. That being the case, I would not interfere in the appeal against his acquittal and would accordingly dismiss it.

As regards the petition of the Crown for enhancing these sentences of the other five, there is little to be said. They have been given substantial sentences and there is thus no occasion for interference by this Court. I would also dismiss the petition for enhancement of sentences presented by the Crown.

Agha Haidar, J.—I agree.

Criminal Appeal No. 808 of 1934

RAM CHARAN AND OTHERS—ACCUSED
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860, s 394—Medical evidence not proving death from throttling—Confession not made to Magistrate—Ornaments recovered not connected with deceased—Conviction under s. 394, legality of—Criminal trial—Motive—One accused not getting his share in loot—Whether motive for making confession against himself—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 25—Confession to village mukhia —Admissibility.

Where the medical evidence did not prove that the accused died from asphyxiation by throttling, some symptoms favouring that view and some not favouring it and the confession was not made before a Magistrate but was only stated to have been made in the village to three villagers whose evidence was of little weight to prove that a confession was made, and although the evidence of ornaments stolen being found in the houses of the accused might be correct, yet the prosecution failed to connect those ornaments with the deceased :

Held, that the prosecution had not proved the charge against the accused under s. 394, Penal Code, and they were entitled to an acquittal.

It is not very natural that an accused person should merely from the annoyance at not getting his proper share of the loot take an action which he must know will put himself in jail

A village mukhia is not a Police Officer for the purpose of s. 25 of the Evidence Act. Nga Myin v. Emperor (1), referred to.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated August 23, 1934.

Messrs. B. S. Darbari and N. C. Tewari, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by four persons Ram Charan, Ram Dayal, Bhimma and Jodha who have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Mainpuri under s. 394, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment each. The accused were charged under s. 396, Indian Penal Code, by reason of having been participants in a dacoity in the house of Bahora Meghraj on the night of March 5 and 6, 1934, in which Bahora Meghraj was killed. The learned Sessions Judge found that the prosecution case was proved but because two other persons who are alleged to have taken part in the crime were not before him, the number of accused was less than five and, therefore, s. 396, Indian Penal Code, did not apply and he says that the accused committed robbery and voluntarily caused hurt to the deceased which was the least proved against them. He, therefore, did not find that the accused persons had caused death of the deceased but only that they caused certain injuries to the deceased. These nine injuries noted in the post mortem report which he found had been caused were external abrasions and would amount only to simple hurt. The sentence, therefore, was very severe for a robbery in which simple hurt was caused and it appears to me that although he did not expressly state so, the learned Judge must have passed the sentences on the view that the accused had caused the death of the deceased. If that were his view, he should have convicted the accused of the offence under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, but he has not done so. The case for the prosecution rests on the alleged confession made in the village to three witnesses by one of the accused, Jodha, on March 28, 1934, and on the discovery of ornaments pointed out by the accused on March 30, 1934. When the accused Jodha was brought before a Magistrate, he refused to make a confession. The history of the affair is as follows:—The deceased died sometime during the night and no outcry was made and no one in the village became aware of a crime. At the time he was living alone in his house. Next morning attention was drawn by the fact that the cattle were unattended and that the door remained shut. Balwant Singh, the zemindar, went to the house accompanied by Ajudhia Prasad, the Mukhia, and Kesari. These persons stated that they found Bahora Meghraj lying dead on his bed covered with a cloth and as the witnesses were not of his caste, they sent for Khem Chand, who was a Bahora, of an adjoining village called Seonra. Meanwhile the body had remained covered with the cloth. When Khem Chand came, he removed the cloth preparatory to funeral preparations and he found that there were injuries on the body. He, therefore, said that matter must be reported at the thana. The chaukidar was sent to make a report. The chaukidar was a dhanukh, a low caste, and he was not taken inside the house or yard and he did not see the injuries on the corpse. He was told to go and make a report and he did so. This was not a first information report of a crime but a report made in order that an inquest might be held. The report was entered in the general diary at the thana at 7 P. M. and the report did not mention any injuries on the deceased. The report says that the deceased used to take intoxicating drugs that his eyes were dilated and it seemed that he had died on account of the effects of over-intoxication from opium and bhang The second officer and the mortuary box were sent for an inquiry into the cause of death which was not clear from the report of the chaukidar. The second officer held an inquest and noted some injuries in regard to which the medical witness observes in a letter on p. 7 that most of these injuries were probably due to post mortem staining. In the post mortem it was stated that no definite opinion could be given as to the cause and manner of death owing to the fairly advanced state of the decomposition of the body. There were nine places in which there were one or more abrasions. Of some of these marks the Medical Officer stated in evidence:

"The above-mentioned injuries could have been produced in struggle when the deceased was being throttled. Injury No. 4 could have been caused during the act of closing the nostrils by force. Injury No. 8 could have been caused by pressure on side of chest by knees, elbow or any other hard substance. The above-mentioned injuries could not cause death separately or jointly; in all probability, therefore it is possible that some other act might have caused the death of the man. Cynoses of the face, bluing of tongue and nails combined with the congestion of brain and meningies and redness of eyes may indicate that asphyxia may have been the cause of death. The above injuries cannot be caused by fall from a stair-case as they are on the different parts of the body."

There is one point in regard to which the Medical Officer was not cross-examined and that is the internal appearances of the throat. The alleged confession stated that death was due to throttling and the medical witness has stated that some of the points he observed point to death by asphyxiation. In Modi's Medical Jurisprudence, 1924, 3rd Edition, p. 142, I find it stated as follows:—

"Internal Appearances. There is extravasation of blood due to ecchymoses in the subcutaneous tissues under the ligature mark or finger marks, as well as in the adjacent muscles of the neck.. .. Both the larynx and trachea are congested, and contain frothy mucus. The larynx or the rings of the trachea may be fractured when considerable force is used"

In the post mortem report it is stated "Larynx trachea and bronchi. Empty." There is no injury noted in these organs. The opinion of Modi is that these organs should show signs of internal injury in asphyxiation. In the present case there is no injury shown and it was not suggested by the medical witness that they were so decomposed that examination from this point of view would be impossible. And there were no external injuries on the neck. This appears to me to be one weakness in the theory that the accused died from throttling as stated in the confession.

The next point is in regard to the confession. After the Sub-Inspector came to the village and held his inquest and made an inquiry, nothing further happened until March 28. Balwant Singh states that at that date Jodha accused came to him of his own accord and said that he and five other persons, including the other three accused had committed this murder and had stolen a number of ornaments and that he was making a confession because he had not been given his share out of the proceeds of certain gold ornaments—Lar, Goph and two guineas - which were taken by Ram Charan and Jiwa Ram to Shikohabad and sold. This motive for making the confession is frequently put forward but it does not seem to be very natural that an accused person should merely from the annoyance at not getting his proper share of the loot take an action which he must know will put himself in jail. Balwant Singh states that when he heard the confession he took the accused Jodha before the mukhia Ajudhia Prasad, and Kesari, and Jodha repeated this confession to these persons. All the three persons give evidence as to what Jodha said to them. No attempt was made by them to take down this confession in writing although they must be literate. They did, however, send for the Sub-Inspector and after the production of various ornaments, the Sub-Inspector put Jodha and Ram Charan before a Magistrate and they refused to make a statement. It seems extraordinary that if Jodha had been willing to make a confession on the 28th and had been of the same opinion on the 30th when he pointed out various ornaments that he should have changed his mind when he was brought before the Magistrate and no reason is given for this change. This fact throws a doubt on the statement that Jodha did make a confession in the village on March 28. It was argued for defence that in any case a confession to a mukhia would be to a Police Officer and would be barred by s. 25 of the Indian Evidence Act. It has been held in Mga Nyin v. Emperor (1). that a village headman is not a Police Officer for the purpose of s. 25 of the Evidence Act. No ruling to the contrary has been shown.

Now in regard to the ornaments, three exhibits have been sent to this Court. The Sub-Inspector states that Bhimma accused handed over hamel, Ex. P. 3, from his house and that Ram Dayal accused handed over a bera Ex. P-4, from an earthen vessel inside his house. In regard to the two karas, Exs. P-2/1 and P-2/2, the Sub-Inspector stated that Ram Charan handed over one of them from under the threshold of his house and that Jodha handed over the other from under the floor of his house. This was confirmed by the two search witnesses, Ajudhia Prasad, mukhia and Balwant Singh As to the identity of these articles that property had belonged to the deceased, there was a statement of Balwant Singh that he knew that the karas Exs. P-2/1 and P-2/2 had been worn by Musammat Gaura. sister of the deceased and that the bera, Exhibit P-4 was worn by the deceased. There was also the evidence of Musammat Gaura that the karas were hers and the bera was worn by the deceased at times only and she said that the hamel Ex. P-3 belonged to Churna Lodh and she afterwards explains she meant Ram Charan accused and that her brother, Meghraj, told her that Ram Charan had pawned this hamel with him. She says that she had seen the hamel hanging on a peg in the house. Now as regards the identification of these articles, the gold ear-rings, Ex. P-4, are mere plain circles of gold which have no mark on them by which they could be identified and there are many such ornaments in villages. The silver karas are also of a very ordinary type with very little ornamentation. Musammat Gaura says that these were made for her by her brother-in-law, Kashi Ram, who died 12 years ago and, therefore, no sonar was called to prove that he made them. She says that she stayed occasionally from one to four months with her brother, Meghraj, and at other times she stays with her other relatives. At the time of the murder, she was staying with other relatives and did not come until the next morning when she was called. Her explanation of how she came to leave the karas in the house of the deceased is:

"I had kept my pair of karas with the deceased last year in the month of Jeth. I was then ill and felt rather uncomfortable with them so I put them with the deceased."

Her suggestion is that she allowed her karas to remain with the deceased from the hot weather of 1933 because they were rather uncomfortable. It seems unlikely. Further she admits:

"The second officer came to me and asked me to see if the things in the house were in order and I replied that they were. I was much grieved and I had not the strength to go upstairs myself."

She made no attempt to see whether her karas were missing or not and it was not till after the discovery of the karas that she came forward apparently with a claim that they were hers. These facts render her evidence that these karas belonged to her extremely doubtful. The other article, the hamel, is one which is quite easily capable of identification as it has a number of coins and a large square of silver with various small ornaments on it and an elaborate pattern. This article, however, is stated by Musammat Gaura to have been pawned by the accused, Ram Charan, with the deceased Her only knowledge on the pawning is attributed to a statement of the deceased. No books are produced to show that there was such a transaction. The suggestion for the prosecution is that the deceased was a man of considerable property and he apparently traded in money-lending as he was a Bahora. Such persons usually keep books of account in which these transactions of pawning are entered. No witness for the prosecution has stated that there were no books of deceased, but no books are produced. Another point in regard to this hamel is that if the hamel had belonged to Ram Charan accused and Ram Charan had taken part in this robbery, he would naturally have asked that this hamel should be given back to him. But the prosecution case is, according to the confession, that it was given to the accused Bhimma and the evidence is that Bhimma handed this hamel up from his house. He is not the brother of Ram Charan as they have different fathers and the evidence of the Sub-Inspector indicates that they have different houses. The confession mentions only a few ornaments as having been found. It would be, in my opinion, quite impossible that at a distribution of the loot Ram Charan would not have recognised his hamel and ask for it but the confession makes no mention of any such demand by Ram Charan. I think, therefore, the prosecution altogether fails to show any connection between the hamel and the deceased. The hamel may no doubt have been found in the house of the accused person Bhimma but that does not prove that it was in any way connected with the alleged robbery. A lantern was stated to have been taken out from a pond. This was stated to have belonged to the deceased but lanterns are of a common type and cannot be identified as belonging to any particular person.

To sum up the case, the medical evidence does not prove that the accused died from asphyxiation by throttling. Some symptoms favour that view and some do not. The confession was not made before a Magistrate and it is only stated to have been made in the village to three villagers whose evidence is of little weight to prove that a confession was made.

The evidence of ornaments being found in the houses of the accused may be correct, but the prosecution fails to connect those ornaments with the deceased. For these reasons, I find that the prosecution has not proved the charge against these four appellants, I, therefore, acquit them of the offence of s. 394, Indian Penal Code, and direct that they be set at liberty.

Appeals from Appellate Decrees Nos. 1355 and 1356 of 1930

FAZL ALI AND ROWLAND, JJ.

Musammat KRISHNA KUAR AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Adverse possession—Actual possession, necessity of, to sustain claim to land by limitation—Land under water and unfit for occupation—Effect—Survey of land—Presumption of occupation by Government at one point of time—Whether arises.

In order to sustain a claim to land by limitation under the Indian Act, there must be actual possession of a person claiming as of right by himself or by persons deriving title from him. In a suit for recovery of possession it is for the defendant to show that he had at sometime been in adverse possession of the land in suit continuously for a period of 12 years

A certain land was under water and unfit for occupation from 1911 to 1916 and there was no evidence as to possession before 1911. The most that could be said was that the disputed land having been surveyed as a part of a village in 1898 a presumption arose that in that year the lands were capable of occupation and were in fact occupied by or on behalf of the Secretary of State :

Held, that from that evidence regarding the state of things at one point of time, it could not be presumed that the Secretary of State (defendant) had adverse possession for a period of 12 years and hence the plaintiff should succeed in the suit on proof of his title. Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (1), relied on.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Saran, dated January 24, 1930, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Saran, dated August 31, 1928.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Phulan Prasad Varma, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader and Mr. Jadubans Sahay, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—These second appeals arise out of one suit brought by the plaintiff-respondents claiming to recover possession of 18 bighas 15 kathas and 16 dhurs of land as part of their estate Domaigarh Nezamat. They had impleaded as defendant No. 1 the Secretary of State for India in Council as proprietor of the Government estate adjoining and the first defendant's lessee as defendant No. 2. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit passed a modified decree in favour of the plaintiffs for possession of 17 bighas 17 kathas 4 dhurs out of the disputed land and gave a decree for mesne profits against the second defendant. Each of the two defendants appealed separately to the District Judge who has allowed the appeals and dismissed the suit. For this reason the plaintiffs present two appeals to this Court from the same judgment and decree.

Most of the facts are common ground. The plaintiffs have three tauzis in Mauza Domaigarh Nezamat, that is to say, the stable portion of village Domaigarh Nezamat. South of this some diara land has accreted which is Government estate of the name of Domaigarh Diara. In 1915 a dispute arose between the plaintiffs and the Collector of Saran representing the Secretary of State in which the plaintiffs claimed 141 bighas 2 kathas which had been demarcated by the Kanungo as part of the khas mahal alleging that this was wrong and the land belonged to their permanently settled estate. Negotiations for compromise falling through they brought Suit No. 58 of 1917 to recover this land from the Secretary of State and that dispute was adjusted by a compromise dated June 6, 1918, by which it was agreed that the revenue survey boundary between the two villages should be relaid by the Survey Department and the parties would abide by the boundary so relaid and their rights should accrue from the date of decree to be passed, the parties agreeing to accept the boundary between the two aforesaid estates that should be laid down. The boundary was accordingly relaid. The plaintiffs allege that under the compromise referred to their title to the land now in suit was declared and they obtained possession and the Courts have found that in fact the boundary as relaid by the survey department includes the bulk of the disputed land within the limits of Nezamat Domaigarh Estate. The contention for the defendants was that the dispute of 1916—18 related to the boundary as between Domaigarh Nezamat and Domaigarh Diara and had nothing to do with laying the boundary between Domaigarh Nezamat and any other village. To the south east of Domaigarh Nezamat is Bhabhauli, a Government estate of defendant No. 1 and the suit lands are in fact part of village Bhabhauli being shown as such in a cadastral survey map prepared in 1898. It is common ground that this map does not agree with the revenue survey map and that the disputed land falls according to the map of 1898 in the defendants' estate of Diara Bhabhauli and according to the revenue survey map of 1843-44 it falls within the plaintiffs' estate of Domaigarh Nezamat. It is not a part of the 141 bighas which were in dispute in 1915. The Subordinate Judge thought that the dispute of 1915 and 1917 covered the whole of the southern boundary of Domaigarh Nezamat and therefore, this decision should be decisive of the rights of the parties in the disputed land.

The District Judge on appeal pointed out that the compromise was for the adjustment of the disputed boundary between Domaigarh Nezamat and Domaigarh Diara and was of opinion that the compromise decree could not affect anything which was not at the time within one of those two villages. After giving his reasons for this conclusion, which he has done clearly and at length, he says "This disposes of the respondents' contention that they obtained title to the land in suit by virtue of the compromise decree". He then states that there being no evidence on which he could find that the plaintiff-respondents were definitely in possession of the land in suit prior to the compromise or at any time within 12 years previous to it, the plaintiff-respondents failed to establish their title to the land because they could not prove that they had a subsisting title to the land in suit at the time of the compromise. The District Judge in saying this seems to have somewhat lost sight of the fact that the decision of the first Court had been based not merely on the plaintiffs' claim to title based on the compromise, but their claim to title based on the revenue survey map of 1843. The revenue survey map is in a sense itself a document of title because it was in this map that the Government reduced to writing the statement of the areas settled with zamindars. It was accepted by both the Courts below that the revenue survey map had been correctly relaid by the Survey Officer deputed from Ranchi in 1921 and that on the basis of that relaying the original title to the land in suit lay with the plaintiffs. Mr. Mullick's contention before us is that on those facts and that finding the plaintiffs ought to succeed unless the defendants can prove that by adverse possession the title of the plaintiffs was extinguished at some time between the revenue survey and the date of the proceeding in the present litigation. The Subordinate Judge has said in his judgment "the plaintiffs had title to the land from a long time before 1917" and says that "in diara lands possession should follow title". Perhaps the Subordinate Judge has expressed himself rather too broadly. The principles to which regard is to be had in dealing with suits for alluvial land are set out in Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (1), where the principles governing limitation were discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council and applied both to lands which had been continuously under cultivation for a long series of years and to lands in which the enjoyment of the land after a short period had been from time to time interrupted by the action of the river diluviating the lands. Their Lordships found that in respect of one part of the land in dispute before them, Government had acquired title by continuous adverse possession for over 12 years. Thereafter the land becoming submerged the title of the plaintiffs was not revived in respect of this land, but as regards the northern portion of the disputed lands their Lordships said other considerations applied.

"The Government have never had actual possession of the land through their ijaradars for a continuous period of 12 years because the land became submerged prior to the year 1869 and remained so (it is found by the High Court) until within ten years of the commencement of the suit. But it is urged on behalf of the Government that having been in possession through their tenants when the lands became submerged their possession must be deemed to have continued in law while the lands were under water and to have revived on their being reformed."

But their Lordships held that

"for the purpose of trying the question whether limitation applies, the Government must be regarded as a trespasser and dispossessor of the rightful owners, and it would be contrary both to principle and authority to imply such constructive possession in favour of a wrong doer, so as to enable him to obtain thereby a title by limitation. In order to sustain a claim to land by limitation under the Indian Act, there must be actual possession of a person claiming as of right by himself or by persons deriving title from him".

(1) 29 C 518.

Their Lordships thought that on the dispossession of the Government by the vis major of the floods the constructive possession of the land was, if anywhere, in the true owners. Applying this observation to the case before us, I think, that it was in the circumstances of this case for the defendant to show that he had at sometime been in adverse possession of the land in suit continuously for a period of 12 years. Both sides are agreed in evidence that the land was under water and unfit for occupation from 1911 to 1916 and there is no evidence as to possession before 1911. The most that can be said is that the disputed land having been surveyed as part of village Bhabhauli Diara in 1898, a presumption arises that in year the lands were capable of occupation and were in fact occupied by or on behalf of the Secretary of State. From that evidence regarding the state of things at one point of time we cannot, I think, presume that the Secretary of State had adverse possession for a period of 12 years. Consequently the plaintiffs should have succeeded in the suit on proof of their title.

Accordingly I would allow the appeals, set aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge and restore those of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs will get proportionate costs throughout. There will be only one set of Pleader's fee for the two appeals.

Fazl Ali, J.—I agree.

THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, CENTRAL AND UNITED PROVINCES, LUCKNOW—OPPOSITE PARTY

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 66 (2), 30 (2), 31—Appeal to Assistant Commissioner filed beyond time—Refusal to admit appeal not being satisfied that appellant had sufficient cause for delay—Appeal, if has proceeded beyond stage referred to in s. 30 (2)—Action under s. 66 (2), if can be taken by High Court—'Order confirming assessment', in s. 31—Meaning of.

Action under s 66 (2), Income Tax Act, cannot be taken if the appeal has not proceeded beyond the stage referred to in s. 30 (2), and the High Court cannot direct the Commissioner to state a case. Where an appeal is presented to the Assistant Commissioner beyond time and he refuses to admit the appeal on not being satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause, no appeal can be registered and disposed of in the manner laid down by s. 31 and no order under s. 31 can be passed and hence action under s. 66 (2) cannot be taken. Jot Ram Sher Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1), relied on.

An order confirming the assessment is an order which has reference to the assessment and which affirms it. Where the question of assessment is not even considered and the appeal is rejected as one barred by limitation, the order of dismissal cannot be considered to be one confirming the assessment

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Applicant.

Order.—This is an application under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act for an order of this Court requiring the Income Tax Commissioner to state a case under s. 66 (2) of the same Act. The applicant was assessed to tax by the Income Tax Officer. He preferred an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner after more than thirty days from the date of the notice of demand. The Assistant Commissioner fixed a date calling upon the assessee to show cause why the appeal should not be rejected as one filed beyond time. On the date so fixed and after hearing the assessee the appeal was rejected. The assessee applied to the Income Tax Commissioner for revision of the order of the Assistant Commissioner. His application was dismissed. He then applied to the Income Tax Commissioner for statement of case under s. 66 (1). This application was also rejected. Thereupon he filed the present application.

It has already been held by this Bench in Jot Ram Sher Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1) that the High Court can require the Income Tax Commissioner to state a case only if the conditions required by s. 66 (2) are made out and that one of those conditions is that an order under s. 31 or s. 32 or s. 33 should have been passed in the case. It appears to us that no order under any of those sections was passed in the present instance. A reference to ss. 30 and 31 of the Income Tax Act shows that an appeal is filed under the former section, and if it is admitted as an appeal presented in time, the appeal is ripe for hearing and a date is fixed for its disposal on the merits. It is only after that stage that the Assistant Commissioner functions under s. 31 and can dispose of the appeal by confirming, reducing, enhancing or annulling the assessment or setting aside the assessment and directing the Income Tax Officer to make a fresh assessment, etc. s. 30 (2) prescribes the period of limitation for appeals which according to that sub-section should "ordinarily be presented within thirty days of receipt of notice of the demand relating to the assessment or penalty objected to or of the date of the refusal to make a fresh assessment under s. 27, as the case may be."

The Assistant Commissioner is, however, authorised to admit an appeal after the expiration of that period, if he is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting it within that period. If the Assistant Commissioner is satisfied, admits the appeal, the order is one under s. 30 (2). If he is not satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause, he refuses to admit the appeal, in which case no appeal can be registered and disposed of in the manner laid down by s. 31 and no order under s. 31 can be passed. It follows that action under s. 66 (2) cannot be taken if the appeal has not proceeded beyond the stage referred to in s. 30 (2), and the High Court cannot direct the Commissioner to state a case.

The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that the Assistant Commissioner dismissed the appeal presented before him though it may be that it was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by limitation. Accordingly, he argues that the order is one confirming the assessment within the meaning of s. 31, Income Tax Act. We do not think that this contention is sound. An order confirming the assessment is an order which has reference to the assessment and which affirms it. Where the question of assessment is not even considered and the appeal is rejected as one barred by limitation, the order of dismissal cannot be considered to be one confirming the assessment. As already stated, the order of the Assistant Commissioner in this case properly described is not an order dismissing the appeal but is an order refusing to entertain the appeal.

For the reasons stated above we hold that s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, does not apply, and the High Court cannot direct the Commissioner to state a case for the decision of the question of law said to arise from the order of the Assistant Commissioner. We express no opinion as to whether the question which the applicant desires to be considered by the High Court is a question of law.

The application is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Reference No. 45 of 1934
October 9, 1934
MOHAMMAD NOOR AND LUBY, JJ.
RAM SINGH—PETITIONER
S. A. RIZWI—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 197, 436—S. 197, when operates—Offence must be so connected with official duty as to become inseparable from it—Order of Magistrate quashing proceedings—Whether amounts to discharge — Power of High Court to order further inquiry without reference to High Court.

In order to attract the provisions of s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code, the act must be so connected with the official duty as to become inseparable from it. It must be so connected with the official act as to form part of the same transaction. It will be perhaps quite a different thing if for the time being the public officer stops the official work, engages himself in private work and in that connection commits an offence. But it may be that a Judge or public servant may commit an offence as against a stranger while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. [p. 130, col. 1.]

Where a Deputy Magistrate was engaged in realising taxes and he had threatened the defaulters and immediately he turned round and engaging himself with the complainant took him to task for being near him in a particular manner:

Held, that the offence alleged against him was so connected with the performance of his official duty that it was impossible to say that it was an independent act in no way connected with the realization of taxes, and that it did not matter that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction over the complainant. Consequently, sanction of the Local Government was necessary for prosecution.

The order of a Magistrate quashing the proceedings amounts to an order of discharge and it is open to the Sessions Judge, if he is of that opinion, to order further inquiry into the complaint without referring to High Court.

Cr. Ref. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, in his letter No. 3127 X-1, dated August 14, 1934.

Mr. Baldeo Sahay, for the Petitioner.

Sir Sultan Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

Mohammad Noor, J.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Monghyr. He has recommended that an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of that place quashing the proceedings of a criminal case against Mr. Rizwi, a Deputy Magistrate at Monghyr, be set aside. The facts are these:

Taxes were imposed upon the inhabitants of Barhiya village in the District of Monghyr for maintaining an additional Police force there. One Dhanukdhari Singh had defaulted in the payment of that tax, and on December 15, 1933, the the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Rizwi, went to that village to execute the distress warrant issued against him. He was accompanied by clerks, constables, peons, defadars and chaukidars. It is alleged that one Ram Singh, an inhabitant of the village and Head Clerk in the Office of the Deputy Inspector of Schools in Kishunganj, who was then on leave, was standing amongst the spectators behind the Deputy Magistrate when the latter was engaged with the defaulters, pressing them for payment of the taxes. Ram Singh's case is that he was standing with his hand crossed on his chest. The Deputy Magistrate, after he had finished with the defaulters Kare Lal Singh, son of Dhanukdhari Singh, and Tooka Singh from whom the tax had to be realized, turned round and asked him (Ram Singh) angrily what the matter was. Ram Singh replied "nothing." On this the Deputy Magistrate asked him to lower down his hands and himself pulled them down. On this Ram Singh asked the Deputy Magistrate what the harm was in standing in the manner in which he was standing. This irritated the Deputy Magistrate, who used abusive language towards him and gave a hard blow on his cheek and under his orders constables charged him with lathis and one of them hit him on his right elbow. On the next day (December 16, 1933), Ram Singh filed a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Monghyr, accusing the Deputy Magistrate and the constable of offences under ss. 323 352 and 504, Penal Code. As it transpired that Ram Singh had also sent a telegram of the incident to the District Magistrate the passing of order was postponed and the telegram was sent for. Nothing seems to have been done till January 4, when the Sub-Divisional Magistrate having been apprised that a counter-case was started against Ram Singh by the Police ordered the complaint case of Ram Singh to wait till the counter-case was disposed of. In the counter-case Ram Singh was sent up for trial. He then moved this Court for the transfer of the two cases to another District on the ground that they could not be fairly tried at Monghyr, inasmuch as a Deputy Magistrate of that place was a party to both of them. His Lordship the Chief Justice rejected it, but referring to the order of January 4, in Ram Singh's complaint case, which I have referred to above said:

"There is no need for the complete disposal by judgment of the counter-case before the petitioner's (Ram Singh's) complaint is tried. The orders in both cases should be postponed until both cases have been heard and this will enable both sides to put their versions of the incident before the Court to give evidence"

Further on His Lordship said:

"Both sides in this case should be heard on their respective complaints and a single judgment should be delivered disposing of the entire matter."

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate proceeded with the counter-case and having finished it directed on June 13, 1934, in compliance with the order of this Court, issue of summons against Mr. Rizwi so that he might complete the hearing of Ram Singh's complaint case also. Mr. Rizwi appeared on June 21, 1934, through the Court Inspector who took a preliminary objection that Mr. Rizwi could not be prosecuted without the sanction of the Local Government under s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code. On June 28, 1934, the Sub-Divisional Officer upheld the objection and quashed the proceedings against Mr. Rizwi and afterwards pronounced judgment in the Police case against Ram Singh and convicted him. Ram Singh has preferred an appeal which is pending before the Sessions Judge of Monghyr. He also moved the learned Sessions Judge against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer upholding the contention of the Court Inspector that sanction of the Local Government was necessary for the prosecution of Mr. Rizwi. The learned Sessions Judge has referred it to this Court, recommending that the order quashing the proceedings against Mr. Rizwi be set aside. He is of opinion that the offence, if any, as disclosed by the complainant could be tried without the sanction of the Local Government.

I have to point out at the outest that it was not necessary for the learned Sessions Judge to refer the case to this Court. He himself was competent to deal with it. The order of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer, dated June 28, 1934, quashing the proceedings against Mr. Rizwi after he had been summoned amounted to an order of discharge, and it was open to the learned Session Judge, if he was of that opinion, to order further inquiry into that complaint. However as the matter has been referred to us and the question is of some public importance, we proceed to give our decision on the points raised. The only question is whether or not in the present case the prosecution can proceed without the sanction of the Local Government. Before I come to the facts disclosed by the complainant, it is necessary to examine the provisions of s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code, as it stood before its amendment in 1928 and the effect of the amendment made in that year. The section as it stood before the amendment ran thus:

"When any Judge or any public servant not removable from his office without the sanction of the Government of India or the Local Government is accused as such Judge or public servant of any offence, no Court shall take cognizance, etc., etc."

The words "as such Judge or public servant" were the subject-matter of judicial interpretation in more cases than one. It is unnecessary for me to refer to them in detail. It was held by the Calcutta High Court in Baisnab Charan v. Sukhomoy Chowdhury (1), that a Magistrate or a judicial officer who was holding a trial could not be said to be acting in a judicial capacity if he abuses or defames a witness or a legal practitioner appearing before him. A different view was taken by the Madras High Court in the case of In re Ghulam Muhammad Sharif-ud-daulah (2). The trend of the decisions, however, was that the offence for the trial of which sanction was necessary should be one which can be committed by a Judge or a public servant in his capacity as such Judge or public servant. In the section as it now stands the words replaced the words "is accused as such Judge or public servant of any offence." The obvious effect of this amendment, in my opinion, is that the scope of the protection has been widened, and some of the earlier decisions are no longer good law. Sir John Woodroffe in his edition of the Criminal Procedure Code, remarks as follows and I endorse it:

"The amended section, however, substitutes for the words 'as such Judge or public servant of any offence' the following: of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties.' Thus defamatory language used by a Judge to a person out of Court when not sitting as a Judge would not be within the section; but the case would be different if the same words were used by the Judge in the trial of a suit as he would then be acting in the discharge of his official duties."

The nice question whether the Judge or public servant was accused as such will no longer arise. The only question will be—was he accused of committing an offence while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. The learned Sessions Judge has referred to several decisions, but, in my opinion, none of them is of any assistance to us in the disposal of this case. I propose to examine them in detail. The first is Amanat Ali v. Emperor (3). There a Sub-Deputy Collector had misappropriated a sum of money paid to him as salami for setting certain khas mahal lands. The learned Judges while construing the section as it stands now, observed as follows:

"The question is whether in the present case the offence is alleged to have been committed by the public servant, namely, the Sub-Deputy Collector while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. That would seem to imply that something in the nature of an official character attached to the act itself, that act either being in fact done or purporting to be done as an official act in persuance of the public office held by the public servant."

It may on the one hand be said that when the Sub-Deputy Collector received the money, he was not acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his public duty; but on the other hand, it is clear that the money was entrusted to him as Sub-Deputy Collector and he received it as such. The misappropriation was no doubt committed by him in his private capacity, but that may be said of every criminal act done by a public servant in the course of discharging public duty. At the time of committing the offence the public servant cannot be said to be discharging a public duty. With all respect to the learned Judges I am unable to agree with the construction which they put upon the plain meaning of the section. As was pointed out by Waller, J., in the case of Jujjavarapu Gangaraju v. Kandiboyina Venki (4), the policy of the Legislature to afford a reasonable protection to public servants against vexatious charges arising out of the performance by them of their official functions, will become conspicuously unsuccessful. His Lordship said that:

"by a series of judicial decisions that protection has been refined down to the vanishing point," and referred to an observation of Seshagiri Ayyar, J., in Sankaralinga Tevan v. Avudai Ammal (5), which ran thus:

"If this argument is pushed to its logical conclusion, no public servant or Judge can have the safeguard of a sanction, as it is not within the powers of such an officer to commit an offence. Any offence committed by such a person must prima facie be beyond his official rights and duties."

However so far as the case of Amanat Ali v. Emperor (3), is concerned, it may be said in support of the decision that when the Sub-Deputy Collector received the money he was not acting as a public servant. The next case referred to by the learned Sessions Judge is In re Narayan Janu Mahajan (6). There intimidation and force was caused by officers of a village for the purpose of collecting subscription for an association which was encouraged by Government. It was held that it could not be said to be an act purporting to be or falling in the discharge of their official duties. The learned Sessions Judge thinks the case to be on all fours with the present one. I am not of that opinion. In the Bombay case the officers were engaged in collecting subscription which was encouraged by Government. It is no part of the official duty of a public servant to collect voluntary subscriptions. In the present case Mr. Rizwi was engaged, at any rate, a few seconds before the incident in realizing taxes. This was certainly a part of his public duty.

Two more cases have been referred to by the learned Sessions Judge Gulabmiya Dadumiya v. Emperor (7) and Kamisetty Raja Rao v. T. Ramaswamy (8). In the former an organizer of Co-operative Credit Societies was appointed Liquidator of a Society. He misappropriated certain sums of money. It was held that the money having come to his custody as liquidator, no sanction under s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code, was necessary. The decision rested upon the question whether the liquidator was a Judge. It was held that he was not. It was further contended that as an organizer he was not removable except by orders of the Local Government. It was held that the two offices were distinct, and the misappropriation committed as Liquidator did not require sanction for prosecution in spite of the fact that the incumbent was also an organizer of Co-operative Credit Societies. In the second case the fact was that a President of the Municipal Council was charged of threatening a voter with injury to his property with intent to induce him to vote for a candidate or to abstain from voting. It was held that the offence did not require sanction of the Local Government. It is clear that in this case the offender while threatening the voter was in no way engaged in the performance of any public duty, nor was the canvassing for a vote in any way connected with the performance of public duty.

The learned Sessions Judge has also referred to B. B. Mitra's commentary on the Criminal Procedure Code, 8th Edition, pages 539 and 540. I have not been able to find anything there, which supports the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge. On the other hand, there is a passage which has been endorsed by Waller, J., in Jujjavarapu Gangareju v. Kandiboyina Venki (4), which I have referred to above. Referring to the cases decided under the old section, the learned commentator says:

"These cases, though correctly decided under the old Codes, would be of no authority now, as the language of the present section materially differs from the language of the old law. Under the present section it will not be necessary to decide whether the facts of the accused being a Judge or public servant was a necessary element in the offence or whether the offence was one which could not have been equally committed by a private person. These nice questions would not arise; if it is found that the Judge, Magistrate or public servant has committed an act at a time when he was doing (or purporting to do) an official duty, this will be sufficient to attract the provisions of this section. In other words, the legislature has now given a greater protection to the Officers concerned than it did under the old section."

The decided cases not being quite in point, we have to fall back upon the wording of the section itself and apply them to the facts of the present case. Ram Singh's petition of complaint places the assault and insult immediately after the Deputy Magistrate had threatened the defaulters. In his petition of complaint he says:

"They (meaning thereby the clerks, constables, etc.), were making demands from Karelal Singh and Tooka Singh of tarafshrikant and on their promising to pay in course of January and February and on their expressing inablity to pay then and there, the two persons were subjected to harsh treatment. A number of spectators were there. Out of curiosity I also stopped there and took my stand three or four cubits behind Mr. Rizwi. Having finished with them, Mr Rizwi turned back. Finding me standing there with my hands crossing each other on my chest he asked me what was the matter—"keya hai."

In his statement on oath he says:

"The Deputy Magistrate after holding out threats to them (meaning the defaulters) looked back and inquired of me if I wanted anything"

The question is, when the Deputy Magistrate engaged himself with the complainant, was he acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty? Mr. Baldeo Sahai, who appears on behalf of Ram Singh, contends that the performance of the official duty was finished as soon as the Deputy Magistrate turned round towards the complainant and engaged himself with him. I am, however unable to accept this contention, because as I have said and as was pointed out in the Madras case just referred to, as soon as a public servant engages himself in the commission of an offence he momentarily withdraws himself from the public function. I cannot conceive of any case in which a Judge or public servant can be said to be committing an offence and at the same time acting or purporting to act as Judge or public servant, because when he engages himself in the commission of an offence he is not acting or purporting to act as a public servant. If we accept this contention we will have to confine the sanction to cases in which the Judge or public servant commits the offence as such, that is offences peculiar to his office and that will nullify the effect of the amendment deliberately made by the legislature.

In M. L. Sivaramakrishna Ayyar v. Seshappa Naidu (9), Curgenven, J., said that:

"the offence contemplated must contain an element necessarily dependent upon the offender being a public servant."

Waller, J., said commenting upon this observation:

"We are of opinion that that is too limited a construction of the section. The question is not as to the nature of the offence, but whether it was committed by a public servant acting or purporting to act as such in the discharge of his official duty. We hold that, if the offence alleged was committed by the public servant, while he was actually engaged in or purported to be engaged in the discharge of his official duty, sanction is required. Assuming that In re Ghulam Muhammad Sharif-ud-daulah was wrongly decided, as the law then stood, the decision would certainly be correct—in our judgment as the law now stands."

In my opinion, each case must be decided on its own facts. The offences in order to attract s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code, must be so connected with the official act as to form part of the same transaction. It will be perhaps quite a different thing if for the time being the public officer stops the official work, engages himself in private work and in that connection commits an offence. But in the case before us it is not so. The Deputy Magistrate was engaged in realising the taxes. According to the complainant he had threatened the defaulters and at the next moment he turned round and engaged himself with the complainant and took him to task for being near him in a particular manner. The alleged offence was so connected with the performance of his official duty that it is impossible to say that it was an independant act in no way connected with the realisation of taxes. The learned Sessions Judge has stated that the Deputy Magistrate had absolutely no jurisdiction over the complainant. This is true. But it may be that a Judge or public servant may commit an offence as against a stranger while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty. For instance if a Magistrate is holding a Court in the open where there are number of sight-seers and by-standers. He thinks, though wrongly, that a certain by-stander is hindering or obstructing his work. He deals with that stranger roughly. I am clearly of opinion that this all will come within the words :

(9) 15 Ind. Cas. 248; A I R 1929 Mad. 172; 30 Cr. L J 396 52 M 347

while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty."

Sir Sultan Ahmad argued that even an offence committed purely on private account unconcerned with the official act would come under s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code, if when the offence was committed, the Judge or public servant was engaged in the performance of official duty. I am, however, as at present, advised, not prepared to accept this contention: I think as I have said the act in order to bring it within s. 197, Criminal Procedure Code, must be so connected with the official duty as to become inseparable from it. In my opinion, therefore, this is a case in which sanction of the Local Government is necessary.

I cannot close this judgment without referring to a certain passage in the letter of reference of the learned Sessions Judge. In connection with the appeal pending before him he has referred to the order of this Court passed by His Lordship the Chief Justice and says as follows :

"The instructions given in the aforesaid order have not been followed by the lower Court on account of which the order of conviction of the petitioner appealed against cannot stand, if sanction in the petitioner's case is not necessary for this reason I propose to keep the appeal pending till the disposal of this reference."

Here the learned Sessions Judge is obviously in error. I am perfectly certain that the learned Chief Justice did not mean and could not have meant that both the cases must be carried to all the stages even if both or either of them collapsed on account of some legal or other defect. What his Lordship meant was this that the decision of both the cases on merits should be pronounced at one and the same time so that no question of pre-judging the one or the other may arise. If, however, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate thought that the case brought by Ram Singh could not proceed, he was perfectly justified in dropping it; and then he had no option left but to pronounce judgment in the other case. Even if the view taken by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate had been wrong and we would have come to a different conclusion, our decision would have had no effect whatsoever upon the decision in the counter case. The learned Sessions Judge should now dispose of the appeal on its own merits irrespective of what has happened in the complaint of Ram Singh.

With these remarks I would discharge the reference

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, rr. 4, 7 (1)—Order granting review on ground of error apparent on the face of the record—Appealability of.

No appeal lies from an order granting review under O. XLVII, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, except on grounds mentioned in O. XLVII, r. 7 (1). Where the ground for granting review is an error apparent on the face of the record, no appeal lies from the order.

Misc. F. A. from an order of the Senior

Sub-Judge, Ambala, dated February 16, 1933.

Messrs. Qabul Chand and Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chiranjiv Lal for Mr. Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—It is objected that no appeal lies. The objection is correct. An order under r. 4, O. XLVII, Civil Procedure Code, granting an application for review can be appealed against but only on the grounds mentioned in O. XLVII, r. 7 (1). Those grounds do not exist here. It is contended that the order contravened the provisions of r. 4 (2) (b) of O. XLVII, but that is not correct.

The review was granted on account of an error apparent on the face of the record and not on account of new matter or evidence. The question of the knowledge of the applicant-respondent does not, therefore, arise. For these reasons the appeal cannot proceed and I dismiss it with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 2—'In pursuance of an enactment', meaning of—Person honestly believing that he is acting under some enactment—Protection of—Police constable making report against plaintiff—Suit for damages—Proof that defendant acted honestly on some information received—Necessity of, for protection of Art. 2—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 44.

The words 'in pursuance of an enactment' in Art. 2, Limitation Act, must be interpreted as meaning acting in conformity with an enactment and not merely pretending to act or acting under colour of such an enactment. Where a person honestly believes that he is acting under some enactment, he is protected. But where a person merely pretends that he was so acting and knows that he should not act under that enactment, he cannot be said to be acting in pursuance of any such enactment. No doubt under s. 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is the duty of every person to make a report to the Police of the commission of certain specified offences, but there is no such duty cast upon a citizen, much less on a Police Officer, to make such a report when no facts exist. He would certainly not be acting in pursuance of s. 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code, if he concocts a purely false story and then makes a report of such a false story, knowing it to be false. [p. 134, col. 2.]

Consequently, where a defendant has done an act or omitted to do an act, knowing that he had no ground whatsoever for so acting or omitting to do an act, he does not come within the purview of Art. 2. It is only defendants who have acted honestly, although they might have exceeded the actual power conferred upon them by an enactment who would be protected. Of course, where it is established that the act done was in strict accordance with an enactment, there would be an obvious protection. But even where the power was exceeded, there would be protection in cases of good faith and bona fide belief. [ibid]

Thus where a suit is filed for damages on the ground that the defendant, a Police Constable, who cherished a grudge against the plaintiff, made a false report at the Police Station stating that the plaintiff was leading a riotous mob, if the defendant were to satisfy the Court that at the time when he made the report he acted honestly on some information received, he would be protected, even though the report might turn out to be absolutely false but not so to the knowledge of the defendant. [p. 134, col. 2; p. 135, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

S. C. A. from the decision of the District Judge of Bareilly, dated April 16, 1930.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Ismail, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for damages on the ground that the defendant, a Police constable, who cherished a grudge against the plaintiff, made a false report on August 28, 1927, at the Police Station stating that the plaintiff was leading a riotous mob. It was not till March 15, 1928, that this first information report was produced in Court when the plaintiff became aware of its existence. The suit was filed on August 28, 1928. The defendant in addition to denying the allegation that there was any malice or bad faith on the part of the defendant and denying that the report was false, further pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have applied Art. 2 of the Limitation Act and dismissed the claim, without going into the question of whether the defendant had, in fact, acted in good faith or not. The case came up in second appeal before a learned Judge of this Court, who referred it to a Bench of two Judges which then referred this case to a Full Bench.

In England where the question of interpretation of a similar Statute containing the words "act done in pursuance of an enactment", has arisen, the view has been invariably expressed that the defendant cannot seek the protection of the enactment unless he shows that he acted in good faith. In Selmes v. Judge (1). Lord Blackburn remarked.

"It has long been decided that such a provision as that contained in this section is intended to protect persons from consequences of committing illegal acts, which are intended to be done under the authority of an Act of Parliament, but which by some mistake are not justified by the terms and cannot be defended by its provision. .. ...I agree that if a person knows that he has not under a statute, authority to do a certain thing, and yet intentionally does that thing, he cannot shelter himself by pretending that the thing was done with intent to carry out that statute"

We may also refer to Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 23, p. 344, para 965, where rulings on the interpretation of the corresponding section of the Public Authorities Protection Act (1893) are mentioned. See also Smith v Shaw (2).

In Richard Spooner and Bomanjee Nowrojee v. Juddow (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed:

"Our books actually swarm with decisions putting a contrary construction upon such enactments and there can be no rule more firmly established, than that if parties bona fide and not absurdly believe that they are acting in pursuance of Statutes, and according to law, they are entitled to the special protection which the Legislature intended for them, although they have done an illegal act."

In the Indian Limitation Act of 1871, Art. 2, ran as follows:—

"For doing, or for omitting to do an act in pursuance of any enactment in force for the time being in British India."

Taking the Article in its strict literal sense, it might well have been contended that the statute would have no application unless the act was done in strict pursuance of the enactment in force, and accordingly where the action was in excess of the power conferred by the statute, the Article of the Limitation Act would have no application. But the view expressed consistently was that even if the action is in excess of the powers conferred by the statute, there would be the protection provided the action was in good faith.

For the first time in 1877, the language of the Article was slightly changed and ran as follows:

"For compensation for doing, or for omitting to do, an act alleged to be in pursuance of any enactment in force for the time being in British India."

The words "alleged to be" were added which had not appeared in the previous enactment, and yet the Courts did not consider that the introduction of these new words had made any substantial change in the law as it had stood before. In the case of Ganesh Das v. C. F. Elliot (4) it was laid down that the words "alleged to be in pursuance of any enactment" must be reasonably construed, and that the person who seeks to take advantage of the shorter period of limitation must show that he had reasonable ground for justifying his action under the particular enactment on which he then relied and not arbitrarily asserted or thought so, i.e. he must, in short, have assumed to act in the honest exercise of a supposed statutory power. The same view was reaffirmed in the case of Narpat Rai v. Kirpal Singh (5), and it was laid down that to bring a suit under the above article, it is requisite for the defendant to show that he acted with ordinary care and intelligence, and honestly believed his act to be in pursuance of an enactment for the time being in force. The same view was also assumed in the case of Jai Ram v. Gurmukh Singh (6). In the Bombay High Court also a Division Bench of that Court in the case of Ranchordas v. Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay (7), relying on the English authorities already quoted held that where the person seeking the protection of the Act cannot claim that his conduct has any relation to the "execution of the act" if he knowingly and intentionally acts in contravention of its provisions, he would not be entitled to the protection if he did not act bona fide.

In the case of Municipal Board of Mussoorie v. H. B. Goodall (8), Art. 2 was not applied by the High Court, but Art. 28 was applied, because it was considered that there was a special provision applicable to illegal issue of warrant of distress whereas Art. 2 would be a general article only.

Our attention has not been drawn to any ruling in India between 1877 and 1908 in which it was ever held that the defendant is entitled to the protection of Art. 2 even if he acted dishonestly and in bad faith, knowing that he had no right to act under any enactment. In 1908 the new Limitation Act was enacted and Art. 2 was reproduced exactly as it was in the Act of 1877. There is accordingly a fair presumption that the legislature accepted the interpretation put by the Courts on the language of Art. 2, as it had stood in the Act of 1877.

Even under the new Act there is plenty of authority for the view that where a person acts dishonestly, knowing that he has no right to proceed under any enactment, he cannot bring himself within the scope of Art. 2. See Wali Ullah v. Raj Bahadur (9), Richard Watson v. The Municipal Corporation of Simla, 2 Ind. Cas. 819 (10) and Dhondu Dagdu v. Secretary of State for India (11).

The learned Advocate for the respondent relies on the case of Mukat Lal v. Gopal Sarup (12). No doubt in that case the Bench expressed the opinion that for the purposes of Art. 2, it was not absolutely necessary that the defendant in doing or omitting to do the act should bona fide believe that he was acting correctly and in accordance with law. But the actual facts of that case were such that this general observation was not actually called for. In that case an Amin, who had been ordered to sell a certain property at auction, was proceeding to sell it in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff's case was that he tendered the amount of the decree, but the Amin refused to take the money and proceeded to sell the property. The complaint, therefore, was that the defendant had omitted to perform a duty which had been imposed upon him by the Code of Civil Procedure, while he was acting in pursuance of that Code. It was in these circumstances that the Bench held that however imporperly the defendant might have acted in refusing to take the money the suit was governed by Art. 2 of the Limitation Act, and no question of the good faith of the defendant arose. The case, therefore, is distinguishable on the ground that there the plaintiff had admitted that the defendant was purporting to proceed under the Code of Civil Procedure, though he had omitted to comply with one of its provisions making it incumbent upon him to accept the money when tendered.

The case of Municipal Board of Benares v. Behari Lal (13), does not directly decide this point. Article 2 of the Limitation Act was actually not applied to that suit which was held to be governed by s. 326 (3) of the Municipalities Act.

In the case of Shariful Hasan v. Lachmi Narain (14). Article 2 of the Limitation Act was applied to a case where the District Judge had found that the defendant had a bona fide belief that he had a legal right to act, and had also found that the defendant had in fact such legal authority. There the Sub-Inspector, who apparently had cherished some malice against the plaintiff, arrested him on a complaint made by a person who was present on the spot and was prepared to identify the plaintiff. Having arrested him he also handcuffed him and took him to the Police Station. The District Judge had come to the conclusion that the Sub-Inspector had not exceeded his powers and had authority both to arrest the plaintiff and also to handcuff him. It was in these circumstances that the Bench held that the mere fact that the Sub-Inspector had a previous malice against the plaintiff would not deprive him of the protection of Art. 2 of the Limitation Act, because he obviously acted under s. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was justified in acting under that section. In the judgment emphasis was laid on the fact that there was a finding of the District Judge that the defendant had a bona fide belief that he had the legal right to act and that he had such legal authority. This case is, therefore, no authority for the proposition that even where the facts are false to the knowledge of the defendant, he can seek shelter behind the provisions of Art. 2.

The language of the article is no doubt very unhappy, and the use of the ambiguous words "alleged to be" causes considerable difficulty. On the one hand, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff contends before us that these words are a mere superfluity, and have no special significance, and accordingly much attention has not been paid to those words in the various judgments delivered by the Indian Courts. He urges that these words must mean doing or omitting to do an act as alleged by the plaintiff. On the other hand, the learned Advocate for the respondent contends that these words must mean "alleged" at the time of the commission or the omission of the act, i. e., alleged by the defendant. That the words do not mean alleged by the plaintiff in the plaint or alleged by the defendant in the written statement is clear from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Punjab Cotton Press Co., Ltd. v. Secretary of State (15), where the canal authorities had cut the bank of a canal to avoid accident to an adjoining Railway and not to the canal itself, and in consequence thereof the plaintiffs' adjacent mills had been damaged, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that Art. 2 was not applicable, as the act alleged was not done in pursuance of any enactment. Their Lordships pointed out that it was quite clear that upon the plaintiffs' showing that was an act which the defendants performed at their own hands, and which, so far as the statute were concerned, they did not seem on the statement contained in the plaint in a position to justify. Their Lordships pointed out that Art. 2 should not be applied as if it were proved against the averment of the plaintiffs, and that there should be an enquiry as to whether the action was done for any purpose of protecting the canal or as alleged by the plaintiffs only for the purpose of protecting the railway and letting the water away. The case was accordingly remanded to the Lahore High Court for a further investigation.

The question is certainly not free from difficulty, and we are alive to the danger of persons who profess to act in the exercise of powers conferred upon them by enactments being harassed by frivolous suits and called upon to establish their good faith in some cases. At the same time it would be unfair to concede exemption to persons who, knowing that there is no ground for any such action invent a false story and profess to act under some enactment by abusing its provisions. It seems to us that although the words chosen by the legislature are not happy, their introduction was intended to obviate the difficulty of the article being interpreted too strictly. Taking it literally, it was not wide enough to cover the case of a person who in good faith had acted in pursuance of an enactment, when it was found later on that he had exceeded his powers. To protect such person it was necessary to widen the scope of the article and give him protection where, although the power was exceeded, he still acted in good faith and honestly believed that he was acting in pursuance of the enactment. But the additional words should not be interpreted as implying that the legislature has shortened the period of limitation in favour of persons who, knowing the falsity of the facts, did an act or omitted to do an act in order to harm another person. As in England, the expression "in pursuance of any enactment" must be interpreted as meaning acting in conformity with an enactment and not merely pretending to act or acting under colour of such an enactment. Where a person honestly believes that he is acting under some enactment, he is protected. But where a person merely pretends that he was so acting and knows that he should not act under that enactment, he cannot be said to be acting in pursuance of any such enactment. No doubt under s. 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code it is the duty of every person to make a report to the Police of the commission of certain specified offences, but there is no such duty cast upon a citizen, much less on a Police Officer, to make such a report when no facts exist. He would certainly not be acting in pursuance of s. 44 of the Criminal Procedure Code, if he concocts a purely false story and then makes a report of such a false story, knowing it to be false. It would, therefore, follow that where a defendant has done an act or omitted to do an act, knowing that he had no ground whatsoever for so acting or omitting to do an act, he does not come within the purview of Art. 2. It is only defendants who have acted honestly, although they might have exceeded the actual power conferred upon them by an enactment who would be protected. Of course, where it is established that the act done was in strict accordance with an enactment, there would be an obvious protection. But even where the power was exceeded, there would be protection in cases of good faith and bona fide belief. We are, therefore, of opinion that although the language of the section is unhappy, there is no good ground for departing from the view which had been expressed under the old Act and in support of which there is a preponderance of authority in India.

If the defendant were to satisfy the Court that at the time when he made the report he acted honestly on some information received, he would be protected, even though the report might turn out to be absolutely false but not so to the knowledge of the defendant.

We accordingly allow this appeal and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below send the case back to the trial Court through the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal not filed in time due to fraud by Counsel's clerk—If sufficient reason for extension of time

Where an appeal is not filed in time due to a deliberate fraud of the Counsel's clerk and there is no fault on the part of the client who has paid everything required to be paid by him or on the part of the Counsel who trusted his clerk, there is sufficient reason for the extension of time under s. 5, Limitation Act.

F. C. A. from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lyallpur, dated July 7, 1933.

Messrs. J. L. Kapur and B. A. Cooper, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Faqir Chand and Faqir Chand Mital, for the Respondents.

Young, C. J.—In this case one Allah Wadhaya had a decree passed against him on March 7, 1933. He came to Lahore in order to file an appeal and was taken to one Tufail M. Malak, a Barrister practising in this Court. The Barrister agreed to take the case and, on May 15, 1933, the client paid the Munshi of the Barrister Rs. 442 for the stamp for filing the appeal and agreed to pay him Rs. 150 for the case. He paid him the amount of printing charges and some portion of the fees. The appeal, however, was never filed, and later, in the month of October, the client was informed that his appeal had been dismissed in default. This was incorrect information as the appeal, in fact, had never been filed. The client subsequently came to Lahore, made enquiries, saw his Counsel and discovered that the appeal had never been filed, owing to the fraud of his Munshi who had stolen the money deposited with him for fee and printing charges. The Munshi has absconded. The client engaged another Counsel and the appeal was filed on November 13. This application has now been made for extension of time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

We called for an affidavit from the Counsel first engaged. That affidavit we have now perused and we are satisfied that it would not be proper to say that Counsel himself has been negligent in this matter. He swears that he asked the Munshi several times about the appeal; that he was told that it had been filed and that the Munshi was waiting for the date; that, on July 7, Counsel came to the conclusion that the date would not be fixed till after the vacation and he left for Kashmir. On his return in October, the Munshi told him that the appeal had been withdrawn as the parties had compromised the matter. Under these circumstances the fault lies with the Munshi and there is no doubt that, provided the affidavit is correct, the Munshi has been guilty of fraud and embezzlement.

It is argued on behalf of the opposite party to this application that negligence of Counsel is no answer. It is further argued that fraud or negligence of Counsel's clerk cannot be relied on to bring the application within s. 5 of the Limitation Act. Various authorities have been quoted to us. We do not need to decide this point on negligence. We have not been referred to any authority dealing with the question of limitation having expired due to the fraud of Counsel's clerk. We are satisfied that there is a great difference between the case of limitation having expired due to negligence and limitation having expired due to the deliberate fraud of a Munshi. We are agreed that in the latter case s. 5 may be used for extending the time. Assuming fraud, there is no fault in this case either on the part of the client himself who had paid everything he had to pay or on the part of the Counsel who trusted his Munshi. It is just possible that it might be said that Counsel should not trust his Munshi so completely as in this case but we take into consideration the fact that Counsel was young and the Munshi was old and had never before given cause for complaint.

Under these circumstances we think that a case has been made out. We, therefore, extend the time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

The paper book will now be printed.

Second Civil Appeal No. 947 of 1932

SULAIMAN, C. J., THOM AND RACHHPAL SINGH, JJ.
RAM NATH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
CHIRANJI LAL AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Joint family business—Mortgage debt contracted by father to finance new business—Sons, when liable—Manager of ancestral joint family business—Power to borrow—Alienation, if binding on minor members—Test to decide if business is a new business—Accumulations of income of ancestral property, if ancestral property—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 61—Appropriation—Absence of appropriation by creditor or debtor—Duty of Court—Discharge in order of time.

Under Hindu Law where the business to finance which, money has been borrowed, is a new business, the sons are not liable for the payment of the loan contracted by the father for this business, unless the transaction was for the benefit of the family and to the benefit of the estate or it was supported by legal necessity The question whether the particular transaction in dispute was for legal necessity or was for the benefit of the estate and the joint family, is something more than the mere question whether the money borrowed was required for the purposes of a new business. The fact that it was required for a new business would not be any justification. If in addition thereto, it could be shown that there was either a pressure of necessity to continue that business, as it was the mainstay of the family or that the particular transaction was at the time beneficial to the family and the family estate, the transaction would be supported but, of course, on the latter ground. The question whether the transaction was for such benefit or not is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of the case, and it is for the Court to decide whether it was so beneficial and was such as an ordinary prudent manager would have entered into in the interest of the family. Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2), held not overruled by Benares Bank Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), referred to. [p. 149, col 1]

Per Rachhpal Singh, J.—A manager of an ancestral joint family trading business has full authority to take loans and make alienations to raise money for the purpose of that business. Such a transaction will be binding on the entire joint family including the minor members. The creditor is not bound to enquire into the finances of the business so long as the business forms the purpose of the debt. All that is necessary for him to see is that the money is really required for the purpose of the business and there is no element of speculation or gambling in the transaction. [p. 147, col. 1.]

Accumulations of income of ancestral property purchased or acquired out of the income or with the assistance of ancestral property, the proceeds of sale of ancestral property, and property purchased out of such proceeds are ancestral property. [p. 148, col. 1.]

The real test for deciding whether a business is a new business wholly unconnected with the joint family ancestral business, or is an extension of that business is to determine the source which supplied the money with which the new business was started. If the assets or income of the joint family ancestral funds are utilized for opening a new branch, then the new branch will form part of the old business. On the other hand, if the business is started by a manager without any aid from the ancestral family assets, then, it will be a new business. In that new business the other members will have no right nor will any liability attach to them in respect of it. But merely because a business has been extended it cannot be inferred that the extension was a new business started by the manager separately. [p. 148, cols. 1 & 2.]

On the principle underlying the provisions of s. 61, Contract Act, the Court should, in the absence of any appropriation by either the debtor or the creditor, direct that the payment should be applied in discharge of the debts in order of time if there be such, and if they are all of the same date, in discharge of each of such debts proportionately. [p. 143, col. 1.]

S. C. A. from a decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Muttra, dated May 31, 1932.

Messrs. Ram Nama Prasad, Ambika Prasad Dube and Kanhaiya Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Respondents.

Sulaiman, C. J.—A suit was brought on the basis of a mortgage-deed dated December 9, 1918, executed by the deceased father of the defendants appellants in favour of the deceased predecessor of the plaintiffs, whose executors the latter are. In the mortgage-deed it was recited that money was required for the payment of a certain antecedent debt and for the purposes of two shops located at Muttra and Delhi, respectively. On June 28, 1922, a sum of Rs. 3,000 was paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee without specifying any part of the mortgage-debt to which it was to be appropriated. It is now found that the shop in Muttra was a lace shop and was an ancestral business; but that the shop ta Delhi was a cloth shop and was not ancestral, though it was a family business. There is no finding as to how long this shop had been in existence before the mortgage-deed was executed, but there is a finding that it had been in existence for a number of years. The defence inter alia was that there was no legal necessity for the loan. Both the Courts below have decreed the claim.

The second appeal came up for hearing before a Division Bench of this Court, which has referred two questions to the Full Bench for consideration. These may be formulated as follows, (1) Whether where the business to finance which—money has been borrowed is a family business and the loan is for the benefit of the family, the sons are liable for the payment of the loan contracted by the father; and (2) whether the payment of Rs. 3,000 should be considered, to be repayment partly of the debt incurred for the benefit of the ancestral property and partly of the debt for advancing the Delhi business and appropriated accordingly.

In earlier cases of this Court a wider meaning was attached to the expression "benefit to the estate." For instance in Tula Ram v. Tulshi Ram (1), Sir Promoda Charan Banerji, an eminent Judge of this Court, in delivering the judgment held that the mortgage-debt was binding because it was for the benefit of the estate and the family, although that could not be a case of pressing necessity. This view was followed in several cases. On the other hand, there were some later cases in which a narrower view was taken that the alienation should be only for the purpose of saving the estate from some threatened injury. There was also some conflict of opinion as to the extent to which the members of a joint Hindu family are bound by alienations made by the father as manager in connection with the requirements of a business run by him.

In Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2), a Full Bench of this Court came to the conclusion that in order to sustain an alienation of joint family property made by the managing member of the family the transaction must be one which is for the benefit of the estate and such as a prudent owner would have carried out with the knowledge available to him at the time. Transactions justifiable on the principle of "benefit to the estate" are not limited to those transactions which are of a "defensive character." The previous cases were reviewed at some length and principal reliance was placed on the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanuman Prasad Pandey v. Babooee Munraj Koonwaree (3), that,

"The power of the Manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded."

The authority of the case of Sahu Ramchandra v. Bhup Singh (4) was also relied upon and the following passage from page 143* was quoted:

"In all of the cases where it can be established that the estate itself that is under administration demanded, or the family interests justified the expenditure, then those entitled to the estate are bound by the transaction."

Another passage from page 441* also may be quoted:

"Although the correct and general principle be that if the debt was not for the benefit of an estate then the manager should have no power either of mortgage or sale of that estate in order to meet such a debt, yet an exception has been made to cover the case of mortgage or sale by the father in consideration of the antecedent debt."

It was held by the Full Bench that the benefit to the estate was something distinct and different from pressing necessity.

After this pronouncement, in many cases of this Court it was held that even where pressure of legal necessity is not established, a transaction may be upheld on the ground that it was for the benefit of the estate and the family which an ordinary prudent manager would enter into, e. g., Raj Kumar v. Mohan Lal (5) and Mahesh Prasad v. Jagannath Chowbe (6).

In Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), their Lordships of the Privy Council then made it perfectly clear that money borrowed by the father as manager of a joint Hindu family for the purpose of a business which was not ancestral was not borrowed for legal necessity and a mortgage granted as security for such a loan was not binding on the minor members of the joint family, as it was invalid. In that case a business of taking contracts from P. W. D. (apparently a business of a sporadic character in which fresh risk would be incurred as each new contract was taken) had been started by two persons as managers of the family and it was not their ancestral business. As the business had been started by two members as managers, it might possibly have been started with joint funds, but it is not quite clear whether the bank had suggested that even if the business had not been an ancestral business, it had become joint family property by being blended with other properties. One thing, however, is perfectly clear that on behalf of the bank it was not contended that the particular transaction had been for the benefit of the joint family and the family estate and the claim does not seem to have been defended on any such ground. Their Lordships applying the principle laid down in Sanyasi Charan v. Krishnadhan Banerji (8), held that the manager of a joint family has no power to impose upon a minor member of the family the risk and liability of a new business started by him and that a new business is not within the purview of the verses 27 to 29 of Chap. I of the Mitakshara. In that case the bank had failed to prove that it had made reasonable and bona fide enquiries as to the ancestral character of the business which had led it to believe that the business was ancestral, even though in point of fact it had not been so. Accordingly the amount raised by the managers for the purposes of the new business was not considered to create a charge on the joint family property.

This authoritative pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council was the subject of interpretation by another Full Bench of this Court in Amraj Singh v. Shambhu Singh (9). The majority of the Judges constituting the Bench held that the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council finally settled the question that money required for the purposes of a non-ancestral business is not sufficient in itself to justify alienation of family property and that the money for a new business started even by the father as manager of the family involving, as it does risk and liability on the minor members of the family, cannot justify an alienation. The majority, however, took the view that although the requirement of a new business was not in itself sufficient to justify alienation, their Lordships' ruling did not overrule the decision of the Full Bench of Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2). It was accordingly held that where the transaction was not speculative but was in the best interests of the family and for its benefit which an ordinary prudent manager would have made, it would be open to a Court to hold that the transaction is binding on the other members of the family though the loan was secured by an alienation of the family property. It was pointed out in that case that in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), it had never been suggested on behalf of the bank that the business had been started for the benefit of the family or that it had been necessary for its support and maintenance or was necessary to save the family from starvation or ruin, and that accordingly their Lordships' pronouncement did not necessarily imply that such considerations were altogether irrelevant. The question as to whether that particular transaction was necessary for the family or was for the benefit of the family or the family estate was a question of fact depending on evidence and could not be pressed in appeal if it had not been raised at the trial.

The view that the Full Bench ruling in Jagat Narain v. Mahtura Das (2) has not been overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council when delivering the judgment in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) is further strengthened by the circumstance that although the case of Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh (10) was cited by Counsel before their Lordships, as appears from the report on p. 301* this Full Bench ruling which had partially overruled the view expressed in Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh (10), was not cited before their Lordships at all. It seems clear that if any question had arisen as to there being a benefit to the family or the estate, it is most likely that the Full Bench ruling also would have been referred to.

It seems to me that the recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in P K. P S. Pichappa Chettiar v. Chokalingam Pillai (11), also does not even indirectly overrule the Full Bench ruling. Their Lordships have laid down that where a managing member of a joint family enters into a partnership with a stranger, the other members of the family do not ipso facto become partners in the business so as to clothe them with all the rights and obligations of a partner: in such a case the family as a unit does not become the partner but only such of its members as in fact enter into a contractual relation with the stranger.

It has always been a settled law that money borrowed for the purposes of an ancestral family business is per se a good justification for alienation of family property. In such a case the presumption is that the carrying on of the ancestral business is necessary and no further enquiry on the part of the creditor is required. As a result of their Lordships' pronouncement, it is now finally settled that the mere fact that money has been required for a business newly started by a manager or the father is not in itself sufficient to justify an alienation of the family property. But it has never so far been held that the need of a newly started business taints the transaction with illegality so much that even if there be other circumstances they would be of no avail in validating the transaction. It seems to me that the question whether a particular transaction, even though the money was required for the purposes of a new business, was for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate in the family is a somewhat distinct question. Where the new business is the separate property of individual members of a joint family, it is quite obvious that money required for its purposes can never be for the benefit of the family or of the family estate at all. In such an event an alienation of the family property would be wholly unjustified. On the other hand, if the business though not ancestral, had previously become the joint family business, then there may be circumstances under which money required for such business may either be for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family and the family estate.

The interest of the members of the family in a business is property just as the rights in any other kind of property. It has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in many cases that separate property of a member of a family can by blending become joint family property and that for such an effect to be produced, it is not necessary that the consent of all the other members of the family, some of whom may be minors and therefore incapable of giving consent, must be obtained as a condition precedent. See Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal (12), Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (13), Radha Kan v. Nazma Begam (14), and Rajani Kant Pal v. Jaga Mohan Pal (15).

In Metharam Ramrakhiamal v. Rewa Chand Ramrakhiamal (16), (at p. 294)* their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked as follows:

"The question whether a man who happening to be a member of a joint family carried on his business, whatever it was, personally for his own personal benefit without detriment to the joint family fund, or carried on such business as a member of the joint family for the benefit of the joint family, is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence."

This undoubtedly implies that even an apparently new business carried on by a member of a family may be a joint family property. In Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal (17), their Lordships of the Privy Council explained that a joint family business is a business carried on with joint family funds for the benefit of the joint family and the properties of the joint family, both movable and immovable including the shares of minor members of the family, are liable for the debts incurred in carrying on the business. But in that case, as the minor plaintiffs had apparently succeeded to the business, it might be said that so far as they were concerned, it was an ancestral business, though possibly not so in the case of some of the other members.

In the case of a joint family business where it is necessary for its proper conduct that money should be borrowed from time to time, it is within the authority of the karta to borrow money for the purposes of the family business: See Abdul Majid Khan v. Saraswati Bai (18).

The cases in Bengal are generally under the Dayabhaga Law, which confers power on each co-parcener to transfer his share. In the Madras Presidency also the interest of the mortgagor is regarded as being validly transferred. In the Punjab, cases are governed mostly by the Customary Law. In the Bombay Presidency also, cases under the Mitakshara Law are rare. It is only in these Provinces that the question assumes an acute form inasmuch as hundreds of cases are decided every month by the subordinate Courts in which the question of the authority of the father as manager to raise money for a joint family business as distinct from an ancestral business and his separate business, is almost invariably raised.

Although the alienation of joint family property merely for the purposes of a newly started business is not justifiable, there is really no prohibition against a manager of a joint family in respect of starting a new business. Indeed, it is the commonest thing in this Province to start such new businesses. It may be started with the joint family funds or with separate funds and may possibly at the outset be the separate property of the manager, but if other kinds of properties can, by the conduct of the parties and by the blending of their income with the income from the joint properties, become joint property, there seems to be no good reason for holding that the interest of a particular member of a family in a business or a mill or a factory can never become joint property by being thrown into the common stock. A business started by a father might have been run for decades and the members of the family may in fact be taking part in its conduct and the family may even be maintained solely with its income, and joint funds might have been utilised for its purposes from time to time. In such an event it may be impossible to hold that the business still remains the separate property of the manager who started it originally and can never form the subject of partition between him and the other members. Such a view would amount to holding that a manager can appropriate joint funds and start a business of his own which he can keep separate and over which he can always possess full disposing power with the right to alienate or gift it to anyone he likes, without his right being questioned by the other members of the family, and can also prevent it from being brought into the common stock at the time of a partition. It would become impossible for a manager to invest any surplus joint fund, that there may be, in stocks or shares in any concern, or the other members can take all the gross assets, without undertaking the liabilities.

If there were an absolue prohibition against the starting of a new business or newly taking shares in an existing business, the family may have to be tied down to the ancestral business only, which may cease to be profitable, and therefore so long as there is some minor member of the family alive, it would be impossible to divert the activities of the family to any other line. As sons and grandsons are in being, there may almost always be some minor member of the entire family existing and accordingly it may for many generations become impossible to start a new business. But as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council, alienation for money required for such a new business is not justified merely because it is a business started by the manager. The want of authority really is as regards the alienation of family property for the purposes of a new business, and not that there is any absolute prohibition against the starting of a new business.

It is contended that the expression "for the sake of the family" occurring in the Mitakshara is ejusdem generis with what precedes it, and must be confined to the case of "compelling necessity only." Now the text of Brahaspati quoted in the Mitakshara was not confined to the father or manager only, but would apply to any co-parcener described as "a single individual." Taking the text literally, it would authorise a junior member to alienate property for the purposes behind the back of the manager. The learned Counsel for the appellant concedes that the judicial interpretation put on the text in some cases has not been to follow the words literally and give to a junior member any such authority. The expression "for the sake of the family" occurring in this text has been judicially interpreted to have a wider meaning than mere pressure of necessity. Taken literally it is more comprehensive than even "benefit to the estate." The expression is wide in scope, and even if it has been too widely interpreted, there are many other matters in the Hindu Law wherein a long course of decisions have established propositions perhaps not in strict accordance with the Hindu texts if taken literally. For instance, a distinction has been drawn betwen a voluntary alienation by the father which may be impugned on the ground of want of necessity and an involuntary auction sale to a third party which can be impugned only on the ground of the debt being tainted with illegality or immorality; or again, the non liability of Hindu sons for the payment of their father's debts which are incurred after separation; as also alienation in lieu of an antecedent debt. Reliance is next placed on the commentary on this text by the author of the Mitakshara and it is urged that the illustrations given therein are exhaustive, and therefore, exclude the plea of the benefit of family as distinct from compelling necessity. But illustrations are seldom intended to be exhaustive, e. g., Girdhari Lal v. Bengal Government (19), where the enumeration of bandhus in the Mitakshara was held to be illustrative and not exhaustive. The statement of the law in Hanuman Prasad Pandey v. Babvoee Munraj Koonwaree (3) was based on a liberal interpretation of the words kutumbarthe" (for the sake of the family) and although that was a case of a manager of a minor, the law has always been understood to apply and has been invariably applied to managers of joint families.

That the words "for the sake of the family," have a wider meaning than mere compelling of a necessity would also appear from the following consideration: It is now well settled on the authority of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council that money required by a manager for an ancestral business is justified and alienation in lieu of it is binding on the other members. There is no text of the Mitakshara which specifically refers to the needs of an ancestral business. Accordingly its justification rests entirely on the same verses 27 to 29 of Chap. 1. There can be numerous occasions where there may be no compelling necessity to raise money for an ancestral business. There may be plenty of funds in hand and yet the manager may borrow more money for the business, or it may be that he may feel it beneficial to enlarge the business though not unduly. In such circumstances it may be most difficult to hold that there existed a compelling necessity which was acted as a pressure and which was tantamount to legal necessity. Borrowing on such occasions can only be justified on the supposition that the transaction was for the benefit of the family inasmuch as it was carried out in connection with the family business which a prudent owner would continue. To hold, therefore, that the words "for the sake of the family" have not a wider scope would be almost destroying the very basis of the rulings under which money required for an ancestral business is considered to be fully justified.

The view that "benefit" is something different from "compelling necessity" finds some support from the remarks of their Lordships in P. K. P. S. Pichappa Chettiar v. Chockalingam Pillai (11). While considering the argument that the defendant's liability to the extent to which the family benefited, their Lordships did not simply reject the contention but thought it fit to examine the evidence and came to the conclusion that the evidence was very meagre and that there was no evidence as to the extent of such benefit.

It seems to follow that the question whether the particular transaction in dispute was for legal necessity or was for the benefit of the estate and the joint family, is something more than the mere question whether the money borrowed was required for the purposes of a new business. The fact that it was required for a new business would not be any justification. If in addition thereto it could be shown that there was either a pressure of necessity to continue that business, as it was the mainstay of the family or that the particular transaction was at the time beneficial to the family and the family estate, the transaction would be supported, but of course, on the latter ground. The question whether the transaction was for such benefit or not is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of the case, and it is for the Court to decide whether it was so beneficial and was such as an ordinary prudent manager would have entered into in the interest of the family.

The second question is how the payment of Rs. 3,000 towards the mortgage debt is to be appropriated. The contention on behalf of the defendants is that the whole of it should go towards the discharge of that part of debt which was binding on the mortgaged property and that no portion of it should be set off against the other part for which the family property was not liable. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that if the whole of this sum is not to go towards the payment of the unsecured portion of the debt, then there should at least be an apportionment.

So far as the English Law is concerned, it seems to be well settled that a creditor is entitled to make an appropriation even during a pending action : see the case of Seymour v. Pickett (20). It was held by a Bench of this Court in Kundan Lal v. Jagannath (21), that an appropriation of payment must be made by the debtor at the time of paying and by the creditor at the time of receiving the money. If neither of them makes the appropriation, the law appropriates the payment to the earliest debt. The facts of that case were somewhat different and it was the debtor who was insisting that the payment should go towards the earliest debt. But this view has been expressly dissented from in the other High Courts, and the various cases are summarised in a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Kunjamohan Shah Poddar v. Karunakanta Sen (22).

Reading ss. 59, 60 and 61 together it is clear that so far as the right of the debtor to make the appropriation under s. 59 is concerned, it can be exercised only when a debtor makes the payment with the express or implied intimation that the payment is to be applied to the discharge of a particular debt. It would follow that this intimation, express or implied, must be made at the time when the payment is made. On the other hand, under s. 60 it is only when the debtor has omitted to intimate and there are no other circumstances indicating to which debt the payment is to be applied that the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any lawful debt. This discretion obviously is to be exercised if the debtor has omitted to give an intimation and where there are no other circumstances. It seems to me that the creditor need not exercise this right at once, but he can at his discretion exercise it even later. There is nothing in the section particularly as a past perfect tense "has omitted" has been used to indicate that the creditor loses this right if he does not exercise it at the very time when the payment is received. In many cases it may be impossible to make the appropriation there and then; for instance, when the payment is made at a time when the amounts due under the various heads are not known and the account books are not easily accessible Now, when neither the debtor nor the creditor has made any appropriation, then under s. 61 it is a duty of the Court to apply the payment in discharge of the debts in order of time and if the debts are of equal standing, in discharge of each proportionately.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants that s. 61 in terms cannot apply to this case because here there are not more than one debt, but there was one debt only. But although the loan was one, the purposes for which the amounts were taken were different. Even though the section may not in terms apply to the present case, there can be no doubt that the principle underlying that section must apply. This principle has been applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council to the appropriation by the Income-tax Commissioner of certain payments towards the interest which accrued on the amount due although the principal and interest would strictly speaking constitute only one debt: vide Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga (23). It is also clear from that case that the Income-tax Commissioner could not possibly have made the appropriation immediately the amount was paid. It was only when the accounts for the year were made up that credit was given for the sum and the interest due was reduced.

In the present case althongh on the one hand this money appears to have been raised by a sale of a part of the mortgaged property which was ancestral, there is nothing to show that the creditor was informed of the sources at the time when the payment was made. Again one part of the debt was due from the mortgagor personally and another part from him in his representative capacity as manager of the family. Therefore, it might well have been argued that the creditor was entitled to appropriate the payment towards the discharge of the debt due personally from the person who made the payment rather than the debt due from him in his representative capacity. Again one part of the debt was so to say an unsecured debt: whereas the other was a secured debt. The period of limitation for the unsecured debt would have expired in about two years' time; whereas the period of limitation for the other debt would not have expired till after about eight years. The mortgagee did not in fact bring any suit for recovery of the unsecured debt before the expiry of the prescribed period. This also might well have been made the basis of an argument that the creditor would be justified in making the appropriation towards the unsecured debt in preference to the secured debt.

But this position was not taken up in the Courts below and the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs before the Devision Bench confined his argument to the proportionate appropriation of Rs. 3,000 towards the two parts of the mortgage debt. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the larger question whether there would be any presumption as to the way in which the mortgagee should be deemed to have made the appropriation in the eye of the law. On the principle underlying the provisions of s. 61 it seems that the Court should in the absence of any appropriation by either the debtor or the creditor, direct that the payment should be applied in discharge of the debts in order of time if there be such and if they are all of the same date in discharge of each of such debts proportionately.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants has relied strongly on Budha Mal v. Bhagwan Das (24). But in that case no question of appropriation really arose, the main question being whether there should be a deduction on account of the fact that part of the rents of the estate had been received by the agent of the plaintiff. Apparently there was along with the mortgage another transaction of lease and the plaintiff's principal man of business had recieved on account of the arrears of rent a sum of Rs. 10,000. Their Lordships held that this sum should be deducted from the amount claimed by the mortgagee on account of the payment of the Government revenue and maintenance allowance to the widow in the account and that the balance could be recovered. I do not think that that case in any way helps the appellants.

In my opinion, therefore, the sum of Rs. 3 000 which was paid by the mortgagor should be split up into two portions of Rs. 2,000 which should be assumed to have gone to discharge a part of the secured debt and a sum of Rs. 1,000 which should be deemed to have gone towards the discharge of the unsecured portion of the debt.

Thom, J.—I concur. Had the decision in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2), stood alone, there could have been no question that the mortgage executed by the manager of the joint family was binding upon the minor members of the family. It was contended, however, that this decision has been by implication overruled by the Privy Council in their decision in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7). In that case, however, the question of whether the money was borrowed for the benefit of the family does not appear to have been raised. The plea that the money was borrowed for the benefit of the family was not taken in the pleadings and no evidence was led upon the point. The matter, therefore, was not considered by the Privy Council.

The decision in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2) followed the decision of the Privy Council in Hanuman Prasad Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonwaree (3). That decision is clear authority for the proposition laid down in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2).

The decision in that case is by a Full Bench of this Court. In my judgment in the Benares Bank case the Privy Council never intended to lay down the general proposition that a loan taken by the manager of a joint Hindu family for the purpose of starting a new business could never be binding upon the minor members of the family. There is ample authority not only in the original texts but in the decisions of the Privy Council and of this Court for the proposition that where the starting of a new business is a prudent step taken by the manager of the family for the benefit of the family a loan taken for this purpose or for the carrying on of the new business is a valid loan and is binding upon the minor members of the family. Indeed it would be most unfortunate if the law were otherwise. In the present economic and social state of the development of this country, it must often be absolutely necessary in the interests of the joint Hindu family and for the purpose of conserving the estate of that family not only to discontinue an old ancestral business but to embark upon a new business, and for that purpose to negotiate loans.

I agree that the sum of Rs. 3,000 repaid should be in this case appropriated proportionately to the discharge of the secured and the unsecured debt. The point raised in this branch of the case is not in terms covered by s. 61, Contract Act, but in my judgment the principle underlying that section should be applied. Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has not contended as in my view he could reasonably have contended, that the sum repaid by the borrower should be applied in the first instance to the discharge of the unsecured debt. He has contented himself with the claim that the sum of Rs. 3,000 should be applied proportionately to the discharge of both the secured and unsecured debt. We, therefore, do not decide the general question as to whether where no appropriation is made either by the borrower or the lender, sums repaid should be applied in the first instance to the discharge of that part of a debt which may be unsecured.

Rachhpal Singh, J.—I agree. My Lord the Chief Justice has considered the principal question involved in this case in his elaborate and exhaustive judgment and I am in entire agreement with him in holding that the view taken in the Full Bench ruling in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2) has not been overruled by the ruling of their Lordships in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7).

In Amraj Singh v. Shambhu Singh (9) the question which has been re-agitated before us had come up for consideration before a Full Bench. The majority view was that the Banares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) had not overruled the Full Bench case reported in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2).

In recent ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council P. K. P. S. Pichappa Chettiar v. Chockalingam Pillai (11), there are observations which support the view taken by the Full Bench in Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2). These observations go to show that where a creditor seeks to enforce his claim against a minor member of a joint family in respect of money due from the manager of the family, the question as to whether or not the loan benefited the joint family will be the deciding factor in the case.

A perusal of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), shows that there were three points on which their Lordships gave their decision. These points were: (1) It was contended that a new business, which had been started by two managers of the joint family, was ancestral and therefore, the minor members of the family were liable for the debt due. Their Lordships, after a consideration of the evidence in that case, came to the conclusion that the business in that case was not ancestral. (2) Another point taken by the appellants in that case was that a business started by the father as manager, even if new, must be regarded as ancestral. Their Lordships rejected this contention. (3) Another point urged was that even if the business was not ancestral, the transaction was binding because the appellants had made reasonable and bona fide enquiries which led them to believe that the business was ancestral, and that there was necessity for raising the money for the purpose of the business. Their Lordships, on the evidence produced in that case, came to the conclusion that the appellants had failed to prove that they had made reasonable enquiries as to the character of the business.

These are the only three points decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council. I am clearly of opinion that the question, as to whether or not the transaction was for the benefit of the family, was never decided in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7). As remarked by King, J., in Amraj Singh v. Shambhu Singh (9), at p. 908*), in Benares Bank Ltd. v. Har Narain (7):

> "It was not even argued and presumably, therefore, it was not even arguable upon the facts that it was a prudent transaction, or for the benefit of the estate."

It appears to me that there is no justification for the contention that the Full Bench case Jagat Narain v. Mathura Das (2), has been overruled by implication as a result of the decision of their Lordships in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7).

In my opinion, the real question actually decided by their Lordships in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) is that a Hindu father, acting as a manager of the joint family, cannot make an alienation which might bind the minor members, when money is advanced to him for the purpose of starting a new business and which business is non-ancestral. The ruling of their Lordships will have no application to a case where the father, acting as manager, borrows money by alienating family property, for the purpose of financing a business which is ancestral property and which has been in existence as family business antecedent to the date on which the alienation is made.

Before proceeding further, I wish to point out that there is a clear distinction between transactions made by a manager of a joint Hindu family which does not carry on any trading business and the transaction entered into by the manager of joint Hindu family carrying on an ancestral trading business. Where a manager of a joint Hindu family, which does not carry on any trade, takes a loan or makes an alienation, the creditor has to prove that the transaction was either for family necessity or for the benefit of the family. But on the other hand, where a joint family is carrying on an ancestral business as traders, then, the creditor has only to prove that the money was lent or alienation made for the purpose of carrying on the ancestral business. It is not necessary for him to prove further that the transaction was made for the benefit of the family.

One of the earliest cases on the point is Ramlal Thakursidas v. Lakhshmichand (25). It was held there that ancestral trade descends like other Hindu property upon the members of an undivided family. It was further held that:

"In carrying on such a trade infant members of the family will be bound by the acts of the manager which are necessarily incidental to and flowing out of the carrying on of that trade and that the manager can pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purpose of that trade, and third persons dealing bona fide with such manager are not bound to investigate the status of the family, minor members being bound by the necessary acts of the manager."

This proposition of law has been quoted by Sir D. Mulla in his Hindu Law, Edn. 7, p. 282. He has, however, in his book substituted the words "mortgage or sell" for the word "pledge" used in the above cited ruling. I find myself in agreement with the following observations made in Ramlal Thakursidas v. Lakhshmichand (25):

"The general benefit of the undivided family is considered by Hindu Law to be paramount to any individual interest and the recognition of a trade, as inheritable property, renders it necessary for the general benefit of the family that the protection, which the Hindu Law generally extends to the interest of a minor, should be so far trenched upon as to bind him by acts of the family manager necessary for the carrying on and consequent preservation of that family property; but that infringement is not to be carried beyond the actual necessity of the case."

The next case to which I wish to refer is Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (26), Chandavarkar, J., in his judgment expressed the following opinion:

"The rule of Hindu Law that debts contracted by a managing member of a joint family are binding on the other members only when they are for a family purpose is subject to at least one important exception Where a family carries on a business or profession and maintains itself by means of it, the member who manages it for the family has an implied authority to contract debts for its purposes, and the creditor is not bound to inquire into the purpose of the debt in order to bind the whole family thereby, because that power is necessary for the very existence of the family."

The law on the subject is discussed with much learning in this ruling by Chandavarkar, J. The reason for vesting the manager of a joint family ancestral trading firm is stated by him to be this:

"Under the Hindu Law a joint family which carries on a trade handed down from its ancestors becomes a trading family; trade being one of its Kulachar it attracts to itself all the necessary incidents of trade."

The learned Judge cites several texts of of Hindu Law in support of his view. At one place in his judgment the learned Judge observes:

"The reason of this must be that it is merchants alone who know best what the rules of their profession, adopted in the interest of trade are. The implication is that such rules must be followed in the interest of trade. Nowhere is it stated that these rules do not apply to a joint family carrying on a trade as its Kulachar or family business merely because it occupies also the status of a joint family."

In Malaiperumal Chettiar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (27), Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held that the ordinary presumption in the case of a trading caste or family is that the entire family credit and all the joint family properties are embarked in the business even as regards the minor members. It appears to me that when a joint family carries on an ancestral business it gives out to the world that the manager of the family has the power to carry on the business on its behalf. If this were not so, then, it will be difficult for the manager to carry on the trade as other people would not have dealings with it. In my opinion, it is not open to minors in such a family to say that the transactions made by the manager in the ordinary course of business are not binding on them. The reason is that the business is carried on on the credit of the family property. The family property is held by the profits earned in the business, and it would, therefore, be unjust to hold that members who were being maintained by the profits made out of the business should not be liable for the debts incurred for the carrying on of that very business.

I wish to emphasise, even at the risk of repetition, that there is a difference between transactions to which a manager of a joint Hindu family which has no ancestral trading business is a party and transactions made by the manager of a joint Hindu family which is doing ancestral trade business. The reason is obvious. When a creditor lends money to or accepts an alienation made by a member of a joint Hindu family, he is aware or ought to be aware that the manager is dealing with the property owned by several co-parceners. He is supposed to know that under the Hindu Law, the karta of the family can borrow money or make alienations only where there is a family necessity or where money is required for the benefit of the estate. If he lends money to the karta of the family without satisfying himself whether there is a necessity for the loan, he does so at his own risk. If it is found that the loan taken by the karta of the joint family was not for the benefit of the joint family or for family necessity, then, he must lose. But different considerations will prevail when the manager of an ancestral joint family business, acting as manager of the business, enters into a transaction with a third party. Here, the income of the trade is the only source which maintains the joint family. When the joint family carries on an ancestral business it gives out to the world that it will carry on business exactly on the same terms as any other firm. In the words of Chandavarkar, J., Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (26):

"The implication is that such rules must be followed in the interest of trade and nowhere is it stated that these rules do not apply to a joint family carrying on a trade as its Kulachar or family business merely because it occupies also the status of a joint family."

The manager in the case of a joint ancestral trading business, has an implied authority to contract debts for its purposes, and the creditor is not bound to enquire into the purpose of the debt in order to bind the whole family. It will be impossible for a joint family doing ancestral trading business to carry on the business, if its manager is not to have authority to contract debts for the purpose of the business, the reason being that that power is necessary for the very existence of the family. In such a case all that a creditor has to prove is that the family was doing ancestral trading business and that the money was required for the purpose of that business.

There may be cases in which an ancestral joint family business which at one time was yielding a handsome income which maintained the entire family in comfort might have to be run at a loss. It may be necessary for the manager to take a loan for establishing the business, but the effort may prove to be futile. In such a case it will be wrong to hold that the other members of the joint family would not be bound by the loan taken by the manager. If the business had become profitable once again, all the members of the family would have been benefited by it. It would not be right to hold that as the attempt to improve it had failed, so the other members of the joint family were not liable for the loan contracted by the manager. A recent ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Niamat Rai v. Din Dayal (17) may be referred to in this connection. Their Lordships held that in an ancestral joint family business which is carried on for the benefit of the joint family, the entire property of the joint family is liable for the debts incurred by the manager in carrying on the business. It was further held that where a joint family business had resulted in a loss, it was for the manager to decide whether it would be better to raise more money to put into the business, or to close it down, and a lender or purchaser was not bound to enquire into or prove the reasonableness or soundness of the manager's decision and action. Another case on the point is Ramakrishna Muraji v. Ratan Chand (28). A very recent case on the point is reported in Abdul Majid Khan v. Saraswati (18).

On a consideration of all the cases cited above, it will appear that a manager of an ancestral joint family trading business has full authority to take loans and make alienations to raise money for the purpose of that business. Such a transaction will be binding on the entire joint family including the minor members. The creditor is not bound to enquire into the finances of the business so long as the business forms the purpose of the debt. All that is necessary for him to see is that the money is really required for the proper purpose of the business and there is no element of speculation or gambling in the transaction.

In the case before us, it appears that the joint family carried on two businesses. One at Muttra and the other at Delhi. It has been found that the Muttra business was ancestral. If the creditor can establish that money was advanced to the manager for the benefit of the ancestral joint family business at Muttra, then, in my opinion the mortgage made by the manager will certainly bind the minor members of the joint family. I would go further and hold that the transaction will be binding without the proof of "benefit to the estate" provided that the creditor can prove that the loan was taken by the manager of the joint family business for the proper purpose of financing the ancestral joint family business. To a case of this description the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council will have no application.

As regards the business at Delhi the lower Appellate Court has not given any finding whether this business was ancestral. All that we know is that this business was not inherited by the joint family as an ancestral business. It appears that it was started by the father of the minors some years before the date on which the mortgage in question was created by him and a part of the loan taken was transferred by the mortgagor to the accounts of this Delhi business. If this business was new business started by the manager of the joint family, then the ruling in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) would apply and a loan taken for financing a new business will not bind the minor members of the joint family. Before the Bench hearing this appeal can decide the question as to whether or no the loan taken for the purpose of this Delhi business is binding on the minors, it will be necessary to determine whether this was a new business started by the manager or whether it was an ancestral business. The decision of this question will depend on the evidence which the parties might have produced or may be permitted to be produced in the case. It was argued before us on the authority of Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) that every business started by a manager of joint Hindu family which does not descend by inheritance as ancestral business, should be deemed to be a new business which can never be ancestral. I find myself unable to agree with this contention. The learned Counsel for the appellant relied on the following observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) :

"It was urged on behalf of the Bank that this business was ancestral and that the minors were liable for the debt to the extent of their interest in the joint family property. On the other hand, it was contended that the business was the personal business of Jagannath and the family had no interest in it. Their Lordships have examined the evidence, and they consider that the business was started by Jagannath and Raghunath as managers of the family. The business therefore cannot be said to be ancestral so as to render the minors' interest in the joint family property liable for the debts."

It was on the strength of these observations that it was contended that this was a rule of universal application to the effect that a new business started by a manager of a joint Hindu family can never become ancestral property of the joint family. As I have already stated I find myself unable to agree with this contention. The above observations of their Lordships only mean this that there can be no presumption that a business started by a manager of the joint Hindu family becomes ancestral property. This proposition of law is well settled. There can be no presumption that a business started by a manager or a coparcener is to be treated as ancestral property. This is a point which is to be decided on the facts of each case. It is very necessary to bear in mind that the case of Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) was one in which the joint family had not been carrying on any ancestral trading business. On the other hand, it was a case, in my opinion, of a joint family in which there was no ancestral business. It is further important to note that in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), there was no plea taken by the Bank that new business had become ancestral because it had been acquired with the aid of the joint family funds. In my opinion Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7) is an authority for one proposition only and that is that a loan taken by a manager of a joint Hindu family, for the purpose of starting a new business will not bind the other members of the joint family. There may be cases in which the manager of a joint Hindu family starts a new business with the aid of joint family funds. Then there may be cases in which a co-parcener starting a business may blend it with the joint family property. In both these cases the business will be treated as ancestral property.

As I have already remarked there had been no plea in Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), that the new business started by the managers had been financed by the joint family income or had been treated by the co-parcener as a joint family business; therefore, their Lordships were not considering this aspect of the case. It appears to me that the law on this point is well settled. Accumulations of income of ancestral property, property purchased or acquired out of the income or with the assistance of ancestral property, the proceeds of sale of ancestral property, and property purchased out of such proceeds are ancestral property. Mulla's Hindu Law, p. 246, Edition 7.

In the case before us, if it be found that the Delhi business was started by the manager out of the income of the ancestral family business at Muttra, then the Delhi business, according to Hindu Law, would be considered to be ancestral family business of the joint family. A loan taken for the purpose of financing the Delhi branch would be binding on the minors if the creditor is able to establish that the loan was taken for the purpose of the business. It is not correct to say that every new business started by the manager of a joint Hindu family carrying on an ancestral trading business is a new business which can never be ancestral. There are in this country any number of trading families who have an ancestral business which has branches at various places. Take the following example: A joint family is carrying on an ancestral trading business at Allahabad. Its members decide to open a branch at Nainital, because they consider that if a branch is opened at Nainital, it will yield a good profit. Stocks for the Nainital Branch are purchased out of the assets held by the joint family business at Allahabad, can it be said that the business started at Nainital is not ancestral family business? I think not.

The real test for deciding whether a business is a new business wholly unconnected with the joint family ancestral business, or is an extension of that business is to determine the source which supplied the money with which the new business was started. If the assets or income of the joint family ancestral funds are utilized for opening a new branch, then, the new branch will form part of the old business. On the other hand, if the business is started by a manager without any aid from the ancestral family assets, then, it will be a new business. In that new business the other members will have no right nor will any liability attach to them in respect of it. But merely because a business has been extended, it cannot be inferred that the extension was a new business started by the manager separately. In Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), their Lordships have referred to one of their previous ruling, Sanyasi Charan v. Krishnadhan Banerji (8). In that case their Lordships held that the karta of a joint family cannot impose on a minor member of it the risk and liability of a new business started by himself and the other adult members. In that case it was found that the money had been borrowed exclusively for the purpose of the orphanage business. Their Lordships further found that this new business was neither the ancestral nor an extension of the ancestral business. These observations clearly go to show that the decision in the case would have been different if their Lordships had found that the money had been borrowed for the purpose of ancestral business or for the purpose of an extension of the ancestral business. They add further that there can be an extension of the ancestral business. I am therefore of opinion that the Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), would not be applicable to a case in which money had been borrowed or alienation made by the manager of an ancestral joint family business for the proper purpose of financing that ancestral joint family business. The question as to whether in a particular case a business newly started or old, is an ancestral family business will depend on the evidence produced in each case. I have discussed this aspect of the case at some length though for the purpose of answering the reference made to the Full Bench it was not altogether necessary to do so. My reason is that I wish to make it clear that the Benares Bank, Ltd. v. Har Narain (7), will have no application to the case before us in case it is found that the alienation was made by the manager for the purpose of the ancestral business carried on by the joint family. On the other hand, if the business for which the money was borrowed is a new and non-ancestral business started by the father, then, the sons are not liable for the payment of the loan contracted by the father unless it be established that the transaction was for the benefit of the family and estate or was for legal necessity.

As regards the second point about appropriation, I agree with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice. For the reasons given above I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that the two questions referred to the Full Bench should be answered as proposed by him.

By the Court.—Our answers to the questions referred to us are as follows :

(1) Where the business to finance which money has been borrowed is a new business, the sons are not liable for the payment of the loan contracted by the father for this business, unless the transaction was for the benefit of the family and to the benefit of the estate or it was supported by legal necessity. (2) The payment of Rs. 3,000 should be considered to be repayment of the debt incurred for the benefit of the ancestral property and partly for advancing the Delhi business and appropriated accordingly.

BHIDE AND CURRIE, JJ.

GUJAR SINGH—ACCUSED—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR OPPOSITE PARTY

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 114, 133—Statement of approver uncorroborated and unconvincing—Benefit of doubt to accused.

Where there is no material corroboration of the statement of the approver and the statement in itself is not convincing, it is most unsafe to convict the accused on that statement and he should be given the benefit of the doubt.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated December 20, 1932.

Mr. L. Saunders, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Monier, for the Crown.

Currie, J.—Two men, Gujar Singh, a Jat, and Puran, a Sadhu, were tried on a charge of murdering, in conjunction with Dharam Singh, approver, one Radha, a Jhiwar, on the night of April 30/May 1, 1932. The present appellant Gujar Singh has been convicted and sentenced to death, while Puran was acquitted. It may be noted that two of the assessors were not satisfied that the bones recovered were those of Radha or that Radha had been murdered. The other two assessors held that he had been murdered by Gujar Singh, and one of them considered Puran also guilty. According to Musammat Tej Kaur (P. W. No. 6) her husband Radha had gone on Saturday, April 30, to Qadian, to buy some cloth and to obtain funds by the sale of gold phuls belonging to her. On his return he went to sleep at his shop. When she went to the shop next morning she found him absent; the charpoy had not been spread but was standing up, while the bedding was lying on the ground. She made enquiries for two or three days and eventually sent Maghar, Jhiwar (P. W. No. 8) to see if her husband was with his sister Musammat Kesari (P. W. No. 7) at Saidowal. He had not been there and Musammat Kesari returned with Maghar to Aulakh village. The two women made further search and eventually encountered Gurdit Singh (P. W. No. 11), who informed them that Labhu Brahman (P. W. No. 9) had seen dogs devouring a dead body in a field between Aulakh and Sooch villages. The women proceeded there and, in a depression, in a filed belonging to Bhan Singh, found some bits of cloth, principally pieces of a shirt, a tuft of hair and a pencil, which were recognised as belonging to Radha. That night, May 7, Musammat Tej Kaur went and lodged the report Ex. P. C. at Qadian Police Station, at 11 P. M. Next day, May 8, the Sub-Inspector Dula Singh (P. W. No. 27) proceeded to the scene and, on further search, recovered a human nail, a human tooth pegged with gold, some bits of skin and some more shreds of cloth. On the same day Gurdit Singh Lambardar threw suspicion on Gujar Singh, Dharam Singh and Puran, none of whom were to be found in the village.

The following day, information was received from the Lambardar of Sooch (P. W. No. 19) that a human skeleton was lying on the brink of a pond and, on going there, a skull and some bones were discovered near a pool of water and some clothes were recovered from the water which have been identified by Musammat Tej Kaur as those of her husband Radha. The bones are described by P. W. No. 1 Captain Ram Lal, Assistant Surgeon. He was of opinion that they were those of a male but was unable to suggest any cause of death. At his suggestion they were submitted to the Professor of Anatomy, Captain Nat (P. W. No. 2), who has expressed the opinion that the bones are those of a man aged from 40 to 50. This witness was unable to say definitely whether the tooth recovered belonged to the skull from which the four upper incisors were missing though it did fit the socket. Dharam Singh and Puran were arrested on May 9, and the Sub-Inspector ascertained that Gujar Singh had gone to Kali Mitti in Shinghbhum District and steps were taken for his arrest.

On May 9, Dharam Singh produced a bamboo-stick and Rs. 10 in cash. The Sub-Inspector, on May 11, took the two women, Musammat Hussaini and Musammat Ratno, and the two suspects to Batala to have their statements recorded. They were not recorded that day but the following day the statements were recorded by the Tahsildar at Aliwal. The statements of Dharam Singh and Puran were in the nature of confessions. That confession of Puran has been ruled out by the learned Sessions Judge as inadmissible, holding that the Tahsildar being a Magistrate of the Second Class and not especially empowered, had no authority to record it. Mr. Muhammad Monier, who appeared for the Crown, contended that it should be taken into consideration on the ground that it could be considered to be an oral confession to Sube Khan, Tahsildar. No attempt, however, was made by the prosecution to introduce it in this manner and, in my opinion, it cannot, therefore, be used. Apart from this, it has been retracted and its intrinsic worth must be negligible. Gujar Singh was arrested and sent up from Singhbhum reaching Qadian on the night of May 22, and, on May 23, he produced some earrings (anantis), which were alleged to be the property of Radha. Finally on May 31, the District Magistrate tendered a pardon to Dharam Singh whose statement was recorded by a Magistrate of the First Class, on June 1, 1932. That the bones are those of Radha admits of little doubt, and taking into consideration the circumstances under which they were found, it is practically certain that he was murdered. The question is whether it has been proved that Gujar Singh and the approver were his murderers.

As regards the alleged motive for the murder, according to the approver, Gujar Singh had a liaison with Musammat Hussaini (P. W. No. 12), the wife of Mina. Some three weeks before the murder Gujar Singh took Musammat Hussaini into his deorhi. She was followed by Gaman (P. W. No. 14), a brother in-law of Musammat Hussaini, who quarrelled with him. Musammat As Kaur, Gujar Singh's wife, appeared on the scene and threatened that, if Gujar Singh had behaved in this manner, she in return, would take Radha as her paramour, and Musammat Hussaini alleges that Musammat As Kaur actually did so. It may be noted that this story of Musammat As Kaur threatening to take up with Radha did not appear in the statements of Musammat Hussaini or Gaman as made originally to the Police, and this part of the story at least would appear to be a subsequent addition. The approver further alleges, and in this he is corroborated by Musammat Hussaini, that Radha had formed the liaison with Musammat Hussaini to which Gujar Singh had taken exception. There is no independent evidence to support this. As regards the approver himself he states that he was on bad terms with the deceased Radha because he had an intrigue with Radha's sister-in-law Musammat Ratno (P. W. No. 13) to which Radha had taken exception. As a blind, however, he had got Radha, about a week prior to the murder, to assist to take possession of the house of one Shaman against whom he had obtained a decree. There is considerable discrepancy between the statements of the approver and Musammat Ratno as to the details of their liaison, and I am not satisfied that their statements are true.

The approver Dharam Singh's is the sole evidence as to what is alleged to have happened. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence of the approver and other circumstances in the case, and concluded). There is thus no material corroboration of the statement of the approver. As already remarked, the statement in itself is not convincing and, in my opinion, it would be most unsafe to convict the appellant on the statement of Dharam Singh alone, and I would give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him.

Bhide, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Plaintiff's right to interest subsequent to suit—Difference between claim to interest on amount due to plaintiff and claim to share of interest received by family pending suit.

In a suit for partition, the plaintiff is entitled to get his share of the income which has accrued due to the family by way of interest between the date of suit and the date of the decree. The claim for interest in such a case is not for interest on a sum found due by the defendants to the plaintiff but is for the plaintiff's share of the income of the family which income is derived in the shape of interest, and there is no principle of equity or justice in disallowing interest to the plaintiff in such a case Diwan Chand Kirpa Ram & Co. v. Weld & Co. (2), Bruland v. Earle (3), Jyotibati Chaudharain v. Lachhmeshwar Prasad (4), Ramaswamy Aiyar v. Subramania Ayyar (5), Turner v. Burkinshaw (6) and Ghulusam Bivi v. Ahamadsa Rowther (8), distinguished. Kesho Ram v. Dina Nath (7), relied on. Hiralal Ichhalal v. Narasilal Chaturbhujdas (9), referred to.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and V. Ramaswamy Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit by Nattukottai Chetti (1st plaintiff) against his father (1st defendant), his half-brothers (2nd, 3rd and 7th defendants), step-mother (4th defendant) and half-sisters (5th and 6th defendants) to recover his share of the family property. The 2nd plaintiff is the son of the 1st plaintiff. The matter came up on a former occasion before this Court and was disposed of by Kumaraswami Sastri, J. and one of us. We then found that the plaintiffs were entitled to one-fourth share of the family property and the case was sent back for ascertaining the amount due to the plaintiffs in respect of the various items claimed. The Subordinate Judge has now passed a final decree. The plaintiffs have filed this appeal and there is also a memorandum of objections filed by defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 7 (respondents Nos. 1, 3 and 4).

[Their Lordships after dealing with certain items, which are not material for the purposes of this report, proceeded :]

The next item argued by the appellants relates to interest from the date of plaint up to the date of decree. Interest prior to the date of plaint was allowed by the Commissioner. Nothing more was said about further interest before the Subordinate Judge. It is now suggested for the appellants that the subsequent interest was overlooked by the Subordinate Judge. It is urged for the respondents that the plaintiffs never claimed it. But it does not appear that there is any particular stage at which any specific claim should be made about this item. The plaintiffs might have mentioned it in the course of the arguments before the Subordinate Judge but it cannot be said that they should lose it simply because no express reference was made to it. It has been argued by Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Ayyar for the respondents that the plaintiffs are not entitled to this item of interest in any event and he relied on some decisions, which will be presently referred to. In Suleman v. Abdul Latif (1), it was observed by the Privy Council that in an action to dissolve and wind up the affairs of a partnership, interest should be allowed to the plaintiff only from the date of the final decree. Having regard to the observations at p. 479 of Lindley on Partnership, this principle must be confined to cases of partnership. It is observed in Lord Lindley's book that on principle each partner ought to be entitled to interest on sums overdrawn by the other partners. But the practice is the other way and apparently the decision in Suleman v. Abdul Latif (1), must be taken to be in conformity with the English practice. In Diwan Chand Kirpa Ram & Co. v. Weld & Co. (2), the case relates to a claim for damages for breach of contract. The lower Court did not grant interest up to the date of the decree. Their Lordships observed that such interest was not a matter of course. They made observations in favour of the plaintiff but were not prepared to vary the decree on mere conjecture. This case does not help the respondents. In Bruland v. Earle (3), a sum of money was found due from the defendant and the question related to a direction for payment of interest on the amount so found and it was observed that such a matter was a matter for the discretion of the Court. But in the present case it must be noticed that the plaintiffs' claim is not strictly for interest. The plaintiffs' claim is for a portion of the income of the family during the years that intervened between the date of suit and the date of decree. It is merely an accident that such income is in the shape of interest. The claim is not for interest on a sum found due by the defendants to the plaintiffs but is for the plaintiffs' share of the income of the family which income is derived in the shape of interest. This circumstance distinguishes the case before us from the case in Bruland v. Earle (3), as well as the case in Diwan Chand Kirpa Ram & Co. v. Weld & Co. (2). In Jyotibati Chaudharain v. Lachhmeshwar Prasad (4) and Ramaswamy Aiyar v. Subramania Ayyar (5), the question related to interest on mesne profits, and in this respect, resemble the two cases already distinguished and may be distinguished similarly. The case in Turner v. Burkinshaw (6), relates to a claim by a principal against an agent, and as the agent should have the money always ready to be accounted for to the principal, it cannot be presumed that he earns interest on the amount. That cases should be distinguished on that ground. In the case before us the parties belong to a trading family and the presumption is that the money of the family is always invested. As a matter of fact the whole evidence shows that the 1st defendant has always been investing his moneys. In Kesho Ram v. Piru Mal Dina Nath (7), Broadway, C. J., observed that there was no reason for disallowing the interest prayed for. He also observed that the Subordinate Judge obviously lost sight of this question of interest and except the omission there was nothing to show that he refused to grant interest. There is no principle of equity or justice in disallowing interest to a member of the family during the period of the litigation though presumably the defendants have been making income in the shape of interest. The case in Ghulusam Bivi v. Ahamadsa Rowther (8), relates to mesne profits only and the principle of that decision ought not to be extended to claim for interest. The decision in Hiralal Ichhalal v. Narasilal Chaturbhujdas (9), related to the application of the rule of damdupat in a suit for redemption. The first Court declined to award interest and no complaint was made about it before the District Judge and the High Court refused to interfere. We do not think that this decision helps the respondent. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the interest claimed at 9 per cent.

There is another item of Rs. 1,250 which relates to the marriage expenses of the 7th defendant. The 7th defendant is a son of the 1st defendant born after the filing of the plaint. The High Court on the former occasion disallowed the marriage expenses of the 1st defendant's sons. This is obviously a mistake for the marriage expenses of the daughter of the 1st defendant who is not a party to this suit and whose marriage expenses ought to be provided for as in the case of the 5th and 6th defendants. This item is the subject of grounds Nos. 4 and 5 of the memorandum of objections. It is enough to correct the direction of the Subordinate Judge to be one providing for the marriage expenses of the daughter Alagammi instead of the 7th defendant.

Now we come to the memorandum of objections. The first item relates to a sum of Rs. 1,064-3-6. The respondents contend that this item is part of the stridhanam amount of Peria Kalyani invested with M. R. S. Firm of Pegu and that there is nothing to show that the 1st defendant collected this item of stridhanam. The lower Court allowed this item in favour of the plaintiffs. If really this is an item of stridhanam and not collected by the 1st defendant, no doubt the contention of the respondents would be good. But if there is such a stridhanam to which Peria Kalyani was entitled, probably it would have been included in the amount of stridhanam returned to the family or conversely if such a gift was made to Peria Kalyani, it would appear as an item of expense amongst the various items of gift made to Peria Kalyani. It does not so appear. On the other hand looking at the fact that the 1st defendant had been investing various sums of money in the names of the female members of the family and that he is unable to give any intelligible account of this item, we must hold that it is not proved to be the stridha- nam of Peria Kalyani at all. He says in his deposition:

"I have not entered in the marriage expense accounts Rs. 1,000, in the name of Kalyani for being invested with M. R. S. of Pegu. The entry of Rs. 1,064-4-6 in Ex. VII M under date 9th Purattasi, Pingala has not been written off in the day book. It might have been paid V. E. A. out of the amounts invested with them in Kalyani's name."

This is in re-examination. In cross-examination he says:

"This amount is not now with the said firm. I do not remember what became of the same. I cannot say who got it back. I cannot say how it began."

After such answers by the 1st defendant it is impossible to decide this item in his favour. This item must, therefore, be disallowed.

The next item relates to the marriage expenses of the 5th defendant. It is argued that only Rs. 5,000 was given for the marriage of the 5th defendant whereas the actual expenses amounted to Rs. 11,906. This marriage was performed during the pendency of the suit. We think it has not been proved that the 1st defendant spent Rs. 11,906, for the marriage of the 5th defendant. There is merely the bare statement of the 1st defendant and there is nothing else for proving this item. This item must, therefore, be disallowed. The amount of Rs. 1,250, will be deducted from any sum due by the 1st defendant to plaintiffs up to date of marriage and the balance will carry interest.

The next item is an item of Rs. 2,000. This seems to be a slip and if the figures show that it has been included in the final figures, the learned Advocate for the appellants agrees that it may be allowed.

The last item in the memorandum of objections relates to the correctness of the figure relating to interest. This objection was not taken in the Court below and must be disallowed.

There is only one item that remains, viz., costs. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiffs three-fourths costs. The suit was originally for the recovery of half of the family property on the ground of a special agreement that he was entitled to such a share described as Pathribhagam. But in the result they have been allowed only one-fourth share and we think that they should have been awarded only half costs. We have already observed that as to the marriage of the 1st defendant's daughter a sum of Rs. 5,000 ought to be allowed and the reference to the 7th defendant in the lower Court's judgment is a mistake. This disposes of all the grounds in the memorandum of objections.

A decree will be passed in accordance with the above findings. As the appellants have substantially succeeded they will get their costs in the appeal calculated on Rs. 21,727 i. e. excluding Rs. 1,250 which is merely a mistake. The memorandum of objections has failed in respect of substantial items and has succeeded in respect of only some small items. The respondents will pay half the costs of the appellants on the memorandum of objections.

It has been suggested before us by the respondent that the house should be sold and the proceeds divided in accordance with the Partition Act. This suggestion was not made in the Court below and we cannot entertain it here.

The respondent also desires that he should be allowed a right of way through the verandah adjoining to D and E series rooms allotted to him but it appears that this verandah is common to the parties as conceded by the appellants.

Order.—(April 20, 1934.)—The third item in the appeal will carry interest at 9 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of decree and further interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the aggregate amount. Otherwise the decree as drafted will remain.

A suit, in which the plaintiffs in the plaint seek to establish or to negative any right to maintain or close a door or a widow or raise or alter or demolish a wall, must be valued by the plaintiff at a sum exceeding Rs. 100 and not exceeding Rs. 500, according to r. 4 framed by the Lahore High Court under s. 9 Suits Valuation Act. A suit for issue of a perpetual injunction ordering the defendant to demolish a wall built by him near the plaintiff's ventilator and to restrain him from building a second storey on his shop within five feet of the plaintiffs' windows. falls under this rule and must be valued at a sum exceeding Rs. 100 and not exceeding

Rs. 500. In such a suit a first appeal lies only to the District Judge.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Achhru Ram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts bearing on the question of law involved in this appeal may be shortly stated. On March 15, 1932, the plaintiffs, Ram Saran and Ram Dhan, sons of Mohan Lal, instituted a suit for the issue of a perpetual injunction to the effect that the defendant be ordered to demolish the wall built by him near plaintiff's raushandan (ventilator), and that he be restrained from building a second storey on his shop within five feet of the window of the plaintiffs. The value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction and court-fee was stated to be Rs 10. The defendant objected that the value for purposes of jurisdiction and court-fee had been wrongly fixed. As a result of this objection the learned Subordinate Judge passed an order on April 6, 1932, directing the plaintiffs to correct the plaint by raising the value for the purposes of jurisdiction to Rs. 110. On February 28, 1933, objection was taken to the value for purposes of court-fee, and it was contended on behalf of the defendant that as two reliefs had been claimed, court-fee was payable on each of those two reliefs. Thereupon the value of the suit for purposes of court-fee and jurisdiction was fixed at Rs. 20.

The trial Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs on March 14, 1933. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the Senior Subordinate Judge. The appeal was accepted and a decree, as prayed for in the plaint, was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court and it has been urged strenuously on his behalf that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs ought to have preferred an appeal to the District Judge. In my opinion this objection is sound and must be given effect to. In the rules framed by this Court under s. 9 of the Suits Valuation Act, it is laid down that a suit in which the plaintiffs in the plaint seek to establish or to negative any right to maintain or close a door or a window or raise or alter or demolish a wall, must be valued by the plaintiff at a sum exceeding Rs. 100 and not exceeding Rs. 500. The relief claimed by the plaintiffs comes within the purview of the rule mentioned above and, therefore, the plaintiffs' suit must be valued for purposes of jurisdiction at any sum exceeding Rs. 100 and not exceeding Rs. 500 which the plaintiffs may fix. Objection regarding valuation having been raised at the earliest possible opportunity, s. 11, Suits Valuation Act, cannot be availed of on behalf of the respondents. It has been held in Chelor v. Kali Das (1), and Banni v. Mangu 114 Ind. Cas. 440 (2), that where an inferior Court disposes of an appeal which should have been heard by a superior Court, there is ground for holding that the parties have been prejudiced.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the plaintiffs' suit does not fall within the purview of r. 4 of the Rules framed under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act. It was maintained that plaintiffs in the plaint do not seek to establish any of the rights mentioned in r. 4, and merely want to have their right of easement recognised. I hold that there is no force in this contention. In essence the suit of the plaintiffs is to get the wall of the defendant demolished and to prevent him from building the upper storey of his shop within five feet of their (the plaintiffs') window. In this view of the case the plaintiffs' suit clearly falls within the purview of r. 4 referred to above. For the foregoing reasons I accept this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge passed as an Appellate Court and direct him to return the memorandum of appeal to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. As the defendants' Counsel did not raise the question of jurisdiction before the Senior Subordinate Judge, I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

In a suit for additional rent for excess area the burden of proving that the defendants are holding excess land for which they are liable to an additional rent is in the first instance on the landlord.

In such a case the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the presumption that the standard of measurement which was prevalent at the date when the Record of Rights was finally published, was also the standard of measurement at the inception of the tenancy. Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Ramranjan Chakravarty (1), Birendra Kishore v. Bhole Mia (2) and Sasanka Kumar Nayak v. Hitlal Sow (3), referred to.

A finding of fact arrived at by a Court of fact is final, if such finding is based on evidence.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury and Nagendra Nath Chaudhury, for the Respondent.

Mr. Bireswar Chatterjee, for the Deputy Commissioner.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal under s. 15, Letters Patent, from a judgment of my learned brother S. K. Ghose, J. The suit in which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiff who is the appellant before us for additional rent for excess area. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court gave a modified decree to the plaintiff granting additional rent for an excess of 70 bighas odd only. On appeal to this Court, S. K. Ghose, J., has allowed the appeal and has restored the decree of the Munsif dismissing the plaintiff's suit. Hence this present appeal under s. 15, Letters Patent.

The plaintiffs case is that he has purchased the putni and dar putni rights of Mouza Chatiani in the year 1334 B. C. The defendants are said to be the holders of a jote bearing rent of Rs. 34-10-8 per year. The case made by the plaintiff in the plaint further is that this rent was assessed with reference to an area of 78 bighas odd without specific boundaries on a standard of 18 inches to a cubit and that the jama was not a mokarari jama. It was further stated that according to the finally published Record of Rights, which records were published in 1925, the defendants are possessing an area of 180 bighas and it is said that the defendants are liable to additional rent for excess area of 102 bighas. On this basis the plaintiff claims a sum of Rs. 126 odd per year. The defence of the defendants in substance is that the holding is a mokarari holding which has been held by them from very ancient times, even from before the permanent settlement of 1719 and that the existing rent is a consolidated rent and was not with reference to measurement of any particular area. It is further stated that measurement, if any, was made according to a standard of 26 inches per cubit and according to such standard of measurement the area would be 109 bighas odd. It is further said that there was no encroachment on the lands of the zamindar or the patnidars. The burden of proving that the defendants are holding excess land for which they are liable to an additional rent is undoubtedly in the first instance on the landlord.

The origin of the tenancy is lost in antiquity and it is very difficult at this distance of time to give evidence to show as to what was the area which was actually settled with the defendants. It is said on behalf of the plaintiff that there is an admission by the defendants that there was a potta in respect of this tenancy that, according to the case of the defendants, that potta was stolen and it would be presumed, it is said, that the potta, if produced, would have gone against the defendants. The Subordinate Judge has relied on an admission of defendant No. 1 in certain previous deposition wherein it is stated that the settlement of the jote was with reference to area and it is further stated that the area was 110 bighas measured by the standard of measurement of 26 inches to a cubit. The Subordinate Judge also rested his decision on his view with regard to the standard measurement, which he held to be 18 inches to a cubit which is also the present standard of measurement on the basis of which lands have been surveyed by the Survey Officers in preparing Records of Rights, and on this basis accepting the original holding to be 109 bighas as admitted by the defendants, he has granted an enhancement in respect of the excess area, namely, 180 bighas. It was complained before S. K. Ghose, J., that the finding about this standard of measurement was based on no evidence and was, therefore, liable to be challenged in second appeal. That contention was accepted by S. K. Ghose, J. Before us it has been contended by Dr. Basak who appears for the appellant that the learned Judge of this Court was bound to accept the finding of fact on the question of standard of measurement arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. Undoubtedly a finding of fact arrived at by a Court of fact is final if such finding is based on evidence. In the present case the position is this: the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of the presumption that the present standard of measurement was the standard which obtained at the time of the inception of the tenancy. There are authorities to that effect in the books. Reference may be made to a very early case, namely, Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Ramranjan Chakravarti (1) where Ashutosh Mookerjee, J., stated this (at p. 132*).

"Here the plaintiff alleges that the standard of measurement now prevalent is a cubit of 18 inches, and that this measure was in use when the leases were granted in 1859. The defendant asserts, on the other hand, that the standard of measurement prevalent in 1859 was a cubit of 20 inches. Of this he gives no evidence, the District Judge has accordingly held that the measure now in use was also in use in 1859. It is disputed that whichever measure be adopted the land within the boundaries would be in excess of the area mentioned as that with reference to which the rent was fixed at the inception of the tenancy; the only question, therefore, is as to the quantity of this excess. It is impossible to say that the District Judge has, under circumstances just stated, erred in holding that the state of things now in existence may be presumed to have existed also in 1859."

The same view was also taken by B. B. Ghose, J. and Panton, J., in Birendra Kishore v. Bhole Mia (2). There the learned Judges observed this:

"With regard to the question of standard of measurement, the presumption must be that the standard of measurement at the time of letting out was the same as it is now unless anything to the contrary is proved. As there is no proof to the contrary, it must be presumed that the same standard has continued. It is not a case of letting out by a statement of the area, and if the area is found to be in excess of what was let out, the landlord is evidently entitled to increase of rent for such increase of area."

And in a very recent case, Mallik, J., was inclined to take the same view: see Sasanka Kumar Nayak v. Hitlal Sow (3). Following these authorities undoubtedly the plaintiff in this case is entitled to the benefit of the presumption that the standard of measurement which was prevalent at the date when the Record of Rights was finally published was also the standard of measurement at the inception of the tenancy. But in the present case that presumption has been rebutted by the evidence which has been afforded by Thuller's Manual of Surveying 1875 Edition at p. 402 from which it would appear that on account of the difficulties arising out of the varying standards of measurement, the Government laid down a uniform standard of measure in 1849; and this has been referred to by the Munsif in his judgment at p. 7 of the paper-book. The presumption which we could carry back beyond 1849 has been rebutted by the evidence in this particular case, that there was no uniform standard of measurement prior to 1849. The cases in which the presumption has been pleaded are all cases after the year 1849. Besides, in those cases the Courts had not the evidence which has been placed before them that the Government had introduced a uniform standard of measurement after 1849 so far as the measures with which the Government had to deal were concerned. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judge of this Court has rightly stated that there is no proof as to what was the standard of measurement beyond the year 1849. There is no doubt that this tenancy was created nearly half a century before 1849. Therefore the basis on which the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had proved that the standard of measurement at the time of the inception of the tenancy was 18 inches to a cubit, is false, and the learned Judge of this Court was right in interfering with that finding which was based on no evidence in the case. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to discharge the burden of proof for establishing the excess of area for which he claims additional rent. The appeal accordingly fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1, O. I, r. 3—Mortgage suit—Person claiming ownership in derogation of title of mortgagor—Whether necessary party to suit—Determination of such title to be avoided in suit

A person who claims the right of ownership in a mortgaged property in denial and derogation of the mortgagor, is not a necessary party in the mortgage suit. As the determination of his title in the suit is bound to lead to confusion, it should be avoided. Radha Kunwar v. Reoti Singh (1) and Gobardhan v. Manna Lal (2), referred to

F. A. from an order of the Sub-Judge, Allahabad, dated June 7, 1932.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Appellant.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendant, Musammat Rasoolan Bibi, against an order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff, Musammat Ram Kuar, brought a suit for recovery of money and sale on the basis of a mortgage against four defendants, Musammat Husaini Bibi, Musammat Sajan Bibi, Abdul Ghafur and Musammat Rasoolan. Her case against the first three defendants was that they were the representatives of the mortgagor, and as such interested in the mortgaged property and the right to redeem. So far as Musammat Rasoolan, the fourth defendant, was concerned, the only allegation against her in the plaint was that she was in possession of the mortgaged property, in what capacity she was in possession was not mentioned. Musammat Rasoolan filed a written statement and she claimed to be owner of the property. She denied the mortgagor's title and the mortgagee's right to sue and set up a paramount title in herself. The other defendants also contested the suit. The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's title in its entirety. So far as Musammat Rasoolan was concerned, he decided only one issue in controversy between her and the plaintiff. The issue was whether Musammat Rasoolan Bibi has been unnecessarily made a party to the suit and is the suit bad against her. The finding of the learned Munsif was that:

"question of paramount title ought not to be gone into in a mortgage suit. Persons claiming paramount title ought not to be made parties to mortgage suit ..... If she has got any title to the house and her rights are affected in any way she ought to get them determined in a separate suit. If the plaintiff or her successors-in-interest or the heirs of Abdulla feel that their rights, if any, in the house cannot be sufficiently enforced because of Musammat Rasoolan or her possession over the house, they ought to bring a separate suit against her."

With these observations he held that Musammat Rasoolan Bibi upon her plea was unnecessarily made a party to the suit. Musammat Rasoolan had further claimed that she had been in possession of the house in suit as owner adversely for over 12 years. The learned Munsif held that it was not necessary to decide that issue. As we stated before, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed in its entirety and, therefore, she went in appeal to the lower Appellate Court. That Court decided in favour of the mortgagee so far as Sajan Bibi and Abdul Ghafur, representatives of the mortgagors, were concerned, and disallowed their objections, but he was of the opinion that it was not right to leave the question of Rasoolan's title to be decided in a separate suit and, he therefore remanded the suit for the decision of Musammat Rasoolan's proprietary title which she set up on the ground that she was in possession adversely to the mortgagor for over 12 years.

It is contended before us on behalf of Musammat Rasoolan Bibi that the decision of the trial Court was correct inasmuch as she had claimed a paramount title and the determination of her title was absolutely foreign to the mortgage suit. The general provision regarding the joinder of defendants is to be found in O. I, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, wherein it is stated that all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same transaction is alleged to exist. The special provision regarding mortgage suits is to be found in O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, wherein it is stated that subject to the provisions of the Code all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. Now, it is clear that Musammat Rasoolan had nothing to do with the transaction of the mortgage either by herself or by her predecessor, nor can it be said that she had any interest in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption when she, as a matter of fact, says that the mortgagor had absolutely no right to mortgage the property. It is thus clear that the only right which Musammat Rasoolan was claiming was the right in the property as owner of the same in denial and derogation of the right of the plaintiff's mortgagor and the determination of such a title in a suit based upon a mortgage was bound to lead to confusion. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Radha Kunwar v. Reoti Singh (1), that in a suit for sale under a mortgage joinder, of persons claiming an adverse title was an irregularity and that it could only tend to confusion. The same view was taken in the case of Gobardhan v. Manna Lal (2), where Banerji and Raoof, JJ., held that in a suit brought by a mortgagee to enforce his mortgage, a person claiming a title paramount to the mortgagor and the mortgagee is not a necessary party, and the question of the paramount title cannot be litigated in such a suit. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the remand of the case for determination of the title of Rasoolan Bibi was absolutely unnecessary.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the order of remand with costs to Rasoolan Bibi in this Court as well as in the lower Appellate Court. The order of the Court of first instance awarding costs to Rasoolan Bibi is maintained. A decree under O. XXXIV, r. 4, will be prepared against Sajan Bibi and Abdul Ghafur. The plaintiff will be entitled to add his costs to the decretal amount to be recoverable from the mortgaged property. The usual six months are allowed for payment.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1934

June 20, 1934

COSTELLO AND LORT-WILLIAMS, JJ.

SHAILABALA DASEE—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

GOBARDHANDAS LADSARIA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9—Calcutta High Court Rules and Orders (Original Side), Chap. X, r. 36—Res judicata—Suit dismissed under Chap. X, r. 36—Plaintiff, if debarred from bringing fresh suit.

On general principles there is nothing to prevent a plaintiff, whose suit has been dismissed for want of prosecution, from instituting forthwith a suit against the same defendant upon the same cause of action and, in the absence of any rule made by the Court to deal with such a state of affairs, where the suit is dismissed under the provisions of Chap. X, r. 36, Calcutta High Court Rules and Orders (Original Side), the plaintiff is at liberty to bring a fresh suit if he be so minded.

[Case-law referred to.]

C. A. from an Original Suit No 941 of 1931.

Messrs. Pugh, N. C. Chatterjee and S. K. Basu, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Roy, S. R. Das and S. K. Ray Chaudhuri, for the Respondent.

Costello, J.—In this appeal from a judgment of Buckland, J., dated January 24, 1934, a point of considerable importance arises. The learned Judge himself said:

"In this case a preliminary point of considerable importance has been raised, on behalf of the defendant, by the learned Advocate-General."

The suit was brought to recover a sum of Rs. 50,000 or such damages as the Court might allow, for breach of a covenant contained in a lease, whereby the defendant covenanted to return the property demised by the lease in good order and condition. It appears that a suit, which admittedly was precisely the same as the present suit (the previous suit being numbered 1771 of 1928) was instituted by the same plaintiff against the same defendant and on the same cause of action; that is to say, Shilabala Dasee was the plaintiff in Suit No. 1771 of 1928 and she is the plaintiff in the present suit, and Gobardhandas Ladsaria was the defendant in Suit No. 1771 of 1928, and he is defendant in the present suit. On May 22, 1930, Suit No. 1771 of 1928 was dismissed by an order of Lort-Williams, J., under the provisions of Chap. X, r. 36 of the Rules of this Court. There was no appeal from that order, but an application was made, said to be by way of review to have that order set aside. It so happened that that application came before me. I say "it so happened," but I recollect that the reason why it came before me was (as was in effect admitted at the time) that the parties, or rather the plaintiff of set design waited until Lort-Williams, J., had proceeded on leave and until there was another Judge dealing with the interlocutory matters. The application for review was dismissed by me on August 6, 1930, and again there was no appeal from that order. The present suit was instituted on May 2, 1931, and as I have stated, the cause of action and the issues in this suit are identical with those of the 1928 suit. The learned Judge says in his judgment:

"In these circumstances, it is contended, on behalf of the defendant, that this suit cannot proceed upon the ground of res judicata, but not upon the limited grounds which are to be found in s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, but upon the broader principles which were referred to and recognised by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1).

Reliance is also placed upon the inherent powers of the Court which are preserved by s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, and I have also been referred to the judgment of Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., in Ram Gopal Mazumdar v. Prasunna Kumar Sanial (2) in support of the proposition that the plaintiff, having elected to proceed, as she did, by applying to have the order of dismissal set aside, and having failed on that application, is not entitled now to litigate the matter afresh by a separate suit."

The learned Judge stated the point which he had to determine briefly, and concisely, in these terms:

"whether an order of dismissal under Chap. X, r. 36 of the Rules of this Court operates as a bar to a fresh suit."

The rule in question runs thus:

"Suits and proceedings, which have not appeared in the Prospective List within six months from the date of institution, may be placed before a Judge in Chambers, on notice to the parties or their Attorneys, to be dismissed for default unless good cause is shown to the contrary, or be otherwise dealt with as the Judge may think proper.".

The authority of that Rule was challenged, in the year 1924, in Udoy Chand v. Khetsidas Tilokchand (3) where, however Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., held that the rule is not ultra vires and that the Court has jurisdiction to dismiss a suit for default when it appears on the Special List. It was also held in that case that the decision of a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court dismissing a suit for want of prosecution under Chap. X, r. 36 of the Rules of the Court, is a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and, accordingly, an appeal lies from that decision. It is obvious therefore, on the authority of that case, that it would have been open to the present plaintiff, had she so chosen, to have appealed against the order of my learned brother Lort-Williams, dated May 22, 1930. Buckland, J., came to the conclusion that, once a suit has been dismissed under the provisions of Chap. X, r. 36, it is not open to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. He expressed his opinion quite definitely in these words:

"I have no reasonable doubt that the object and intention of the rule is to enable the Court, finally, to dismiss such a suit unless the Judge is satisfied that there are grounds for allowing it to proceed."

It was pointed out that, on notice being sent to the parties, they have an opportunity to, and frequently do, appear. Thereupon, the Judge can take into consideration any affidavits filed, and anything that Counsel may put before the Court on behalf of the parties. The learned Judge has given a number of reasons as to why he comes to the conclusion that once a suit is dismissed for default under Chap. X, r. 36 of the Rules of this Court, the plaintiff is not entitled to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. I am bound to say that, with the reasoning of the learned Judge, so far as it goes, I respectfully and entirely agree. As a matter of common sense and of first impression, one cannot fail to be of opinion that it is undesirable that a plaintiff should be allowed, in circumstances such as the present, to suffer no greater penalty and incur no more serious handicap than the payment of certain costs to the defendant.

It has been pointed out by the learned Judge, in his judgment, and emphasized by the learned Advocate-General in his address to us, that a plaintiff of means might use the procedure of the Court as an instrument of oppression and that, having launched his suit against any person, he might delay the prosecution of that suit so that it ultimately appeared on the Special List, as it has been called, and the suit was dismissed. Forthwith he might launch a fresh suit and indeed a succession of suits at any rate until the alleged cause of action became no longer available by reason of the operation of the statute of limitation. I wholly sympathise, if I may use the term, with the expression of opinion given by the learned Judge in his judgment. But we have to consider whether that judgment is justified by any provision in law. It is admitted by the learned Advocate-General that neither the precise terms of s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, nor the general principles of the doctrine of res judicata, as explained in a number of decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, including the cases of Munni Bibi v. Tirloki Nath (4), and Maung Sein Done v. Ma Pan Nyun (5) are of any avail to the defendant in the present proceeding.

It is undoubtedly right to say that here there is no case of res judicata, because the Original Suit, No. 1771 of 1928, was never heard and determined, and in no sense could it be said that the plaintiff's case had been disposed of on its merits. We have, therefore, to see whether there is any other principle or provision, either in the general adjectival law or in the rules of this Court, which prevents the plaintiff from proceeding with the suit, out of which this appeal arises. The learned Advocate-General has sought to rely on a number of orders and rules contained in the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, but none of them, in my opinion, are really material for our present purpose. He has also argued that the provisions of s. 12, Civil Procedure Code, do not stand in his way. That section lays down that:

"Where a plaintiff is precluded by rules from instituting a further suit in respect of any particular cause of action, he shall not be entitled to institute a suit in respect of such cause of action in any Court to which this Code applies."

As far as one can see, the rules in Sch. I, Civil Procedure Code, which do bar a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, are these: O. II, r. 2, O. IX, r. 9, O. XXII, r. 9 and O. XXIII, r. 1. None of these have any application to the present circumstances. In my opinion, s. 12 operates against the contention of the defendant in the present suit. Mr. Pugh argued that we must deduce from it that, unless there is a rule either in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Rules of this Court, there is nothing in the general provisions of law to prevent the plaintiff instituting a fresh suit, after the former suit has been dismissed under the provisions of Chap. X, r. 36 of this Court. It is to be remembered that r. 36, Chap. X, of the Rules of this Court is apparently designed to serve the same purpose as r. 12, O. XXXVI of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England, and to a large extent Chap. X, r. 36 of this Court is analogous to O. XXXVI, r. 12 of the English procedure, one of the main differences being, however, that in this Court the Registrar takes the initiative on finding that suits are not being prosecuted with due vigour and diligence, whereas under the English procedure, it is left to the defendant to stimulate the activities of the plaintiff either by himself causing the action to be set down for trial; or by taking out a summons asking that the action may be dismissed for want of prosecution. There is no very direct, certainly no very modern decision, as to what precisely is the effect of an order made under the provisions of O. XXXVI, r. 12, as regards the rights of the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit.

We find in the notes in the Annual Practice of 1934, at p. 2213, a statement to the effect that, where an action has not been set down for trial under O. XXXVI, r. 32, the effect of a dismissal is not clear. The note seems to be based upon the judgment of Sir George Jessel, M. R. in In re Orrell Colliery and Fire-Brick Co. (6), and the judgment of Kay, J. in Magnus v. National Bank of Scotland (7).

The case of In re Orrell Colliery and Fire-Brick Co. (6), was decided in the year 1879. There it was held that where an action has been commenced against a Company and continued by leave after a winding-up order, and before trial, an order had been obtained to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, the plaintiff in the action was not debarred from bringing forward a claim in the same matter in the winding-up. Sir George Jessel, M. R. said at p. 682* of the report:

"It is very much to be desired that a new rule should be made to meet cases of this kind. But in the meantime the former practice applies except so far as it has been altered by the Judicature Act and the rules of Court, and I find nothing in them which varies it on this point.

"Formerly a man could abandon his action by not taking any further steps in it, whether it were brought at Common Law or in Chancery. In the former case the defendant signed judgment of non-pros, which exactly described what had happened; in the latter case he would have the bill dismissed for want of prosecution, but in either case the plaintiff could bring a new action for the same matter, with this exception only, that in Chancery, if the cause had been set down to be heard, the dismissal of the bill for want of prosecution, was equivalent to dismissal on the merits, and was a bar to a new action."

"In this case, if the action had been set down for hearing, there might have been a question whether the former rule of Common Law or that of the Court of Chancery ought to prevail. But in a case where, as here, the action had not been set down, there was only one rule, namely, that a fresh action might be brought. If the new rules had been intended to make an alteration in this respect, it would have been so expressed. But that has not been done, and consequently the practice is the same as it was before the rules were made."

As far as one can ascertain, the position in this Court seems to be the same as it was in England at the time when the In re Orrell Colliery and Fire-Brick Co. (6), was decided. A year or two later, and in between In re Orrell Colliery and Fire-Brick Co. (6) and Magnus v. National Bank of Scotland (7), there was the case of Gilder v. Morrison (8). There, by a Master's order, an action was to be dismissed, unless notice of trial were delivered by a certain day. Through a mistake of the Solicitor's clerk, notice of trial was not delivered within the required time. The Judge in Chambers refused, in the exercise of his discretion, to extend the time fixed by the Master's order. On appeal, the Court declined to interfere with the Judge's discretion. Grove, J., in his judgment observed :

"I am of opinion that this is a case in which we should not interfere with the discretion of the learned Judge. Carter v. Stubbs (9), on which the plaintiffs' Counsel relies, is the exact converse of the present case. There the learned Judge thought fit to vary the Master's order, and the Court of Appeal, as well as the Divisional Court, refused to interfere with his discretion. If this were a solitary instance of an application of this kind, we might be inclined to grant the indulgence asked for ; but cases of this kind are becoming too common, and in the interests of clients this carelessness on the part of Solicitors and their clerks must be put a stop to. If we encouraged such conduct, we should practically be abolishing the rules made under the Judicature Acts, and a negligent party might postpone a case day after day, and set all the rules at defiance, if he knew that he could be reinstated in the position which he had lost by his own carelessness or intentional disobedience of the rules merely by payment of the costs."

Then the learned Judge continued in the words following and they are the important part of his judgment for our present purpose :

"A new writ may be issued immediately in this case, so that the right of the plaintiff is not lost, as he merely has to pay the costs incurred so far as a penalty for his carelessness, and begin over again."

Then we come to the case of Magnus v. National Bank of Scotland (7) which was decided in the year 1888. In that case, there was a consent order, dismissing an action for want of prosecution, and it was held that, unless it proceeded upon a compromise of the cause of action, there was no bar to another action between the same parties for the same matter. The former practice of the Court of Chancery on this point is unaffected by the rules of Court under the Judicature Act. The plaintiffs in the action, having made default in making discovery and answering interrogatories, told the defendants they intended to abandon the action, and would pay their costs. Not having done this, the defendants issued a summons to dismiss the action for want of prosecution. The plaintiffs, thereupon, paid the defendants' costs, and at the hearing of the summons they appeared, and consented to an order dismissing the action as against the defendants. The plaintiffs then brought a fresh action against the same defendants for the same matter, whereupon the defendants raised the question of law whether the plaintiffs were not estopped, by reason of the order on the summons. The Court held that the order, not having proceeded upon a compromise of the cause of action, was no bar to the fresh action. The judgment of Kay, J., is very illuminating upon the point which is now before us. He is reported, at p. 601* of the report, as saying :

"Now if that consent order had proceeded on a compromise of the cause of action, it would have been an absolute bar to a new action. But here the order was made on a summons to dismiss for want of prosecution, an order on which would not be a bar, and therefore, unless it is shown that the consent proceeded upon the compromise of the cause of action, I cannot see how it is possible to say this would be a bar. Can it be said that when you attend on a summons to dismiss for want of prosecution, and submit to an order by consent, that order is a bar to another action ? That seems to me against all the rules of the Court. There is great deal more in this than mere technicality, because the principle of the Court is that unless the merits of the case have been dealt with, the dismissal of one action is not a bar to another action of the same kind. That is a very ancient rule of the Court of Chancery which I should be sorry to see disturbed."

A little lower down in the judgment the learned Judge said :

"The object of this summons to dismiss for want of prosecution was to prevent the plaintiffs going on with that action. Everybody knows that would not prevent another action being brought. Of course the plaintiffs were compelled by the terms of the order to pay all the costs of that action."

Now, on the authority of the three cases to which I have referred, it seems to me that on general principles there is nothing to prevent a plaintiff, whose suit has been dismissed for want of prosecution, from instituting forthwith a suit against the same defendant upon the same cause of action and, in the absence of any rule made by the Court to deal with such a state of affairs, it is clear that, in circumstances such as the present, where the suit was dismissed under the provisions of Chap. X, r. 36, the plaintiff is at liberty to bring a fresh suit if he be so minded. I feel impelled to say that, unlike Kay, J.,

I should not be sorry to see the practice altered and an appropriate rule made by this Court negativing, or at any rate circumscribing the right of the plaintiff to bring one or two and possibly more actions against the same defendant on the same cause of action, where the first and the second or the subsequent action has been disposed of under the provisions of the rule which we are now considering. I go further than that and say that, in my opinion, it is highly desirable that a rule of that character should be made by this Court, unless the matter is dealt with by other authority and suitable provisions inserted, either in the body of the Civil Procedure Code or in the rules contained in the schedule to that Code. We have now, however, only to administer the law as we deem it to exist at the present time. For the reasons which I have given, we are compelled to come to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed. The result is that the case must go back to be disposed of on its merits. The appellants will have the costs of this appeal. The cost of the Court below will abide the result of the further proceedings.

Lort-Williams, J.—The subject for consideration in this appeal is the effect of the dismissal of a suit for want of prosecution under r. 36, Chap. X of the rules of this Court on the Original Side.

The learned Judge (Buckland, J.) has decided that the plaintiff is precluded by such dismissal from bringing a fresh suit upon the same cause of action. I cannot understand upon what principle of law such a decision can be supported. This is a very drastic rule, which provides that a Judge may dismiss for default any suit which has not appeared in the Prospective List within six months from the date of institution. Such orders are sometimes necessarily made in a somewhat summary way, and I am supprised to find that it has been suggested, nay more, decided that the effect of the many decisions which I have given under the provisions of this rule was to deprive the plaintiffs for ever of the right to agitate their claims.

Of course, there are well-known principles of law which preclude the plaintiff from bringing a fresh suit upon the same cause of action, e. g., the principle of res judicata. But no one has suggested that, in the circumstances of such a dismissal for default, there has been anything in the nature of a trial or decision upon the merits.

And, of course, where special rules have been made by or for the Court, which forbid the bringing of a fresh suit, the plaintiffs are bound by them so long as these rules are intra vires of the rule-making authority; such, for example, are to be found in O. IX, Civil Procedure Code. But there is no similar provision in r. 36, or elsewhere in the rules of this Court, or in the Code of Civil Procedure, which is relevant to the present discussion. On the contrary, s. 12 of the Code provides that:

"Where a plaintiff is precluded by rules from instituting a further suit in respect of any particular cause of action, he shall not be entitled to institute a suit in respect of such cause of action in any Court to which this Code applies."

Inferentially it seems to follow that where no such rules exist, no such preclusion is intended to apply. In the absence of such rules, I know of nothing to prevent a plaintiff, whose suit has been dismissed under the provisions of r. 36, from bringing a fresh suit upon the same cause of action, except the law of limitation. The law upon this subject has been clearly stated by Sir George Jessel, M. R., in In re: Orrell Colliery and Fire-Brick Co. (6) as follows:

"Formerly a man could abandon his action by not taking any further steps in it, whether it were brought at Common Law or in Chancery. In the former case the defendant signed judgment of non-pros., which exactly decribed what had happend; in the latter case he would have the bill dismissed for want of prosecution, but in either case the plaintiff could bring a new action for the same matter, with this exception only, that in Chancery, if the cause had been set down to be heard, the dismissal of the bill for want of prosecution was equivalent to dismissal on the merits, and was a bar to a new action."

and by Kay, J., in Magnus v. National Bank of Scotland (7) as follows:

"The practice in this Court was well setteld long before I went to the bar. In Lord Redesdale's book I find the law thus stated on p. 238 of the original edition: "A decree or order dismissing a former bill for the same matter may be pleaded in bar to a new bill, if the dismission was upon hearing, and was not in terms directed to be without prejudice. But an order of dismission is a bar only when the Court determined that the plaintiff had no title to the relief sought by his bill, and therefore an order dismissing a bill for want of prosecution is not a bar to another bill." . . . . There is a great deal more in this than mere technicality, because the principle of the Court is that unless the merits of the case have been dealt with, the dismissal of one action is not a bar to another action of the same kind. That is a very ancient rule of the Court of Chancery which I should be sorry to see disturbed . . . . The object of this summons to dismiss for want of prosecution was to prevent the plaintiffs going on with that action. Everybody knows that would not prevent another action being brought. Of course, the plaintiffs were compelled by the terms of the order to pay all the costs of that action."

In Seton's "Judgments and Orders," Edn. 7, 1912, Vol. I, at p. 136, it is stated upon the authority of these decisions that where an action has been dismissed for want of prosecution, the plaintiff must pay the costs of the old one first; and a similar statement appears in Daniell's Chancery Practice, Edn. 8, 1914, Vol. I, at p. 474.

In my opinion, it would be difficult to support the making of any rule, which, in such circumstances, would preclude the bringing of a fresh suit upon the same cause of action, unless the first suit had been set down for trial. If that has been done, the plaintiff cannot complain that he has not had an opportunity of having his case heard, and if he fails to proceed with the prosecution of his claim, and it is dismissed for default, the Court, in such circumstances, would be justified in making a rule that no fresh suit should be brought upon the same cause of action. In a case, such as the present, where there has been a dismissal of the suit, but not upon the merits, I think it ought to be provided that no fresh suit shall be instituted until all costs incurred in the first suit have been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. I agree with my learned brother that this appeal must be allowed with costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 42 of 1934
April 6, 1934
ADDISON, J.

DHAN SINGH—ACCUSED—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 239—Offences under ss. 406, 174, Penal Code, not committed in course of same transaction—Joint trial, if legal—Acquittal under s. 406, Penal Code, if makes trial under s. 174 legal.

The joint trial of the accused under ss. 406 and 174, Penal Code, the offences not being committed in the course of the same transaction, is illegal. The mere fact that the accused has been acquitted of the charge under s. 406, Penal Code, does not make his trial under s 174, Penal Code, illegal. Jai Singh v Emperor (1), referred to.

Cr. R. reported by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated January 8, 1934.

Facts.—One Jasraj Singh was a defaulter of takavi to the extent of Rs. 55-12-0. On November 5, 1932, a warrant for the attachment of his movable property, Ex. P-D, was issued by the Assistant Commissioner, First Grade, Sirsa, under s. 70, Land Revenue Act. Bishan Singh, Field Qanungo, Sirsa, executed this warrant on December 10, 1932. The defaulter paid him Rs. 20 in cash. A milch she-buffalo with a katta (calf) belonging to the defaulter was attached for the remaning sum and was entrusted to Dhan Singh, petitioner, as sapurdar. No sapurdnama was executed.

A warrant of sale Ex. P-A, was issued by the Assistant Commissioner, First Grade, on December 15, 1932, for the sale of the attached property. It was directed to Field Qanungo, Sirsa Circle, for execution It was to be returned after execution by January 15, 1933. It was not returned by the Field Qanungo after execution before the date fixed. The Tahsildar, Sirsa, therefore issued an order Ex. P-B, to the Field Qanungo that he should inform the sapurdar about the date fixed for sale and should execute the warrant of sale without delay. Siri Chand. Field Qanungo, therefore sent a hukamnama, Ex. P-C, addressed to Dhan Singh, petitioner, directing him to produce the attached property at Sirsa on March 12, 1933, before noon; P. W. No. 2, Parbhu chaprasi, was given this hukamnama for service on February 25, 1933. This hukamnama was returned by Parbhu, P. W. No. 2, with a report that Dhan Singh refused to accept service of the notice and stated that he would not go to Sirsa and would not produce the attached cattle, vide his reports, Ex. P-C 2.

The petitioner was charged under s. 406, Penal Code, for misappropriating the attached property and under s. 174, Penal Code, for having disobeyed the hukamnama, Ex. P-C, issued by Siri Chand, P. W. No. 1, to personally attend Sirsa on March 12, 1933. He was tried for both the offences at one trial. The petitioner has been acquitted under s. 406, Penal Code, and convicted under s. 174, Penal Code, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 or in default, to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The petitioner admitted that he was the sapurdar of the attached property, but he denied the charge and pleaded not guilty. He stated that he was never served with a notice to produce the attached property for sale or to attend personally at Sirsa.

Report.—The hukamnama Ex. P-C, was issued by the Field Qanungo in obedience to the order, Ex. P-B, of the Tahsildar. The distress and sale of movable property of the defaulter can only be conducted by the Assistant Collector, First Grade. Whether the Tahsildar who issued the order Ex. P-B, had authority to do so is doubtful. The hukamnama, Ex. P-C was not therefore a lawful order issued by a public servant legally competent to issue the same. The service of this notice upon the petitioner is equally defective and remains unproved. The report itself was not written on the spot. A copy of the notice was not affixed at the house of the petitioner when he refused to accept its service. The attesting witnesses of the report have not been produced. Ganpat Singh and Birdh Singh, P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 4, have supported the petitioner and stated that he was not present in the village in those days. There is nothing on the file to prove that the omission to attend personally in obedience to the hukamnama was intentional. None of the ingredients of the offence under s. 174, Penal Code, has therefore been proved in this case.

Taking all the above facts into consideration, I am of opinion that the conviction of the petitioner under s. 174, Penal Code, cannot be sustained and should be set aside.

The joint trial of the petitioner under ss. 406 and 174, Penal Code, is not, in my opinion, legal. Both the offences were not committed in the course of the same transaction and the accused could not be tried for them at one trial. The mere fact that the petitioner has been acquitted of the charge under s. 406, Penal Code, does not make his trial under s. 174, Penal Code, legal : Vide, Jai Singh v. Emperor (1). It is, however, unnecessary to quash the proceedings and to order a fresh trial because upon the evidence produced in the case the charge under s. 174, Penal Code, has not even been proved. It would simply embarrass the petitioner and put him to unnecessary expense and trouble to do so.

Accordingly I forward the record to the High Court of Judicature at Lahore with the recommendation that the conviction should be set aside and the accused be acquitted and the fine be ordered to be refunded.

Mr. L. M. Datta, for the Petitioner.

Order.—It appears that the hukamnama was not served while the two charges could not be gone into in the same trial. For these reasons, I accept the petition, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

D. Petition accepted.

Civil Suit No. 204 of 1933

February 22, 1934

STONE, J.

A. M. A. MURUGAPPA CHETTY —PLAINTIFF

versus

N. V. N. NACHIAPPA CHETTY AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Promissory note—Pro-note not paid at maturity—Creditor, if can sue on original debt — Contract—Jurisdiction—Money agreed to be paid and actually paid at Madras—Agreement and subsequent promissory note made outside Madras—Suit at Madras for recovery of money paid—Jurisdiction—Interest.

When a cause of action for money lent is once complete in itself, and the debtor then gives a promissory note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person. Saminathan v. Palanippa (2) and Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (5), relied on.

A letter was given which empowered the holder of that letter to go to the plaintiff's Madras firm and require the plaintiff's agent at Madras to pay at Madras to the order of the defendant. After this the defendant executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff for the same amount, the promissory note containing a clause for interest. These transactions took place outside Madras. The payment, however, was made in Madras. The suit for recovery of money lent and interest thereon was filed at Madras :

Held, that since the payment was agreed to be made and in fact made at Madras, part of the cause of action had arisen at Madras and therefore the Madras Court had jurisdiction:

Held, further, that the suit having been based on the contract of loan and not on the promissory note, the plaintiff was only entitled to interest at a reasonable rate from the date of demand and not at the rate provided by the promissory note.

Messrs. K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar and T. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. A. Suryanarayana and A. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff is suing defendant No. 1 personally and defendant No. 2 in respect of his share in the joint family property for the sum of Rs. 12,000 with interest on the principal sum of Rs. 10,000 with half-yearly rests calculated at Re. 0-12-6 per cent. per mensem until the date of decree and thereafter at 6 per cent. on the total amount until realisation in the following circumstances. On November 17, 1930, defendant No. 1 went to the plaintiff and asked him to give a letter that would enable him (defendant No. 1) to obtain from the plaintiff's Madras office the sum of Rs. 10,000. That was a matter that took place outside the jurisdiction of this High Court. A letter was given which empowered the holder of that letter to go to the plaintiff's Madras firm and require the plaintiff's agent at Madras to pay at Madras to the order of defendant No. 1 Rs. 10,000 together with the nadapu rate of interest from November 17, 1930, to the date of presentation, and debit the said amount in the name of defendant No. 1 and note on the letter that payment had been made. To follow out the history of that letter, I will go somewhat out of historical sequence. Defendant No. 1 did not take that letter to Madras, did not present it for payment at Madras, and was not paid by the plaintiff at Madras, but he endorsed it over to a third party at a place outside the jurisdiction of this Court and that third party took it to Madras, received the money at Madras and the fact of the receipt by that person is endorsed on the letter. Now, to return to the sequence of events, after that letter had been given, defendant No. 1 gave to the plaintiff a promissory note which is expressed to be payable on demand, no place of payment being mentioned. The relevant part of it is as follows :

"The amount due by me (defendant No. 1) by reason of having received from you (the plaintiff) a hundi directing me (defendant No. 1) to receive the money with interest from your Madras firm is Rs. 10,000. For this amount of Rs. 10,000, the interest shall be calculated at Re. 0-12-6 per cent. per mensem and the total of the interest and principal I (that is defendant No. 1) shall on demand pay you (the plaintiff) or your order and get a return of this promissory note."

Upon that is endorsed

"for the sum of Rs. 10,000 mentioned in the pro-note herein, I shall pay interest at Re. 0-12-6 per mensem once every six months."

That promissory note was given at a place outside the jurisdiction of this Court. On October 27, 1932, on behalf of the plaintiff a lawyer's letter was sent to defendant No. 1, the material terms of which are as follows :

"In respect of the promissory note executed by you in favour of our said clients for Rs 10,000 with compound interest thereon at Re. 0-12 6 per cent. per mensem with half-yearly rests, there is now due and owing by you to our clients the sum of Rs. 10,000 for principal and Rs. 1,449-0-6 for interest making in all a total sum of Rs. 11,449-0-6 and that you have in spite of repeated demands failed and neglected to pay the amount due."

They thereupon gave notice that payment must be made within ten days or proceedings will be taken. No action was taken on that letter and payment was not made. The only other fact that it is necessary to mention is that in the debit and credit account of the plaintiff there appears as credited to the defendant the sum of Rs. 470-3-6 which is made up of the interest and interest on interest due on the promissory note at the rate above mentioned, that is, Re. 0-12-6 per cent. per mensem with six-monthly rests. The defence is that those facts disclosed only one cause of action and that cause of action is upon the note, and, if upon the note, this Court has no jurisdiction, alternatively, or rather in addition, it is said that the cause of action, assuming there is a cause of action on the loan, does not arise within the jurisdiction of this Court. With regard to the contention that in circumstances like these the plaintiff is restricted to his action on the note, the question was considered by Fletcher Moulton, L. J., as he then was, in In re A Debtor (1) at p. 350*. Fletcher Moulton, L. J., there observes as follows :

"A parallel case where a bill is taken in payment for goods sold, exactly illustrates what is the effect of taking a bill. It is perfectly true that it is only a conditional payment. It is a payment if the bill is paid; and if it is in your hands when it becomes due and is dishonoured, the debt revives. But if you have availed yourself of the character of the bill as a negotiable instrument, and have passed it out of your possession so that the right to proceed on that bill is vested in some one else and not in you at the date of the dishonour, the suspension of the debt continues just as much as if the bill was not overdue. A moment's consideration will show that the Courts would not be administering justice if they did not hold this to be the case, because otherwise you could sue for the price of the goods, while another man, through possession by your act of the negotiable instrument which had been given for the price, could make the debtor pay the amount over again. Therefore I am satisfied that it is a fundamental principle applying to all cases where bills are taken either in satisfaction of a debt or in suspension of the exercise of any legal rights, that the satisfaction or the suspension lasts only so long as the bill is not overdue, unless you have parted with it so that another person is dominus of the bill, and then it lasts until you have got it back into your possession."

Now in this case the bill is in the possession of the plaintiff and in this case the demand letter of October 27, 1932, is a demand for payment in respect of the promissory note, executed by defendant No. 1, that is to say, it is a demand for the payment of the note. This is a case of a demand promissory note not payable at any particular place and therefore falls within the exception to s. 64, Negotiable Instruments Act, and thereupon no presentation is necessary to make it overdue. So that here there has been a demand, there has been no payment, there is no need for presentation; therefore on the demand having been made, no payment having been made and the time allowed having expired, the note became overdue. As it has become overdue and as it is in the possession of the plaintiff and is therefore within the case mentioned by Fletcher Moulton, L. J., the plaintiff is in this position: he can either sue on the note or he can put the note on one side and sue on the debt. But it is said that there is a long line of cases to show that there can be no debt where there is a promissory note taken contemporaneously with the loan so that you have only one transaction, and in support of that proposition the following cases have been mentioned: Saminathan v. Palaniappa (2), Y. V. Ragavayya v. G. Ramayya (3), Muthu Sastrigal v. Visvanatha Pandarasannadhi (4) and Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (5). Of those authorities I am of course bound by Saminathan v. Palaniappa (2) which is a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council delivered, I observe, by Lord Moulton as he then was. As I read that case, he is reiterating once again what he said in A Debtor, In re The Debtor Ex parte (1), when he says: 'So long as the notes were outstanding, there was no right of action otherwise than upon the notes" and he is saying that for the reason that he has mentioned at p. 350* of the previous case in the passage that I have quoted. I am also of course bound by Y. V. Ragavayya v. G. Ramayya (3) which is a decision on the appellate side of this High Court. But as I read that judgment it does not in the least conflict with the conclusion that I am arriving at in this case and is, in my opinion, enunciating the same legal principles as were stated by Fletcher Moulton, L. J. As to whether the original cause of action is the note itself and/or whether there is also another cause of action, that in my opinion is a question of fact, and on the facts here it seems to me to be too clear for argument that there are two causes of action. Had the transaction in question stopped with the giving of the letter empowering defendant No. 1 to go to Madras and collect Rs. 10,000, it would not be arguable but that the plaintiff had a cause of action springing out of the contract of loan. What is there that makes the letter given by defendant No. 1 to the plaintiff and a promissory note to secure the re-payment of that loan a merger or a novation extinguishing the earlier contract and turning these two contracts into one, a contract contained in a promissory note? I cannot understand under what principle of law the first contract is to be regarded as extinguished. It seems to me that this is a case such as is mentioned in Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (5):

> "When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold or for money lent, or for any other claim and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may always, as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person."

There the Chief Justice of Calcutta is expressing precisely the same point that Fletcher Moulton, L. J., was expressing in A Debtor, In re The Debtor, Ex parte (1) and that in my opinion is exactly this case, a contract of loan followed by the giving of a promissory note to secure its payment, a case that happens thousands of times a year so far as England is concerned, in that department of life connected with money-lenders. That being so, it seems to me that here the plaintiff could, if he chose, have sued on the note and he can if he chooses, sue on the debt. He has chosen to sue on the debt. Now the next point arises, that being so, has this Court jurisdiction to entertain this claim? That will depend, in my opinion, upon this: is it necessary for the plaintiff, properly pleading the relevant facts on which to found his claim, to mention any fact that is a relevant fact which arose within the jurisdiction of this Court? What he has to allege is a loan and what he has to show is that he has made a loan; and although for myself I am a little doubtful whether the long series of decisions on this point of jurisdiction do not, somewhat loosely, regard pleading points and regard as relevant points that I should have somewhat doubted were necessary to be pleaded, agreeably to that long line of decisions, I am satisfied that a plaintiff would have been regarded as pleading relevantly if he had alleged in his plaint "I did in fact advance this money in Madras" and I think that in this case that would have been a necessary allegation because it was a term of the contract that he should advance the money in Madras, and before the plaintiff could have sued on the contract that the plaintiff made, it would be necessary for him to allege performance of the terms on his side of the bargain. He would thus have to allege (1) a term that he was to give a letter that would enable money to be paid at Madras, (2) the fact that the amount so to be paid depended upon the date of collection at Madras, (3) the date of collection, (4) the fact of payment. So he would have to allege inter alia (1) the date of presentation of that letter, and (2) the payment on that letter; and both presentation and payment must be at Madras.

It follows from that that part of the cause of action has arisen at Madras and from that this Court has jurisdiction. There is, however, this difference between suing upon the original contract of loan and suing upon the promissory note. I have had no evidence, and it does not appear from the documents put before me, that there has been any special agreement for interest apart from the note. It is upon the note that the endorsement is made with regard to a particular rate of interest payable with six-monthly rests. That in my opinion is part of the contract related to the promissory note and has nothing to do with the contract of loan. In order to find the terms of the contract of loan, I must, I think, look at the contract of loan which was concluded, so far as the evidence goes, at the time that the letter authorising defendant No. 1 to collect Rs. 10,000 in Madras was given. The subsequent variations were all the variations of the terms of the promissory note which is another contract. Looking at it like that, it appears to me that what defendant No. 1 has undertaken to do is to have made against him a debit of the amount paid to him or the person to whom he endorsed this note and to repay that debit. What is the amount of debit? The debit is Rs. 10,000. His contract therefore is to return Rs. 10,000. There is no provision with regard to interest. With regard to interest, however, I am entitled as from the date of the notice demanding the payment of this sum, although that notice is a demand for the payment under the note, I am entitled, I think, to give interest at a reasonable rate. There will, therefore, be judgment for Rs. 10,000 together with interest at 6 per cent. from October 27, 1932, to the date of payment with proportionate costs against defendant No. 1 personally and against defendant No. 2 to the extent of the assets in his hands.

Custom (Punjab)—Gift—Arains of District Jullundur—Daughter of sonless proprietor getting property from father by written deed of gift—Whether can gift it to her sister—Gift in lieu of services—Rule of reversion, if applies.

Among the Arains of the Jullundur District, a daughter of a sonless proprietor can gift ancestral property received by her from her father by a written deed of gift to her sister.

The rule of reversion does not come into operation when the gift is in lieu of services.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated December 2, 1932.

Mr. M. A. Majid, for the Appellant.

Mr. Muhammad Munir, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The question of custom involved in this second appeal is whether among the Arains of the Jullundur District a daughter of a sonless proprietor can gift ancestral property received by her from her father by a written deed of gift to her sister. It is admitted that the gift by the father was valid by custom. The learned Counsel for the appellants, who are the donor's collaterals in the third degree, contended that his powers of alienation were restricted and he could not have conferred on his donee any powers better than those possessed by him. It was further urged that the rule of reversion would be set at naught if a donee is allowed to make a gift of the property received by gift. There is no authority in support of the contention that a donee can never acquire a stronger position than his donor. When the limited estate of an ordinary proprietor is transferred by gift and the title so conveyed is open to attack for a certain number of years and if during those years no attack is made, the donee's title becomes infinitely stronger than that of the donor. Similarly a vendee, whose sale is not challenged within the prescribed period, may acquire by the lapse of time a much stronger position than his vendor and a subsequent sale by him may be far less vulnerable than the original sale in his favour (vide Civil Appeal No. 1957 of 1923). There is, to my mind, no force in the contention that the original donor in this case could not confer on his donee greater rights than those possessed by him.

The rule of reversion relied on by the learned Counsel has no application to this case. The gift was in lieu of services and it is well-established that in such cases the rule of reversion does not come into operation. If the power to make a gift is recognized by custom, it would be for the plaintiffs to show that the gift did not confer full rights on the donees. In the present case no attempt to discharge that onus was made by the plaintiffs. Anyhow, the riwaj-i-am seems to me to clinch the matter. According to the English version of it, among the Arains of Jullundur a daughter has full powers of alienation when she inherits (see answer to question No. 47). When a daughter does not inherit, but is a donee from her father, her position is naturally much stronger. The Urdu version of the riwaj-i-am makes it quite clear that she has full powers of alienation where she inherits in the absence of the collaterals up to the fifth degree or when she is a donee from her father by means of a written instrument.

The learned Counsel for the appellants also urged that if a gift had been made in favour of the donor's son, he would not acquire full powers of alienation. This argument ignores the consideration that in the case of a gift in favour of the donor's son, the gift is tantamount to an acceleration of succession, while in the case of a gift to a daughter, she is to be regarded as a stranger. The decision of the learned District Judge is, in my opinion, correct. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 40 (3), 37—Judgment-debtor not arrested but pleading poverty to notice under r. 37—Surety undertaking to pay—Court, if can demand such bond.

Where the judgment-debtor has never been arrested, there cannot be an order directing his release. Consequently, the Court has no jurisdiction to demand a bond for the payment of decretal amount under O. XXI, r. 40 (3), Civil Procedure Code, when judgment-debtor pleads poverty to notice under r. 37 of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code.

Misc. F. C. A. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated January 13, 1933.

Facts.—The Muslim Bank of India, Ltd., Lahore, obtained a decree against Fazal Din and others. In the execution of the decree a notice was issued to judgment-debtors under O. XXI, r. 37, Civil Procedure Code, to show cause why they should not be arrested. They appeared and filed objections under O. XXI, r. 40, Civil Procedure Code, pleading poverty and inability to pay. The Court ordered that while the matters mentioned in sub-r. (2), r. 40, were being inquired into, they be released on bail on furnishing security. The surety bond stated that the surety will be liable if the judgment-debtors fail to appear or pay the decretal amount. The objections of the judgment-debtors were disallowed. The judgment-debtors, however, did not make default in appearance. The decree-holders tried to realize the decretal amount from the sureties on the undertaking to pay the decretal money. The executing Court held that they were liable to pay. The sureties appealed on the ground that security could be taken only for appearance and the further undertaking to pay the decretal amount taken from them was without jurisdiction.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Balkishen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Aziz Ullah and Abdul Aziz, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The objection taken is that the Court had no jurisdiction to demand a bond in the terms of the present bond under O. XXI, r. 40 (3) and that O. XXI

r. 40 (1), has no application. The later clause does not appear to have any application as the application to arrest the judgment-debtor was not disallowed, but was finally allowed on April 6, 1932, and as the judgment-debtor had never been arrested, there was not and could not be an order directing his release. The decree-holder mistook his remedy which could not be a demand for a surety for the decretal amount and interest pending inquiry as to the alleged poverty of the judgment-debtor. I therefore accept this appeal as there is no allegation that the sureties did not produce the judgment-debtor on any date required by the Court. No order as to costs throughout.

Criminal Revision Application No. 103 of 1934

KING, C. J.,

On difference of opinion between

SRIVASTAVA AND NANAVUTTY, JJ.

BIBI ASGHARI KHANAM—ACCUSED —APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), ss. 145, 537—Magistrate, if can take action merely on sworn testimony of complainant—Omission to record grounds for being satisfied of likelihood of breach of peace—Whether cured by s. 537—Such omission if a ground for setting aside Magistrate's final order.

Per King, C. J. and Srivastava, J.—There is nothing in the language of s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code to suggest that the Magistrate cannot take action merely on the sworn testimony of the complainant himself, if the Magistrate believes it to be true. If a Magistrate believes the statement of one witness to be true, he is at perfect liberty to act upon it for the purpose of passing an order under s. 145 (1). It is not incumbent upon him to hold a preliminary inquiry himself by examining further witnesses, nor is it necessary for him to call for a report from the Police. If the Magistrate is satisfied on the strength of the testimony of one witness then he can pass an order under s 145 (1). [p. 177, col. 2; p. 178, col. 1.]

When the Magistrate is so satisfied regarding the likelihood of a breach of the peace, his omission to say so in his order is a mere omission to frame his order in accordance with law and as long as no failure of justice or prejudice to the accused has been occasioned, the omission is covered by s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code and cannot furnish a reason for setting aside the Magistrate's final order. Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad (1) and Barmha Singh v. Emperor (2), relied on [p. 175, col. 2; p. 177, col. 1.]

Per King, C. J.—Magistrates are not to understand that defects in procedure are of no importance. Slipshod procedure is to be condemned even though it does not necessarily result in vitiating the whole proceeding. [p. 178, col. 2]

Per Nanavutty, J.—Before passing an order under s. 145 (1), the Magistrate should call upon the complainant to produce evidence on his behalf to prove that there really was a dispute between him and the opposite parties concerning the plots he mentioned in his complaint, and that that dispute was of such a nature as was likely to cause a breach of the peace. And this preliminary inquiry is necessary to enable the Magistrate to satisfy himself that such a dispute did exist and that it was, in all probability, likely to cause a breach of the peace. [p. 171, col. 2.]

The omission of the Magistrate to satisfy himself of the existence of a dispute concerning land which, in his opinion, was likely to cause a breach of the peace is an omission which goes to the root of the matter as there is an initial want of jurisdiction on the part of the Magistrate to initiate proceedings under s. 145 of the Code, and such an infringement of the Code does not come within the purview of s. 537, for it vitiates at the very outset the entire proceedings of Magistrate. Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad (1) and Barmha Singh v. Emperor (2), not applied. [p. 172, col 2.]

Cr. R. App. against the order of the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, dated May 28, 1934.

Mr. Hyder Husain and Dr. Qutubuddin Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Ali Hassan, for the Opposite Party.

Srivastava, J.—(November 1, 1934)—This is an application for revision under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, against the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad dismissing the revision application of the applicant against an order of an Assistant Collector of the First Class of Sultanpur passed under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. It arises out of a dispute as regards possession of certain plots of land in village Maniarpur.

The main contention urged by the learned Counsel for the applicant is that the order of the Magistrate was illegal inasmuch as the initial order passed by him under s. 145 does not contain any statement about his being satisfied that here was any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace or the grounds of his being so satisfied. It was further contended that the applicant denied the existence of any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and adduced evidence in support of the said denial, but the Magistrate even in his final order did not record any finding about the existence of any danger of breach of the peace. The learned Counsel for the opposite party admits that the initial order recorded by the Magistrate does not strictly comply with the provisions of s. 145, but points out that the statement of the complainant recorded at the back of his application shows that he had stated on oath that there was a likelihood of breach of the peace and in the circumstances when the Magistrate ordered notice to be issued under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, it must be presumed that he was satisfied in his mind that there was a dispute likely to cause breach of the peace. He has further argued that the omission of the learned Magistrate to comply with the letter of the law is at best an irregularity which is cured by s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code. He also maintains that even if this omission were treated as an illegality, s. 537 would apply to the case and has relied upon the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad (1), in support of his argument. The learned Counsel for the parties are agreed that there is no decision of this Court as to whether such omission is to be treated as an illegality or a mere irregularity, or as regards the application of s. 537 to such a case. I think that both these questions are of considerable importance, and it is desirable that they should be decided by a Bench of two Judges.

I accordingly certify the case as a fit one for being heard by a Bench of two Judges under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

Nanavutty, J.—(January 19, 1935)—This is an application for revision of an order of Babu Sriniwas, Magistrate of the first class in the District of Sultanpur, passed under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directing that the complainant's possession over the plots in dispute should remain undisturbed until he is duly evicted therefrom by an order of a Court competent to pass such an order. This application for revision first came up for hearing before a learned Judge of this Court, who, by his order dated November 1, 1934, certified that this was a fit case for being heard by a Bench of two Judges under s. 14 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act.

The facts out of which this application for revision arises are briefly as follows:—

Bibi Umatul Fatima, one of the six sisters who were the proprietors of Maniarpur estate gave a lease in 1919 of certain plots in village Maniarpur to one Narain. A private partition was effected between the proprietors of this taluqdari estate, and on August 27, 1919, that private partition was made a rule of the Court, and under this partition village Maniarpur was to be held jointly by all six proprietors of the estate for the purpose of Mohurrum expenses and other religious ceremonies. On May 25, 1922, the lease in favour of Narain (Ex. E), was held by the Munsif of Sultanpur to be invalid. On July 24, 1933, the complainant Ragho Ram filed the present application under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure alleging that he was a transferee or sub-lessee from Narain under the sub-lease, Ex. 7, and complaining that 19 persons including the taluqdaria and her servants had interfered with his possession and that there was fear of a breach of the peace, and that he was in danger of his life. This application was filed in the Court of Babu Sriniwas, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sultanpur. The Magistrate had the deposition of the complainant recorded on the back of his complaint, and thereupon he immediately passed an order in the vernacular directing that notices should be issued to the opposite parties under s. 145 of the Code. Accordingly an order, purporting to be one under sub-s. (1) of s. 145 of the Code, was drawn up in Urdu fixing a certain date for the hearing of the case, and summoning the parties to produce their evidence in support of their respective claims in regard to possession of the plots in dispute. On March 17, 1934, the Magistrate made his preliminary order under s. 145 absolute. A revision was filed in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, but it was summarily rejected by him, as he was of opinion that the Magistrate had arrived at a pure finding of fact that the complainant Ragho Ram was in actual possession of the plot in dispute, and that there was no law point involved in the application for revision. Against that order of the learned Sessions Judge the present application for revision was filed on July 14, 1934.

The learned Counsel of both parties have been heard at great length, and a number of rulings have been cited on both sides in support of their respective contentions.

The first question for determination is whether the learned Magistrate Babu Sriniwas had jurisdiction to pass a preliminary order under sub-s. (1) of s. 145 of the Code. To give jurisdiction to a Magistrate to take proceedings under s. 145 of the Code, three things are absolutely necessary, namely.

In the first place the Magistrate must be satisfied that there exists a dispute concerning any land or water of the boundaries thereof; in the second place the Magistrate must be further satisfied that in respect of such dispute, there is a reasonable apprehension of a likelihood of a breach of the peace occurring unless the Magistrate takes prompt measures to prevent the commission of such breach of the peace; in the third place the property in respect of which such dispute exists must be within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

Unless all these three conditions exist, the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to pass any such preliminary order under s. b-s. (1) of s. 145 of the Code. In the present case I am satisfied that the Magistrate Babu Sriniwas, being the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sultanpur Tahsil, within which is situate village Maniarpur, where the dispute is said to exist, had the local jurisdiction necessary to pass an order under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. I am, however, not satisfied that there is any evidence on the record that the Magistrate satisfied himself that there was in fact a dispute concerning land or that that dispute was of such a nature as the Magistrate had reasonable grounds for believing was likely to create a breach of the peace. The Code of Criminal Procedure contains certain provisions as to the manner in which a Magistrate should proceed on receipt of a complaint filed in his Court. Under s. 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure upon receipt of a complaint the Magistrate is bound to examine the complainant at once upon oath, and the substance of the examination should be reduced to writing and shall be signed by the complainant and also by the Magistrate. This provision of the Code the Magistrate complied with when he examined the complainant Ragho Ram and recorded his deposition on oath on the back of the complaint. The next step for the Magistrate was to satisfy himself that there was a prima facie case justifying him in taking action under s. 145 of the Code. In other words he had to satisfy himself that there did exist, in fact a dispute concerning land, and that that dispute was of such a nature as was likely in his opinion to cause a breach of the peace. For the purpose of satisfying himself that such a dispute did exist the Magistrate should have, before passing an order under sub-s. (1) of s. 145, called upon the complainant Ragho Ram to produce evidence on his behalf to prove that there really was a dispute between him and the opposite parties concerning the plots he mentioned in his complaint, and that that dispute was of such a nature as was likely to cause a breach of the peace. This preliminary enquiry was necessary to enable the Magistrate to satisfy himself that such a dispute did exist and that it was in all probability likely to cause a breach of the peace. If the Magistrate had no time to hold this preliminary enquiry himself, he could have sent the complaint of Ragho Ram to the officer in charge of the Police Station within whose jurisdiction village Maniarpur lay or he could have sent the complaint to the Tahsildar of Sultanpur or to any other Magistrate of the Second or Third Class Subordinate to him for the purpose of recording the evidence adduced by the complainant and submitting a report showing whether there was such a dispute and whether such dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace. The Magistrate adopted none of these three alternative measures which the Code of Criminal Procedure empowered him to take, but without holding any such preliminary enquiry, and without satisfying himself as to the truth of the complaint made by Ragho Ram he passed an order to the following effect:

"bad tahrir bayan mustaghis hukum hua ke notice benam fariq sani batayun August 10, 1933, ba akhaz talbana jari kiya jawe ke apne apne bayan tahrir babat kabza jaedad mutanzia dakhil karen."

The order under sub-s. (1) of s. 145 of the Code which was drafted in pursuance of the order in vernacular quoted above is as follows:

"Ba hukum jenab Babu Sriniwas Sahib Bahadur, Magistrate darje awal, zilla Sultanpur, murkhe July 24, 1933".

Dafa 145 zabta fauzdari.

Notice benam Bibi Umatul Fatima, Bibi Kaniz Fatima, Bibi Asghari Khanum, Badali Khan, Babu Iqbal Husain Khan, Bibi Hyderi Khanum, Riasat Husain, Ghulam Abbas, Zakir Hussain, Bande Husain, Nisar Husain Khan, Muhammad Naqi, Sat Narain Lal, Bhooloo Khatiq, Wasiq Khan, Jawad Husain, Mirza Inayat Hussain and Narain.

'Tum logon ko zaria notice haza is amr ki ittla di jati hai ke ijlas haza men batayun August 10 1933 hazir hokar apne apne kabze ka saboot pesh karo aur bayan tahriri dakhil karo."

It is clear from the above order that the Magistrate never gave a thought to the question whether in fact there did exist any dispute concering land between the parties, and whether such dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace. Even in the final order of March 17, 1934, passed by the Magistrate there is no expression of opinion and no finding by him that a dispute did in fact exist between the parties and that such dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace.

The learned Counsel for the complainant opposite party, Mr. Wasim, has ingeniously argued that the very fact that the Magistrate did purport to act under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure goes to prove that he was satisfied that in fact there was a dispute which was likely to cause a breach of the peace. I cannot for a moment accept this contention.

In order to create jurisdiction necessary for him for initiating proceedings under s. 145 of the Code, the Magistrate had to give a finding that a dispute did exist, and that it was of such a nature as was likely to cause a breach of the peace. The mere expression of opinion by the complainant himself that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace cannot obviously furnish materials for the Magistrate to proceed under s. 145 of the Code. The words in sub s. (1) of s. 145 of the Code to the effect "he shall make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied" necessarily connote that the Magistrate must in the first place be satisfied that there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, and then he has to proceed to give in writing the grounds of his being so satisfied. The failure of the Magistrate to record the ground which satisfied him that there was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace is a thing apart from the question of his belief that such a dispute did exist which was likely to cause a breach of the peace. If the Magistrate omits to give the grounds of his belief that such a dispute did exist, then his omission to do so may be cured by s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as was held by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad (1). That Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court does not, however, support the contention of the learned Counsel for the complainant opposite party that even where the Magistrate does not satisfy himself of the existence of a dispute, which in his opinion is likely to cause a breach of the peace, still his omission to do so can be cured by s. 537 of the Code. The omission by the Magistrate Babu Sriniwas to satisfy himself of the existence of a dispute concerning land which in his opinion was likely to cause a breach of the peace is an omission which goes to the root of the matter, for there is in the present case an initial want of jurisdiction on the part of the Magistrate to initiate proceedings under s. 145 of the Code, and such an infringement of the Code does not come within the purview of s. 537, for it vitiates at the very outset the entire proceedings of the Magistrate.

The argument of the learned Counsel for the complainant opposite party that the very fact that the Magistrate did take proceedings under s. 145 shows that he must have satisfied himself that there was a dispute concerning land which, in his opinion, was likely to cause a breach of the peace, is an argument which makes no appeal to my mind. It merely begs the whole question. Not only must the Magistrate have materials before him to enable him to satisfy himself that there was a dispute concerning land which, in his opinion, was likely to cause a breach of the peace, but such materials must be on the record so as to satisfy the High Court in revision that the Magistrate had reasonable grounds for entertaining the belief that there was a dispute concerning land likely to cause a breach of the peace.

In the present case, as I have stated above, save for the bare statement made by the complainant himself, there is not an iota of evidence on the record to enable this Court in revision to say that the Magistrate had any materials on the record to enable him to come to the conclusion that there did exist in fact a dispute concerning land which raised a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the Magistrate that it was likely to cause a breach of the peace. The mere 'ipso dixit' of the complainant himself is obviously insufficient either to satisfy the Magistrate or the High Court in revision that such a dispute concerning land did exist as was likely to cause a breach of the peace.

Apart, therefore, from the question of any finding as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace, there are in the present case no materials on the record from which this Court can presume that the Magistrate had satisfied himself that there was a dispute between the parties concerning land which was likely to cause a breach of the peace. In the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court, Kapoor Chand v Suraj Prasad (1), the facts were very different. The City Magistrate of Cawnpore, Mr. Burron, had on receipt of the complaint of Sarju Prasad, the servant of one Chuni Lal Garg, recorded the statement of the complainant on oath and then directed a Police enquiry into the matter, and upon receipt of the Police report, he passed an order to the following effect:

"There appears to be some basis for this complaint to judge from the Police report. As I am unable owing to pressure of work, to dispose of it myself, I transfer it for such action as may be thought fit along with the connected application to the Court of Babu Anand Saroop Sahib for disposal."

Babu Anand Saroop on inspection of the record ordered that notice under s. 145 of the Code be issued in accordance with law. The facts of the Allahabad case are thus vitally different from the facts in the present case. In the present case the Magistrate Mr. Sriniwas did not send the complaint of Ragho Ram to the Police for enquiry, nor did the Police "suo motu" make any report that there was a dispute concerning land between the parties, and that such dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace. In the second place in the Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court, the City Magistrate of Cawnpore had definitely accepted the opinion of the Police, and had stated that there was some basis for the complaint of Sarju Prasad to Judge from the Police report. The materials on the record of that case not only satisfied the first class Magistrate, who took action under s. 145 of the Code, but it also satisfied the Hon'ble Judges of the Allahabad High Court that there were materials on the record to prove that in fact a dispute did exist between the parties which in the opinion of the Magistrate was likely to cause a breach of the peace.

In my opinion, therefore, the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court has no applicability to the facts of the present case.

The learned Counsel for the complainant Ragho Ram also referred to a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in Barmha Singh v. Emperor (2). In that ruling it was held by two learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court that in proceedings under s. 145 of the Code, the mere omission of the Magistrate to record under sub-s. (1) of s. 145 the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed is an irregularity in procedure which can be cured by s. 537 of the Code, and that it did not deprive him of jurisdiction to take further proceedings under that section. The principle laid down in that decision is also not challenged in the present case, but its applicability to this case is questioned. Here not only has the Magistrate omitted to record the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace did exist, but he has, by his omission to satisfy himself that there was in existence a dispute of such a nature as was likely to cause a breach of the peace, deprived himself of exercising jurisdiction to take proceedings under s. 145 of the Code. It is one thing for the Magistrate to omit to record the grounds for his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace did exist, but where there is an initial want of jurisdiction on the part of the Magistrate owing to his failure to satisfy himself of the existence of a dispute of such a nature as was likely to cause a breach of the peace, then the proceedings taken under s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, are void 'ab initio.

As was pointed out in Emperor v. Bechhu Chaube (3).

'The test to be applied in considering whether a particular infringement of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure is one which does or does not come within the purview of s. 537 appears to me to be this;

Does the error go to the whole root of the trial?

Does it, in fact, vitiate the proceeding?

Has the Court assumed an authority which it does not possess?

Has it broken the vital rules of procedure?

If the error is of such a nature, the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception and s. 537 has no application"

In a recent ruling of the Rangoon High Court reported in Nga U Khine v. Emperor (4), Mr. Justice Dunkley laid down the law on the subject in the following clear pronouncement:

"In order that an infringement of the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, should be of such a nature that it does not come within the purview of s. 537 of the Code, it must go to the root of the trial and must in fact vitiate the proceedings. It must in fact amount to an assumption by the Court of a jurisdiction which it does not possess, or a failure to exercise a jurisdiction which it does possess. Subramaniya Iyer v. Emperor (5), and Emperor v. Bechhu Chaube (3)."

In Abdul Rehman v. Emperor (6) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee distinguished the case of Subramanya Iyer v. Emperor (5) from the facts of the case before them and pointed out that the procedure adopted in Subramanaya's case (5) was one which the Code obviously prohibited, and it was possible that it might have worked actual injustice to the accused, and they summed up their view of this matter at the end of the judgment in the following words:—

"To sum up, in the view which their Lordships take of the several sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the bare fact of such an omission or irregularity as occurred in the case under appeal un-accompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned is not enough to warrant the quashing of a conviction which in their Lordships' view may be supported by the curative provisions of ss. 535 and 537."

In the present case since there are no materials on the record from which this Court can be satisfied that the Magistrate, before he passed his order under s. 145 of the Code, had made any preliminary enquiry to convince himself that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace arising out of the alleged dispute concerning land, and since the Magistrate did not make any such preliminary enquiry, the conclusion is obvious that he usurped a jurisdiction not vested in him.

The dispute was purely of a civil nature, and the only reason justifying him in taking action under s. 145 of the Code was that he had satisfied himself that the dispute concerning land was of such a nature as was likely to cause a breach of the peace.

For the reasons given above I am of opinion that the order of the Magistrate dated March 17, 1934, should be set aside. I would accordingly allow this application for revision, and would set aside the order of the Magistrate, dated March 17, 1924.

It will, of course, be open to the present Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Sultanpur, if he is satisfied that there does exist even now a dispute concerning the land in dispute, and that that dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, to take fresh proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Srivastava, J.—(January 24, 1935) I have had the benefit of reading the judgment of my learned brother Nanavutty, J., but I regret that even after reading it with all the care and attention which it deserves, I have not been able to change the opinion formed by me at the close of the arguments in the case. I need not repeat the facts which have been stated at length in the judgment of my learned colleague. It would be enough to say that the opposite-party in his complaint made to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had clearly alleged that a large body of the applicant's servants, who were also made parties to the proceedings, came to the land in suit on which he had sowed the kharif crop armed with lathis, interfered with his possession, and were threatening to kill him if he went near the land. He added that if they were not properly dealt with, there was the likelihood of a breach of the peace. When he was examined on oath by the Magistrate, he again made statements to the same effect. Immediately after this statement had been recorded by him, the Magistrate ordered notices to be issued calling upon the parties concerned in the dispute to file their written statements in respect of possession of the land in dispute, and notices under s. 145 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, were issued accordingly.

The main contention of the learned Counsel for the applicant is that as the initial order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under sub-s. (1) makes no mention of his being satisfied that there existed a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, nor does it state the grounds of his being so satisfied, therefore the order was quite illegal and the subsequent order passed by him making his preliminary order under s. 145 absolute must be set aside. He did not contend that the omission of the Magistrate to comply with the letter of the law has in fact occasioned any failure of justice, but maintained that the Magistrate's non-compliance with the imperative provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 145, Criminal Procedure Code constituted an illegality which, whether there was any failure of justice or not, could not be cured by s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The relevant words of s. 537 are as follows:—

"..... no ..... order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered on.. - revision on account—

(a) of any error, omission or irregularity in the... .. order .. . ...in any .. proceedings under this Code . .....unless such error, omission, irregularity ... - ... .has in fact occasioned a failure of justice"

Explanation.—In determining whether any error, omission or irregularity in any proceeding under this Code has occasioned a failure of justice, the Court shall have regard to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings."

It is hardly possible to lay down any formula for determining whether any particular infringement of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure does or does not constitute an error, omission or irregularity within the meaning of the section, but I am clearly of opinion that the infringement of a provision of the Code worded in an imperative form would not necessarily mean that it constitutes an illegality which is outside the purview of s. 537. Instances can be easily cited of provisions in the Code relating to trivial matters of procedure couched in mandatory terms, the transgression of which cannot be regarded as anything more than a mere technical defect which cannot possibly have the effect of nullifying the proceedings. I am equally clear that if a Magistrate acts in plain disobedience of an express prohibition contained in the Code it would be an illegality which cannot be condoned under s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The case of Subramanya Iyer v. Emperor (5) is an instance of such a case. The Magistrate in that case had acted in contravention of the prohibition clearly implied in the rule laid down under s. 234 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The following observations of their Lordships in that case are instructive:

"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time, and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law could have been joined together in one indictment. The illustration of the section itself sufficiently shows what was meant."

"The remedying of mere irregularities is familiar in most systems of jurisprudence, but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted that this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission, or irregularity."

In a later case, Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (6) their Lordships referring to the procedure which had been adopted in Subramanya Iyer v. Emperor (5) as follows:—

"The procedure adopted was one which the Code positively prohibited, and it was possible that it might have worked actual injustice to the accused."

I do not think that the last portion of the sentence just quoted was intended to qualify the earlier decision. However this case is of importance as an authority in support of the view that infringement of a mandatory provision of the Code does not necessarily exclude it from the purview of s. 537. In this case the imperative provision of s. 360, Criminal Procedure Code, that the evidence of each witness "shall be read over to him" was not complied with, but their Lordships held that:

" The bare fact of such an omission or irregularity as occurred in the case under appeal, unaccompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned, is not enough to warrant the quashing of a conviction, which in their Lordships' view may be supported by the curative provisions of ss. 535 and 537."

Turning to the facts of the present case, we find that there was sufficient material in the allegations contained in the complaint and in the statement made by the complainant on oath on which the Magistrate could be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed. Section 145, authorises the Magistrate to act under the section whenever he "is satisfied from a Police report or other information" that such a dispute exists. I am not aware of any provision which makes it obligatory for the Magistrate to call upon the complainant to produce witnesses or to make preliminary inquiry or to call for a report from the Tahsildar or the Police before making the initial order under sub-s. (1) of that section. The words of the section appear to be wide enough to authorise the Magistrate to act on any information which satisfies him of the likelihood of a breach of the peace. If the material which was before the Magistrate in the present case on which he could well be satisfied of the existence of such a dispute had not been there, the position would have been different. But when with such material before him a Senior Magistrate, who had the charge of a Sub-Division, ordered the issue of a notice under s. 145, there is every reason to think that the information received by him from the complainant sufficiently satisfied him of the existence of an apprehension of a breach of the peace so as to induce him to take action under that section. No doubt he did not strictly comply with the provisions of s. 145, in omitting to state in the order that he was satisfied about the likelihood of a breach of the peace and the grounds on which he was so satisfied, but I do not think that this omission deprived him of jurisdiction to act under that section. The jurisdiction that is conferred on a Magistrate by s. 145, arises from the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof within the local limits of his jurisdiction. Any defect in following the procedure laid down in s. 145, cannot, in my opinion, take away the jurisdiction so conferred. In the present case it is not denied that there was a dispute concerning land within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who issued the notice in question. He had received information from the complainant which was supported by him on oath that the said dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace. These facts were sufficient to invest him with jurisdiction to take necessary steps under the section. It should also be noted that when the applicant appeared in pursuance of the notice, she did not raise any objection about the notice being defective by reason of the omission of which so much capital is sought to be made before us. Under the circumstances, I am of opinion, that it is nothing more than an omission or irregularity within the meaning of s. 537. I have already mentioned that it is not the applicant's case that this omission or irregularity has occasioned any failure of justice, and so far as I can see, the applicant has not in any way been prejudiced on this account. I am, therefore, of opinion that we are debarred by the provisions of s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure from making any interference with the order of the Magistrate by reason of this technical defect in his initial order.

The present case appears to me to be almost on all fours with the decisions of the Allahabad High Court in Barmha Singh v. Emperor (2) and Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad (1). The principles laid down in these cases, with which I am in entire agreement, are fully applicable to the case. The view taken by me as regards the scope of s. 537, of the Code of Criminal Procedure is also supported by the decision of the Rangoon High Court in Nga Hla U v. Emperor (7), I completely endorse the reasoning adopted by Brown, J., in that case.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the order of the Magistrate must be upheld, and would accordingly dismiss this application.

Srivastava and Nanavutty, JJ.—(January 24, 1935).—As the Judges composing this Bench are equally divided in opinion, the case should be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Judge for necessary orders about the case being heard by a third Judge for his opinion under s. 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

King, C. J.—(February 11, 1935).—This application arises out of proceedings taken by a Magistrate under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The facts of the case have been fully given in the judgment of Mr. Justice Nanavutty, and I need only touch upon them briefly.

Certain ladies were joint proprietors of a village and one of those ladies, Ummatul Fatima, gave a perpetual lease of some plots to one Narain. Narain assigned the lease for Ragho Ram who got posssession. The co-sharers of Ummatul Fatima obtained a declaration in the Civil Court that this lease, granted by one co-sharer, was invalid. The Court refused to grant the prayer for possession of the land in dispute. So the possession of Ragho Ram remained undisturbed. Instead of seeking to eject Ragho Ram by process of law, the co-sharers attempted to oust him from possession by force. Ragho Ram then made an application to the Sub-Divisional Officer under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against nineteen persons, nine of whom were the zemindars and the other ten were their servants or relations. Ragho Ram asserted that he had been in possession of the plots in dispute for some years and that he had sown the kharif crops during the current year also and that on July 7, 1933, certain of the opposite parties came to the land armed with lathis and tried to turn him out by force. The applicant also alleged that on July 23, when he went to the field again for getting the crops weeded, the opposite party again appeared, armed with lathis, and prevented him forcibly from weeding the crops and threatened to kill him if he did not desist from cultivating the plots in dispute. The Magistrate took the statement of Ragho Ram on oath and he supported the allegations made in his complaint. Thereupon the Magistrate issued an order purporting to be an order under s. 145, sub-s. (1) directing notices to be issued to the opposite parties that they should attend the Court on a certain date and put in written statements of their claims to possession of the land in dispute. The Magistrate took the evidence of the parties and finally passed an order declaring that Ragho Ram was in possession of the land in dispute and directing that he should remain in possession unless duly ejected by some order of a Court.

The opposite party applied to the learned Sessions Judge in revision but he dismissed the application. A second application for revision was filed in this Court and was referred to a Bench of two Judges. As the two learned Judges differed in opinion, the case has been referred to me under s. 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, for opinion.

The main point argued by the learned Counsel for the applicant Bibi Asghari Khanam is that the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer under s. 145, sub-s.(1) is vitiated by the fact that the Magistrate did not state that he was satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, much less did he state the grounds of his being so satisfied. It is argued that as there is nothing to show that the Magistrate was satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace he had no jurisdication to take action under s. 145.

The territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate is not disputed. It is also admitted that a dispute existed concerning the land. The only question is whether the Magistrate was satisfied that the dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace, and if he was so satisfied, then whether his omission to state the grounds of his being so satisfied was an omission sufficient to vitiate the whole proceeding.

There is good authority for the view that if the Magistrate is satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, then the mere failure to state the grounds of his being so satisfied, in his preliminary order under s. 145 (1), is not a fatal defect, but is only an admission which is curable under the provisions of s. 547 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, if it has not occasioned any failure of justice or any prejudice to the accused persons. The learned Advocate for the applicant has not challenged this view but he argued that there is nothing upon the record to show that the Magistrate was satisfied that a dispute existed likely to cause a breach of the peace or that the Magistrate ever applied his mind to such a question and therefore the proceedings are vitiated.

I think it must be conceded that a Magistrate cannot take action under s. 145, sub-s. (1) unless he is satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. If he is not so satisfied, then I think he would have no jurisdiction to take action. The omission to record the grounds of his being so satisfied is another matter, and it is not now argued before me that the omission to state the grounds was such a defect or omission that could not be cured under s. 537. I may mention that it has not even been argued that any failure of justice was occasioned or that the accused have been prejudiced by the omission to state the grounds in the preliminary order under s. 145, sub-s. (1).

The main question, therefore, seems to be whether we can reasonably hold that the Magistrate was in fact satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. Before the Magistrate issued his preliminary order, he had received a written complaint and he had taken the sworn testimony of the complainant. I have already referred to the substance of the complaint and I think it is clear that if the Magistrate believed the complaint to be true, or even approximately true, then there was undoubtedly a strong apprehension of a breach of the peace. According to the complainant the opposite party were trying to turn him out from his fields by force and threatened to kill him if he ventured to continue cultivating his fields.

Mr. Justice Nanavutty takes the view that the Magistrate could not have been satisfied of the likelihood of a breach of the peace merely from the statement of the complainant and that the Magistrate should have held some preliminary inquiry by examining further witnesses or by calling for a report from the Police or from the Tahsildar. I am unable to accept this view. There is nothing in the language of the section to suggest that the Magistrate cannot take action merely on the sworn testimony of the complainant himself, if the Magistrate believes it to be true. The section itself shows that a Magistrate can take action merely on the strength of a Police report or "other information," so he can take action without having before him any sworn testimony whatever. It is impossible to lay down any rule as to the amount of evidence which should satisfy a Magistrate. In my opinion if a Magistrate believes the statement of one witness to be true, he is at perfect liberty to act upon it for the purpose of passing an order under s. 145 (1). It is not incumbent upon him to hold a preliminary inquiry himself by examining further witnesses, nor is it necessary for him to call for a report from the Police. If it were held that some such procedure were absolutely necessary, then I think that the object of s. 145 would be largely frustrated. It might be advisable to take action immediately in order to prevent a breach of the peace, and I think it would be very dangerous to hold that a Magistrate could not take action under s. 145 without holding a preliminary inquiry, as suggested by Nanavutty, J. If the Magistrate is satisfied on the strength of the testimony of one witness then he can pass an order under s. 145 (1).

In my opinion the Magistrate had before him sufficient materials for holding that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. If the facts stated by complainant were even approximately true, there was a strong probability of a breach of the peace. When we find that the Magistrate had such materials before him and that he proceeded to issue an order under s. 145, sub-s. (1), I think it may safely be inferred that he was satisfied that the dispute was likely to cause a breach of the peace. The mere fact that a Magistrate issues an order under s. 145, sub-s. (1), would not necessarily lead to the inference that the Magistrate was satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. The Magistrate might have no information before him suggesting the likelihood of a breach of the peace and yet, if he were very inexperienced, he might take action under s. 145. But when we find, as in the present case, that the Magistrate had ample ground for apprehending a breach of the peace and that he did issue an order under s. 145, sub-s. (1), I am prepared to hold that he was satisfied regarding the likelihood of a breach of the peace although he omitted to say so in his order.

On this view there was no want of jurisdiction on the part of a Magistrate but a mere omission to frame his order in accordance with law. As no failure of justice or prejudice to the accused has been occasioned, I think the omission is covered by s. 537 and cannot furnish a reason for setting aside the Magistrate's final order.

This view is in accordance with the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad (1) and a decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Barmha Singh v. Emperor (2). I was a party to both these decisions and see no reason to change my view. In the case last mentioned the Magistrate's order under s. 145 (1) contained absolutely no mention of the fact that he was satisfied regarding the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace much less did it contain any mention of the grounds for such satisfaction. It was, however, held that the omission did not vitiate the proceeding.

I agree with the view taken by Mr. Justice Srivastava and hold that there is no ground for interference in revision.

In conclusion, although I consider that there is no ground for interfering with the order in revision, I would not have the Magistrate to understand that defects in procedure are of no importance; slipshod procedure is to be condemned even though it does not necessarily result in vitiating the whole proceeding.

Srivastava and Nanavutty, JJ.—March 5, 1935.—The only question urged in support of this application was that the initial order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrare under sub-s. 1 of s. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was illegal, because the Magistrate made no mention of his being satisfied that there existed a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace nor stated the grounds of his being so satisfied. The Judges constituting this Bench were unable to agree as regards this question and the matter was referred to a third Judge, who has now decided that the order in question could not be interfered with on that ground. The result, therefore, is that this application for revision must fail. It is accordingly dismissed.

May 10, 1934
RANGI LAL, J.
AKKU—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
ALI AKBAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS

Custom (Punjab)—Alienation — Necessity—Recital in deed, how far evidence of necessity—No finding that alienor has been extravagant—Vendor need not prove that previous debts paid out of sale consideration were contracted for necessary purposes.

The recital in a deed is clear evidence of the representation it makes and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an inquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual inquiry as regards the necessity for alienation has become impossible, the recital coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore (1), relied on.

In the absence of a finding that an alienor has been recklessly extravagant or has been wantonly wasting his property, the vendee is not required to prove that previous debts whether owing to himself or to third persons which have been paid out of the sale consideration were contracted for necessary purposes He has only to prove the existence of such debts and once that is established and it is not proved that they have been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, their payment becomes a valid necessity sufficient to support the sale.

S. C. A from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated May 31, 1933.

Mr. Achhru Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Karim, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to challenge four alienations made by the father of the plaintiffs. We are now concerned with only two of them, namely, a mortgage dated February 23, 1921, for a sum of Rs. 140 and a sale of the same date for a sum of Rs. 900. The mortgage has been set aside entirely and the sale has been converted into a mortgage for a sum of Rs. 540. The consideration for the mortgage is made up thus:

	Rs.	A.	P.
"(a) Borrowed in cash for the purchase of cattle	100	0	0
(b) Borrowed in cash for the purchase of fodder	35	0	0
(c) Expenses of stamp and registration	5	0	0

The learned District Judge expressed himself thus in regard to this mortgage :

"The money borrowed under the mortgage was for purchase of cattle and fodder, and for both these purposes zamindars can get advances from Government in the shape of takawi loans for which no security is required and which are re-paid by convenient instalments with a low rate of interest. With all these advantages so readily available Umer Din acted unreasonably in borrowing money for the purpose at high interest and on security. These were not antecedent debts and it lay upon the alienee to prove necessity. He failed to do this, and the debt was therefore rightly disallowed."

The learned Judge fell into an error in supposing that the sum of Rs. 140 was borrowed at a high rate of interest. The mortgage was with possession and no interest was payable. There is nothing on the record to show that a takawi loan on easy terms was available to the mortgagor. The finding of the learned District Judge is, therefore, vitiated by a wrong assumption of fact and a conjecture for which there is no basis on the record. It appears that he was inclined to believe the recitals in the deed because he remarked that the money was borrowed for the purchase of cattle and fodder. He, however, failed to consider whether under the circumstances of the case this recital was sufficient proof of necessity or not. In Banga Chandra Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that after a long period has elapsed between the alienation and the suit to set it aside when all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or have passed away, a recital consistent with the probabilities and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside. The recital is clear evidence of the representation and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an inquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual inquiry has become impossible, the recital coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. It is a matter of common knowledge that a zamindar is frequently under the necessity of borrowing money for purchase of cattle and fodder. The alienation in question took place in 1921 and the suit to set it aside was brought by the sons of the alienor in 1932. It was futile to expect the alienee to adduce strict proof of necessity at this distance of time. The alienation should, in my opinion, have been upheld.

The consideration for the sale in question is made up thus:

"(a) Due to the alienee on account of a previous mortgage Rs. 340. (b) Due to Amir Khan, previous mortgagee, Rs. 300 (c) Due to Ali Sher, previous mortgagee, Rs. 100. (d) Due to Sardar Khan on a bahi entry, Rs. 90. (e) Expenses of stamp and registration, Rs. 20. (f) Paid in cash for sinking a well, Rs 50."

Item (c) has been wholly disallowed, and out of item (a) a sum of Rs. 80 only has been allowed. In regard to item (c), the learned District Judge has made the following remarks:

"Payment to Ali Sher not proved. Ali Sher not examined; no separate receipt."

It is true that Ali Sher was not examined, but the learned District Judge failed to consider that the alienee produced the registered mortgage deed bearing an endorsement from Ali Sher. The land mortgaged to Ali Sher was represented by khasra No. 801 and it forms part of the land sold to Akku defendant. There is no doubt that the land was in the latter's possession because the plaintiffs brought a suit in respect of it. He could have acquired possession only after redemption from Ali Sher. The failure of the learned District Judge to consider these points vitiates his finding. As for item (a), the first question for consideration is whether the alienee was called upon to prove the necessity for it. The learned District Judge has failed to consider this aspect of the case. It is well-established that in the absence of a finding that an alienor has been recklessly extravagant or has been wantonly wasting his property, the vendee is not required to prove that previous debts whether owing to himself or to third persons which have been paid out of the sale consideration were contracted for necessary purposes. He has only to prove the existence of such debts and once that is established and it is not proved that they have been incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, their payment becomes a valid necessity sufficient to support the sale. In the present case it has been found by the Courts below that the alienor was neither extravagant nor inclined to waste his property wantonly, and there is no dispute as to the existence of the previous mortgage in favour of the alienee. The latter was, under the circumstances of the case, not called upon to prove any necessity for it especially when it was not expressly challenged in the suit. One of the items disallowed out of the sum of Rs. 340 was a sum of Rs. 80 due to Umar Din, prior mortgagee. The learned District Judge remarked as follows in regard to this item:

"The only evidence was the statement of Akku, defendant, Umar Din not produced, nor any receipt by him."

In this case also Akku produced the original mortgage deed and proved its execution because he was an attesting witness to it. The land mortgaged to Umar Din is now in possession of Akku and has been sued for by the plaintiffs. In regard to the remaining items which have been disallowed, the recitals in the deed should have been considered to be sufficient under the circumstances of the case. For these reasons, I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit in regard to these alienations with costs throughout.

Power of attorney—Construction—Income-tax return signed, verified and filed by agent—Whether permitted by terms of power of attorney—No evidence as to knowledge of assessee—Income-tax authorities not changing their position due to implied representation—Estoppel, if arises—Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 23—Production of account books by assessee—Whether implies ratification of filing of return by agent—Duty of Income-tax authorities to satisfy themselves of agent's authority to file returns.

A return of income for an year was filed on behalf of a taluqdar by his mukhtar who also signed and verified the return. The relevant clause of the mukhtarnama was as follows:

Therefore, I appoint .. .. .. as my mukhtar-i-ams and any suits (nalishat) filed by them in Civil Courts, Revenue Courts, Collectorates, Criminal Courts, Appellate Courts, in the Settlement Department, Cantonment, Police, Municipalities in British India, Chief Court, High Court, Commissioner's Court, Board of Revenue and other Government departments, or any applications (darkhwasts) filed by them on my behalf .. .. ..or plaints, memoranda of appeal, or written-statements, or affidavits filed in support of any application .. .. All such proceedings shall be accepted by me as having been done by me personally;—

Held, (1) that though there was no mention of the income-tax department, the words "other Government departments" were sufficiently wide to include the department of Income-tax. [p. 182, col. 1.]

(2) that the general object of the power was that the agent should be able to represent his principal in proceedings in Courts so as to dispense with the necessity of the principal appearing personally but it did not give the agent any authority to sign or verify the return of income for the purposes of assessment of income-tax. The Bank of Bengal v. Ramanathan Chetty (2), and Bryant v. La Banque du Peuple (5), referred to. [ibid.]

(3) that there was no evidence that the return was filed with the authority or even with the knowledge of the assessee and even if he had the knowledge, as the income-tax authorities had not in any way changed their position to their detriment on account of any implied representation on the part of the assessee about the mukhtar's authority to sign and verify the return, no question of estoppel could arise.

(4) that the production of the account books by the assessee in pursuance of notice, did not constitute any ratification in respect of the return of income. [p 183, col. 2.]

It is the duty of the Income-tax Officers before they accept returns signed and verified by agents to satisfy themselves about the authority of such agents to do so. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Mr. H. S. Gupta, Government Advocate, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Messrs. Wasim, Khaliquzzaman and Faiyaz Ali, for Syed Muhammad Taqi.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act (XI of 1922).

The facts which have given rise to this reference are briefly these :—

A return of income for the year 1932-33 was filed on behalf of Raja Saiyid Mohammad Mehdi, Taluqdar of Pirpur, District Fyzabad, by one Asghar Husain Khan, a mukhtar of the Raja. The said return was also signed and verified by the same Asghar Husain Khan. The Income-tax Officer of Fyzabad did not accept the return and called upon the assessee to produce his accounts. When the accounts were produced, he found that the return in question did not contain a correct statement of the income, and therefore, assessed the Raja on a larger income than that shown in the return At the same time he issued a notice to the Raja to show cause why a penalty under s. 28 of the Act should not be levied upon him. The Income-tax Officer did not accept the explanations which were given on behalf of the Raja for the omission of certain items of income from the return in question and levied a penalty against him of Rs. 5,000. The Raja filed an appeal against this order of the Income-tax Officer to the Assistant Commissioner, who dismissed the appeal. He then made an application under s. 66 (2) of the Act demanding a reference to the High Court of certain question of law arising out of the order imposing the penalty under s. 28. Thereupon the Commissioner of Income-tax made the present reference. The questions referred by him are as follows :—

(1) In the circumstances of this case, was the return of income filed by Asghar Husain Khan, the mukhtar-i am of the assessee, such a return as could be held to be binding on the assessee ?

(2) If the answer to question No. (1) is in the affirmative, was it essential for the Assistant Commissioner to establish that the false return had been filed with the knowledge and connivance of the assessee before he could confirm the order of the Income-tax Officer imposing penalty under s. 28 of the Income Tax Act?

As regards the first question, it has been argued on behalf of the assessee that the return in question is not binding on him, firstly because according to the provisions of the Income Tax Act, the return must be signed by the assessee himself, and secondly, because on a proper interpretation of the power of attorney in favour of Asghar Husain Khan, he had no authority to sign or verify such a return on behalf of the Raja. As regards the general question whether under the provisions of Income Tax Act a return of income required to be filed under s. 22 cl. (2) must be signed and verified by the assessee himself or can be signed and verified by an authorised agent, it has been objected by the learned Government Advocate that this question was not specifically raised by the assessee before the Commissioner of Income-tax and is not included within the questions referred by him to this Court. The learned Counsel for the assessee, on the other hand, maintains that the question is fully covered by the grounds raised by him in his application for reference under s. 66. He further contends that in any case this Court has authority to re-settle issues and answer all questions of law, which properly arise out of the order complained off. In view of the opinion which we have formed as regards the second ground, we do not think it necessary to express any opinion as regards the powers of this Court in the matter of re-settling issues, and would, under the circumstances, leave the general question raised on behalf of the assessee undecided.

Next as regards the question about the authority of Asghar Husain Khan to sign and verify the return on behalf of the assessee, the determination of this question in our opinion must proceed mainly upon the interpretation of the mukhtarnama given in appendix D of the case supmitted by the Commissioner of Income-tax. The relevant clause of this mukhtarnama is as follows:—

Therefore, I appoint . . . . . as my muhhtar-i-ams and any suits (nalishat) filed by them in Civil Courts, Revenue Courts, Collectorates, Criminal Courts, Appellate Courts, in the Settlement Department, Cantonment, Police, Municipalities in British India, Chief Court, High Court, Commissioner's Court, Board of Revenue and other Government departments, or any applications (darkhwasts) filed by them on my behalf . . . or plaints, memoranda of appeal, or written-statements, or affidavits filed in support of any application . . . All such proceedings shall be accepted by me as having been done by me personally.

Though there is no express mention of the Income-tax Department, yet we think that the words "other Government departments" are sufficiently wide to include the department of Income-tax.

It has been argued that the return of income filed under s. 22, cl. (2) of the Income Tax Act should be regarded as an application or a written statement within the meaning of the terms of the mukhtarnama. It has also been pointed out that when the mukhtar was authourised to file affidavits in support of an application, it should include the authority to file a return of income such as is required by s. 22. We find ourselves unable to accede to the argument. In Jonmenjoy Coonddo v. George Alder Watson (1), in which case also the question was as regards the interpretation of a power of attorney, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee remarked as follows:—

"In order to see what was intended by these words, they must be looked at in connection with the context, as well as with the general object of the power."

It seems to us that the general object of the power in the present case was that the agent should be able to represent his principal in proceedings in Courts so as to dispense with the necessity of the principal appearing personlly. This is clearly borne out by the preamble of the document, in which it is said that the executant appoints the persons named in the document as his general agents, because he has often to institute and defend cases (muqadmat). Again in The Bank of Bengal v. Ramathan Chetty (2), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred with approval to the following observations in Bryant v. La Banque du Peuple (3) and applied the canon of construction laid down therein to the case before them

"That where an act purporting to be done under a power of attorney is challenged as being in excess of the authority conferred by the power it is neceesary to show that on a fair construction of the whole instrument the authority in question is to be found within the four corners of the instrument, either in express terms or by necessary implication."

In Khatiar's Law of Agency in British India (page 176) a number of cases have been cited in support of the proposition that a power of attorney must be strictly construed as giving only such authority as it confers expressly or by necessary implication. Applying these principles to the construction of the mukhtarnama in favour of Asghar Husain Khan, we are clearly of opinion that it does not give him any authority to sign or verify the return of income for the purposes of assessment of income-tax. We are unable to agree with the learned Government Advocate that it can be treated either as an application or as a written statement within the meaning of the mukhtarnama. An application in the sense in which it has been used in the mukhtarnama, in our opinion means a document containing some request to the authority to whom the application is made. The return in question cannot be treated as an application in this sense. It is merely a declaration of the assessee as regards his income. We have also looked into the prescribed form for such returns. It does not contain any request or prayer addressed to the Income-tax authorities. It is also impossible to treat it as a written-statement which term appears to have been used in the mukhtarnama in the technical sense of a written reply to a plaint filed in Court.

We have little doubt that when this mukhtarnama was drafted, the idea of the mukhtars signing and verifying income-tax returns or even of their representing the principal before the income-tax authorities was not present in the mind of the person who drafted it. The central idea of it was to make provision for representation of the principal in Court litigations and proceedings.

It is also argued by the learned Government Advocate that in any case the agency need not be created expressly but can also be implied. In the case of Asghar Husain Khan who was appointed a mukhtar by a written deed, there seems no question of any implied agency. The powers conferred upon him as agent have been definitely set forth in the written mukhtarnama and we can see no justification for going outside its terms.

Lastly it has been argued that the present case is one of an agency by estoppel. Reliance has been placed on the fact that Asghar Husain Khan had also verified the return for the preceding year 1931-32 and that in previous year such returns were signed by the manager or some mukhtar of the assessee. We have a mention of this also in the order of reference of the Commissioner of Income-tax, which shows that Raja Saiyid Muhammad Mehdi was assessed to income-tax for the first time in the year 1927-28 and that the return for that year was verified by a mukhtar Saiyid Hasan Raza. We know nothing about the returns filed in the two following years but in 1930-31 the Raja appended his signature to the return under that of his manager, who had verified it. These facts do not show any uniform practice on the part of the assessee. Moreover, as stated before, we have no information as to the return for two years. In any case we do not think that the facts stated above are sufficient to substantiate a plea of estoppel.

"Whoever deals with an agent is put on his guard by that very fact, and does so at his risk. It is his right and duty to inquire into and ascertain the nature and extent of the powers of the agent, and to determine whether the act or contract about to be consummated comes within the province of the agency and will or not bind the principal. It is the duty of third persons at their peril to ascertain what kind of an agent one is who represents himself as such and the extent of his powers."

(Katiar's Law of Agency, pages 155-156).

It seems to us that it is the duty of the Income tax Officers before they accept returns signed and verified by agents to satisfy themselves about the authority of such agents to do so. The Income-tax Officer had easy means for gaining such knowledge by looking into the mukhtarnama, which was a registered document. There is no evidence before us to show that the return in question had been filed with the authority or even with the knowledge of the Raja, but assuming that he had the knowledge, it seems obvious that the income-tax authorities have not in any way changed their position to their detriment on account of any implied representation on the part of the Raja about Asghar Husain Khan's authority to sign and verify the return. We are, therefore, of opinion, that in the circumstances no question of estoppel can arise.

Reference is also made by the learned Government Advocate to Pollock's Law of Contract at p. 649 and Katiar's Law of Agency at p. 176 in support of the contention that where the authority of an agent is conferred in ambiguous terms so as to be fairly capable of more than one construction every act done by him in good faith, which is warranted by any one of those construction is deemed to have been duly authorised. We think that there is no room for application of this principle in the present case, because the terms of the mukhtarnama appear to us to be quite clear and unambiguous.

It was also contended that the act of Asghar Husain Khan in filing the return, even though at the inception unauthorised, should be deemed to (sic) have subsequently been ratified by the Raja, when in compliance to the notice issued by the Income-tax Officer under s. 23 of the Income Tax Act, he made Asghar Husain Khan appear and produce the accounts, which the Raja had been called upon the produce. When the Raja was called upon to produce his account books he was in duty bound to do so. Section 23 allows an assessee to produce the evidence himself or to cause it to be produced by some other person. It was a mere accident that the person deputed for the production of the accounts was Asghar Husain Khan. We think that in the circumstances the production of these account books cannot constitute any ratification in respect of the return of income.

The result, therefore, is that we answer the first question in the negative. In view of the answer given to this question, the second question does not arise. We make no order as to costs.

N. Order accordingly.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 4—Promissor and promisee clearly indicated and also definite promise to pay but worded in participal form—Document, whether a promissory note—Loan and note contemporaneous—No anterior liability apart from note—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62.

Where in the opening portion of a document the promissor and the promisee are clearly indicated and there is a definite promise to pay though it is worded in the participal form, the document is a promissory note. Kadir Moithin Pulavar v. Pandurang Naidu (1), referred to.

Where the promissory note as well as the loan are contemporaneous, there is really no question of a definite anterior liability apart from the note. Shanmuganatha Chettiar v. Srinivasa Ayyar (2), distinguished.

A. against the decree of the Temporary Sub-Judge, Devakottai, in O. S. No. 138 of 1928.

The Advocate-General and A. Nagaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and V. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

Varadachariar, J.—Plaintiff-appellant sued to recover a sum of money on the basis of what is referred to in the plaint as a "signed letter" given by the defendant on April 12, 1920. That letter bears only a one anna stamp and the lower Court has held that it is a promissory note 'not payable on demand" and is, therefore, insufficiently stamped. It dismissed the suit, holding that the suit is based only on that inadmissible letter, and not on any original debt as an independent cause of action. In the appeal the learned Advocate-General has contended that that letter is not a promissory note at all or, if it is a promissory note, it is payable on demand and is, therefore, duly stamped. The appellant has also taken the precaution of applying to this Court for permission to amend the plaint, by basing the claim alternatively on the "debt" independently of the said letter.

In support of the first contention urged on behalf of the appellant, viz., that the document in question is not a promissory note, reliance is placed upon the fact that the document does not in terms contain a promise to pay to a specified person. The terms of the document are set out in the judgment of the lower Court. It is in these terms:

"30th Panguni, Sitharthi—Kallal At. N. A. T. 'varau' (credit) 'the same place R. M. M. R. M. 'patru' (debit) for the two hundis taken by me and sent for our Penang firm as on 13th idem Rs. 9,500 at Rs 95 (exchange rate) three months thavanai 11 annas interest, rings 10,000, for these 10,000 rings adding from thavanai, thavanai interest and principal will be paid and this letter taken back by me."

The document begins in the way in which similar documents in vogue among Chetties run, mentioning the fact of the money having been lent by A. T. N. A. T. and having been received by R. M. M. R. M. The English translation puts the concluding words in the passive voice. Perhaps it will be a more accurate rendering of the original to have these words in the active voice, i. e., "paying the principal and interest as per above terms I shall take back this letter." The point of the argument on behalf of the appellant is that the document does not say "paying to you"; and in support of that contention, reliance was placed upon a decision of this Court in Kadir Moithin Pulavar v. Pandurang Naidu (1). No exception can be taken to the principle laid down in that case that in considering whether a document is a promissory note or not, it is material to see whether the payee is named there. But neither that case nor any other decision lays down, in which part of the document the payee is to be named, or by what kind of language. On the other hand Illus. (b), s. 4, Negotiable Instruments Act, clearly shows that the reference to the payee need not be found in the words of promise. The illustration runs thus:

"I acknowledge myself to be indebted to B in Rs. 10,000 to be paid on demand for value received."

This is declared to be a promissory note within the meaning of the definition. In the document now in question, the promissor and the promisee are clearly indicated in the opening portion of the document and there is a definite promise to pay though it is worded in the participal form. There is, therefore, no force in the first contention. The second contention is that the reference to three months thavanai is only a provision for calculation of compound interest with three-monthly rests and does not make the document payable otherwise than on demand. There was at one time some difference of opinion in the reported decisions in this Court, as to whether in the case of these thavanai, documents among Nattukottai Chetties he money becomes due immediately on the expiry of the first thavanai or only upon an express demand after the expiry of the thavanai but there was at no time any doubt whatever that during the first thavanai the money was not repayable. That this is the well established usage amongst Chetties in the case of these thavanai documents is shown by the plaintiff's admission as his own witness in the case, that the amount is not repayable within three months as it is given on three months' thavanai. This contention therefore also fails.

As regards the application to amend the plaint by inserting a prayer based upon the original cause of action, it is difficult to read the plaint as containing any basis for such a prayer and it is therefore very doubtful if the appellant will be justified in asking for it at this stage. But even apart from that consideration it will, in the circumstances of this case, serve no purpose to the appellant to allow such an amendment. The note as well as the loan were contemporaneous and there is really no question of a definite anterior liability apart from the note. Further considerable amounts have admittedly been repaid to the plaintiff and unless the plaintiff could enforce the particular terms as to interest, exchange, etc., contained in the letter and that, in the particular way in which he wishes to interpret those terms, he will get nothing in the suit. It will therefore be no good to him merely to fall back upon the theory of an implied debt from the mere fact of a loan; he must be permitted to prove the very terms contained in the suit letter under the guise of an original debt. To permit him to do so will be in the very teeth of s. 91, Evidence Act. The learned Advocate-General admitted that the cases in this Court are opposed to this contention of his, where the debt and the note are simultaneous but he relied upon certain passages in Shanmuganatha Chettiar v. Srinivasa Ayyar (2), as recognizing that a claim on a debt may exist alongside of and independently of a claim on a promissory note. In that case there was no difficulty or obstacle in the way of legally proving the note itself. The executants were held liable under the note and the only question that was considered by the learned Judges was whether the partners of the executants could be held liable for the debt as a partnership debt. That is very different from the present case. No question of s. 91 was involved there and the learned Judges themselves referred to the cases under the Stamp Act, and distinguished them on that ground. For these reasons, the application for amendment must be disallowed with costs. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Revision No. 1062 of 1934

SHANDER OR SHANKER AND OTHERS —APPLICANTS
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144—Knowledge of order—Question of evidence—Prosecution, nature of proof required by—They can only prove circumstances enabling Court to infer if accused knew of the order or not.

The question of whether a person has knowledge of an order promulgated under s. 144 is a matter of evidence. Where it appears that the order had been promulgated for several weeks, that there had been disturbances in the city, and that notices containing the order had been posted up at various places in the city and none of the accused persons pleaded ignorance of the order when making statements in the Magistrate's Court, it is scarcely conceivable that they had no knowledge of the order passed.

In such cases the prosecution cannot be expected to prove everything that takes place in the minds of the accused They can only prove the circumstances which will enable the Court to infer either that the accused knew of the order or that the accused did not know of it.

Cr. R. against from an order of the Sessions Judge of Agra, dated October 22, 1934.

Mr. B. S. Darbari, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The present applicants have been convicted by a First Class Magistrate of Agra of an offence under s. 188 of the Indian Penal Code, and that order has been maintained by the lower Appellate Court. The facts briefly are that the applicants were caught throwing bricks at the houses of their neighbours. There were eleven of them, and at this period the relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans of Agra city were very strained, and consequently a notice had been promulgated under s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code, preventing the members of the public when frequenting or visit-ng certain places within the Municipal area from collecting bricks, carrying sticks, etc., or missiles and gathering in public places, etc. A number of arguments have been addressed to me in support of the present application for revision, but they are of a purely argumentative description.

It has been said that as the notice under s. 144 was addressed to the "public when frequenting or visiting" these specified areas, it was not sufficiently precise. I have been referred to one or two decisions in which it has been held that a Municipal area or a city are not sufficiently precise. But the areas specified in the present notice are obviously much more precise, and although this is a point that might be argued in appeal. I am by no means satisfied that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong. It has next been argued that as the applicants are themselves residents of one of the areas specified in the notice, they cannot be said to be frequenting that area. To live in an area is of course to frequent it, though a resident would ordinarily be said to reside in and not to frequent his part of the city. It has also been argued that although a number of brickbats were collected, it has not been definitely proved that the applicants collected them there, and that although the evidence showed that they were throwing brickbats, there was nothing in the notice to prevent them from throwing these brickbats, although they were forbidden to collect them or to carry them. This is only a quibble. Before throwing the missiles the applicants must have lifted them, and I presume that lifting comes under the definition of carrying.

The only ground that has been given me which calls for serious consideration is that the applicants had no knowledge of the promulgation of the order under s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code. It has undoubtedly been held by the Calcutta and the Lahore High Courts that it is not sufficient for the the prosecution to prove that an order has been promulgated to succeed in obtaining a conviction under s. 188. Under that section

"whoever knowing that by an order promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, he is directed to abstain from a certain act, etc., disobeys such direction, shall be punished."

The question of whether the person has knowledge of the order promulgated must be a matter of evidence, and in the present case we know that the order had been promulgated for several weeks, that there had been disturbances in the city, and that notices containing the order had been posted up at various places in the city. It is scarcely conceivable that the applicants had no knowledge of the order passed. Not one of them pleaded ignorance of the order when he made his statement in the Magistrate's Court, though this plea was taken by some of them in the written statements subsequently filed. It was not, however, made one of the grounds of appeal to the Sessions Judge, nor was it apparently argued before him. The prosecution cannot be expected to prove everything that takes place in the minds of the accused. They can only prove the circumstances which will enable the Court to infer either that the accused knew of the order or that the accused did not know of it. In the present case it appears to me that the circumstances justified the inference that the applicants had this knowledge, and that the plea of ignorance is not made in good faith, or it would have been made at once.

There appears to me to be no substance in any of the arguments for the applicants. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Civil Revision Petition No. 645 of 1933
March 8, 1934
JAI LAL, J.

PYARE LAL - DECREE-HOLDER —PETITIONER
KALE KHAN AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—OPPOSITE PARTIES

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, O. XXIII, r. 1—Suit for possession—Proceedings in Criminal Court pending — Plaintiff given possession of some land—Appeal granting possession of the rest - Criminal Court's order upset—Application for amendment of decree of Civil Court —Maintainability —Declaratory suit—Evidence closed—No formal defect—Application to withdraw with liberty to bring fresh suit—Whether should be granted

P brought a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, for possession of land against K and others K brought a suit against P for a declaration of his title to the same land and both the suits were tried simultaneously. Criminal proceedings between the parties were also pending about the same time and possession of a part of the land in suit was restored to P by the Criminal Court Counsel for the plaintiff, made a statement in Court that his client had received possession of a part of the land in dispute.

Counsel for K and others stated that an appeal had been preferred against the award of possession to P. The suit proceeded and finally the Judge granted a decree to P for possession of the land in suit excluding that portion in respect of which a statement had been made by his Counsel that possession had been given to him by the Criminal Court. Subsequent to the judgment and the decree that followed it, an application was made on behalf of P, purporting to be under ss. 151 and 152, Civil Procedure Code, alleging that at the date of the judgment and the decree the order of the Criminal Court awarding possession of a part of the disputed land to P had been set aside by the Appellate Court and P had been dispossessed of that land. A prayer was therefore made that the judgment and decree be amended under the sections mentioned above so as to include that land also in the decree. In the suit brought by K against P it was alleged on behalf of K that a third person, not party to the suit, had taken possession of the disputed property and, therefore a decree, if passed in K's favour, would become infructuous. An application was, therefore, made to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. This application was granted by the Court:

Held, that this was not a case in which action under s. 152, Civil Procedure Code, could be taken because on the material on the record the judgment and decree were correct. But if the facts alleged by the petitioner were true, the trial Court should have, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, proceeded under s. 151 to make the necessary amendments in its judgment and decree because during the pendency of the suit there had been a change in the circumstances of the case which had restored the parties to the position in which they were on the date of the institution of the suit.

Held, also, that as regards the case by K against P the circumstances did not satisfy the requirements of O. XXIII, r. 1 according to which permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit can be awarded only if the suit is likely to fail on account of some formal defect. There was no formal defect in this case. The evidence of the parties had been closed and the only question involved was whether K or P had title to the property and that question could be decided irrespective of the consideration whether a third person had or had not taken illegal possession of the property; presumably according to both the parties the third party's possession was illegal and hence the suit should not be allowed to be withdrawn.

C. R. P. from an order of the Second Class Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated June 21, 1933.

Mr. Devi Dass, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Kidar Nath Chopra, for the Opposite Parties.

Order.—Pyare Lal brought a suit under s. 9, Specific Relief Act, for possession of land against Kale Khan and others. Kale Khan brought a suit against Pyare Lal for a declaration of his title to the same land and both the suits were tried simultaneously. It appears that criminal proceedings between the parties were also pending about the same time and possession of a part of the land in suit was restored to Pyare Lal by the Criminal Court. Counsel for the plaintiff Pyare Lal consequently made a statement in Court that his client had received possession of a part of the land in dispute. Counsel for Kale Khan and others stated that an appeal had been preferred against the award of possession to Pyare Lal. The suit proceeded and finally the Judge granted a decree to Pyare Lal for possession of the land in suit excluding that portion in respect of which a statement had been made by his Counsel that possession had been given to him by the Criminal Court.

Subsequent to the judgment and the decree that followed it, an application was made on behalf of Pyare Lal purporting to be under ss. 151 and 152, Civil Procedure, Code alleging that at the date of the judgment and the decree the order of the Criminal Court awarding possession of a part of the disputed land to Pyare Lal had been set aside by the Appellate Court and Pyare Lal had been dispossessed of that land. A prayer was, therefore, made that the judgment and decree be amended under the sections mentioned above so as to include that land also in the decree. This application has been dismissed by the trial Judge who has held that on the record as it existed on the date of the judgment, there is no mistake either in the judgment or the decree, that is to say, no accidental omission or error.

It is obvious from what has been stated above that the petitioner was negligent in not informing the Court of the change of possession in pursuance of the order of the Appellate Criminal Court. But I am of opinion that this is not a case in which action under s. 152, Civil Procedure Code could be taken because on the material on the record the judgment and decree are correct. But I consider that if the facts alleged by the petitioner were true, the trial Court should have, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, proceeded under s. 151 to make the necessary amendments in its judgment and decree because during the pendency of the suit there had been a change in the circumstances of the case which had restored the parties to the position in which they were on the date of the institution of the suit.

I accept this petition and remand the case to the trial Judge with direction to re-hear the application of the petitioner under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code. In the other suit brought by Kale Khan against Pyare Lal it was alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that a third person not party to the suit had taken possession of the disputed property and therefore, a decree if passed in plaintiff's favour would become infructuous. An application was, therefore, made to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. This application was granted by the Court and the defendant has presented this application for revision.

In my opinion the circumstances do not satisfy the requirements of O. XXIII, r. 1, according to which permission to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit can be awarded only if the suit is likely to fail on account of some formal defect. There was no formal defect in this case. The evidence of the parties had been closed and the only question involved was whether the plaintiff or the defendant had title to the property and that question could be decided irrespective of the consideration whether a third person had or had not taken illegal possession of the property; presumably according to both the parties the third party's possession was illegal.

I accept this petition and set aside the order of the trial Judge granting permission to withdraw the suit and direct him to proceed with the suit on its merits in accordance with law. The costs of both these applications shall abide the result.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Privy Council Appeal No. 38 of 1934

February 11, 1935

SULAIMAN, C. J. AND BENNET, J.

MR. KAPLIDEVA MALVIYA AND OTHERS —APPELLANTS

versus

THE HON'BLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE HON'BLE JUDGES OF THE HIGH COURT AT ALLAHABAD —OPPOSITE PARTIES

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110, 112—Proceedings for contempt for publication of article in newspaper by Advocate — Whether in the exercise of inherent jurisdiction of Court and of a criminal nature—Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council—Whether can be granted.

Where the High Court took cognizance of contempt committed by the publication of an article in a newspaper by an Advocate and ordered notice to be issued to the writer, editor and printer and publisher to show cause why they should not be convicted and punished for contempt, the proceedings are in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court and of a criminal nature. A mere misdescription in the notice issued by the office will not make the proceeding one of a civil nature. Nor can it be said that merely because the Advocate was an officer of this Court, the proceeding against him was of an administrative character. The conviction and the fine imposed are themselves sufficient to show at least that the proceeding was not of a civil nature. The matter is of an exclusive jurisdiction and the order is final. In the matter of Edward Hutchinson Pollard (2), relied on. In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (3), referred to.

Section 110, Civil Procedure Code has no application to such a case Nor is s. 109 applicable and s. 112, sub-s. (2) expressly makes the Code inapplicable to matters of criminal jurisdiction. Further as the question for consideration being not so much of jurisdiction as of an interpretation of the passage objected to, the case cannot be certified as being otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The Right Hon'ble Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, and Messrs. P. N. Sapru, M. N. Rama, G. S. Pathak, S. N. Verma and Ajudhiya Nath, for the Applicants.

Mr. Muhammad Ismail (Government Advocate), for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order* convicting the applicants, an Advocate and editor and a printer and publisher of the offence of contempt of Court and sentencing the Advocate to a fine of Rs. 100 and ordering each of the three persons to pay Rs. 100 as costs. The offence is found to have been committed on account of the publication of an article by him headed "A Scandalous Situation" in the Leader. The learned Counsel for the applicant contends that his application for leave falls under s. 109, Civil Procedure Code, and urges before us that the order of the High Court has been passed in the exercise of its civil jurisdiction, particularly as the original notice issued to him was headed "Civil Side Revisional Jurisdiction." The learned Government Advocate takes preliminary objection that no application for leave to appeal lies inasmuch as (1) contempt is a criminal matter and the punishment is in the exercise of the criminal jurisdiction of the High Court, and (2) that the inherent jurisdiction exercised by this Court as a Court of Record is exclusive and the order passed is final.

The first question for consideration is whether proceedings for contempt of the High Court are at all in the nature of a civil proceeding. A Division Bench of this Court took cognizance of contempt committed by the publication of the

*SEE 154 Ind. Cas. 955—[Ed.]

Advocate's article. The Bench ordered notices to be issued to the Advocate as well as the editor and the printer and the publisher of the paper "to show cause why they should not be convicted and punished for the offence of contempt of this Court." In the order itself as signed by the Judges, there was no suggestion that the notice was being issued in the exercise of any civil jurisdiction. On the other hand, as the opposite party were called upon to show cause why they should not be convicted and punished for the offence of contempt, the order was prima facie, in the exercise of the criminal jurisdiction or the inherent jurisdiction of this Court. The office numbered the case as "Miscellaneous Case No. 435 of 1934", In the matter of an Advocate of Allahabad (1), and on the day's list also the case was shown simply as "Miscellaneous Case No. 435 of 1934", without mentioning that it was a Miscellaneous Civil case. But the notice that was issued by the Office to the Advocate was written out on a printed form which had the words "Civil Side Jurisdiction" printed on it. The notice was issued under the signature of the Deputy Registrar, and the printed words were not struck out, but the word "Revisional" was added. The contents of the notice, however, warned the Advocate to appear personally to show cause why he should not be convicted and punished for the offence of contempt of the High Court committed by the publication. The Advocate could not possibly have been misled by the issue of the notice on a printed form used for notices on the Civil Side. No particular form of the notice is prescribed by the rules of this Court. The Advocate had been called upon to appear in order that he may have an opportunity to show cause. We are, therefore, unable to hold that a mere misdescription in the notice issued by the office could, in any sense, make the proceeding one of a civil nature. The Advocate could not have been under any misapprehension as to the true character of the proceeding. We are of opinion that the form used for the notice is wholly immaterial for the purposes of deciding what the nature of the jurisdiction exercised was and that the misdescription was of too trivial a nature and cannot possibly confer civil jurisdiction on the High Court.

We have not the least doubt in our minds that the proceedings were in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of this Court and of a criminal nature. We would not say that merely because the Advocate was an Officer of this Court, the proceeding against him was of an administrative character. The conviction and the fine imposed are themselves sufficient to show, at least that the proceeding was not of a civil nature. In the matter of Edward Hutchinson Pollard (2), their Lordships clearly laid down that the contempt of Court was "a criminal offence".

In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (3), the last two paragraphs of the report of their Lordships at page 149* indicated that the sentences passed amounted in effect to general committal for contempt and was of a punitive character.

This view has, of course, been followed in India. Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal Ghose (4). It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court that the proceedings to punish contempt of Court is in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction vested in a Court of Record, and the procedure is summary. See Hadi Husain v. Nasir-ud-Din Haidar (5). In the Contempt of Courts Act of 1926, express power has been conferred to punish contempt of Subordinate Courts, but no necessity has been felt to confer any jurisdiction for punishing contempt of the High Court, which has always been assumed to exist.

It is, therefore, clear that s. 190, Civil Procedure Code, has no application to such a case. As defined in s. 2, Civil Procedure Code, "decree" is the formal expression of an adjudication which conclusively determines the rights of the parties and "order" is a decision of a Civil Court. Not only, therefore, s. 109 is in terms inapplicable, but s. 112, subs. (2) expressly makes the Code inapplicable to matters of criminal jurisdiction.

We also agree with the learned Government Advocate that the matter was of an exclusive jurisdiction, and the order is final.

In the case of Magnus Smith v. The Justices of Sierre Leone (6), their Lordships expressed the opinion that "they can make no order respecting the fine imposed by the Court below upon Mr. Smith". But their Lordships rescinded the order for striking him off the rolls.

In the case of Williams Rainy v. The Justices of Sierra Leone (7), their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down as the opinion not only of the members of the Committee, who heard the petition but also of the other members who usually attended, that they could not interfere with such a subject and remarked:

"In this country every Court of Record is the sole and exclusive Judge of what amounts to a contempt of Court. It is within the competency of the Court to impose fines for contempt; and unless there exists a difference in the constitution of the Recorder's Court at Sierra Leone, the same power must be conceded to be inherent in that Court .....we are of opinion that it is a Court of Record, and that law must be considered the same there as in this country; and, therefore, that the orders made by the Court in the exercise of its discretion imposing these fines for contempts, are conclusive, and cannot be questioned by another Court, and we do not consider that there is any remedy by petition to the Judicial Committee to review the propriety of such orders. All we can say is, that we have no jurisdiction to entertain such a petition impugning the propriety of such orders and praying the remission of the fines."

These cases were quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sourendra Nath Banerjee v. The Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court at Fort William in Bengal (8).

Nor have we any power to certify this case as being otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The question for consideration was not so much of jurisdiction as of an interpretation of the passage objected to. The Bench in construing its implications took into consideration the various circumstances attending its publication. The article had been written by an Advocate of standing and repute practising in the High Court; special importance and significance would be attached to it by the public reading the article; the Leader had a wide circulation in this country, and the article would have been widely read; the affidavit filed by the Advocate was considered by the Bench not to be so candid as that of the others; there was no apology or expression of regret, and it was not suggested in the Advocate's explanation that the reference was not to the present members of the High Court Bench. They took into account the fact that the article was written in connection with the elections to the Bar Council under this very High Court, and came to the conclusion that the assertion that the raising to the Bench of a comparatively "undeserving" lawyer "is a fairly frequent occurrence in our judicial history" amounted to an unwarranted defamation of the High Court likely to lower its prestige in the eyes of the public and to shake their confidence in its capacity to administer justice, and did not agree that the repetition of the alleged claim of the members of the Bar to select Judges "with better results" was innocent. The Bench remarked:

"We have given careful consideration to all that learned Counsel has urged in defence of his clients and with some knowledge of the conditions which exist and of the effect that such an article is likely to produce in the minds of the public, we are clearly of opinion that the passage in respect of which notice to the opposite parties has been issued, constitutes a contempt of Court, of which the High Court in the interests of the administration is bound to take cognisance."

They held that

"We are clearly of opinion that the words in the passage convey unwarranted and defamatory aspersion on the character and ability of a number of Judges of the High Court who have recently been elevated to the Bench .... We are of opinion that it tends to lower the High Court in the eyes of the public."

In our opinion, on the question whether the allegation amounted to a contempt of Court or not the Division Bench had exclusive jurisdiction and its order is final. We must, therefore, decline to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The application is dismissed with costs. We assess the cost of the Crown Counsel at Rs. 100.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 1703 of 1931
September 4, 1934
MADHAVAN NAIR, J.
SIGAPPI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
KATHAYEE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS

Practice—Defendant submitting to the ruling of Court as to burden of proof and producing his evidence—Subsequent refusal—Plaintiff's evidence over—Application for further evidence by defendant refused—Held, he ought to be allowed to adduce evidence subject to paying plaintiff's costs—Burden of proof.

When a suit was taken up the Vakils on both sides were absent. The Munsif then put the plaintiff into the witness-box and elicited an answer to a question. By that time the plaintiff's Vakil turned up and said that the burden of proof was not on the plaintiff and that the defendant should begin. The Munsif then put the defendant's agent into the box as a witness on the defendant's side and began to examine him himself. After some examination the case was adjourned. The defendant's Vakil turned up later and continued the examination of the witness. Later on, the defendant put in an application that the burden of proving issues lay on the plaintiff and that he (plaintiff) should be directed to begin. The defendant's petition was dismissed. The examination of the defendant's witness No 1 was continued and witness No. 2 on her side was also examined in part and some documents were filed. The suit was then adjourned. On the adjourned date defendant's witness No. 1 was re-called and examined, but the defendant's Vakil declined to proceed with the further chief examination of defendant's witness No. 2. The plaintiff's Vakil was then allowed to cross-examine him and his evidence was closed. The defendant's Vakil put in a memorandum that day declining to let in any further evidence as the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff. The evidence on the plaintiff's side was then taken and the case was proceeded with. When the plaintiff's evidence was closed, the defendant's Vakil wanted permission to adduce evidence on the defendant's side. This permission was refused by the Munsif and the case was finally closed and a decree was given in favour of the plaintiff :

Held, that the defendant's Pleader was not justified in refusing to adduce further evidence, after he had submitted to that ruling and proceeded with the examination of defendant's witnesses Nos. 1 and 2. In view of the circumstances it was necessary in the ends of justice that an opportunity should be given to the defendant to adduce evidence. But this concession could be given only on condition that he pays all the costs of the plaintiff except the institution fee up to date irrespective of the result of the suit.

S. C. A. against decree of the Sub-Judge, Devakottah, dated January 24, 1931.

Messrs. E Vinayaka Rao and Aravamuda Ayyangar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam and M. S. Krishnaswami Ayyangar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The defendant is the appellant. The second appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for a declaration of title to the suit properties, for a permanent injunction, and, if necessary, for recovery of possession of the same free from interference from the defendant. The plaintiff is the wife of the deceased son of the defendant. The defendant's son died in November 1926. According to the plaintiff's evidence, she collected the crops from the suit lands of the year of the death of her husband. The next year she cultivated the lands and the defendant, and her men destroyed the crops. Then the present suit was filed on July 28, 1928. On the merits, the defendant's contention was that the plaintiff cannot claim any right to the properties as her son was disqualified for various reasons from inheriting them. The plaintiff was given a decree by the first Court and this decree was confirmed in appeal. The defendant did not give her entire evidence before the trial Court In this second appeal the question is whether the defendant should now be allowed an opportunity to put before the Court all her evidence. The failure of the defendant to adduce her entire evidence arose as a result of a ruling given by the District Munsif as to the burden of proof with reference to two issues in the case. These issues are Issues Nos. 4 and 7. Issue No. 4 is :

"whether the plaintiff was in possession at the date of suit, and if not, whether the suit for declaration and injunction is maintainable.

Issue No. 7 is an additional issue. It is "whether the plaintiff or her predecessors in title had possession within 12 years before suit."

When the suit was taken up the Vakils on both sides were absent. The Munsif then put the plaintiff into the witness-box and elicited an answer to a question. By that time the plaintiff's Vakil turned up and said that the burden of proof was not on the plaintiff and that the defendant should begin. The Munsif then put the defendant's agent into the box as a witness on the defendant's side and began to examine him himself. After some examination the case was adjourned. The defendant's Vakil turned up later and continued the examination of the witness. Later on, the defendant put in an application that the burden of proving Issues Nos. 4 and 7 lay on the plaintiff and that he (plaintiff) should be directed to begin. On this application the District Munsif passed the order :

"On hearing both parties I already called upon the defendant to begin, since on the main issue the burden is upon her, etc."

The defendant's petition was dismissed. The examination of the defendant's witness No. 1 was continued and witness No. 2 on her side was also examined in part and some documents were filed. The suit was then adjourned. On the adjourned date defendant's witness No. 1 was re-called and examined, but the defendant's Vakil declined to proceed with the further chief examination of defendant's witness No. 2. The plaintiff's Vakil was then allowed to cross-examine him and his evidence was closed. The defendant's Vakil put in a memorandum that day declining to let in any further evidence as the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff. The evidence on the plaintiff's side was then taken and the case was proceeded with. When the plaintiff's evidence was closed the defendant's Vakil wanted permission to adduce evidence on the defendant's side. This permission was refused by the Munsif and thus the case was finally closed and a decree was given in favour of the plaintiff.

In the lower Appellate Court it was argued, as was done before me, that the burden of proof with regard to Issues Nos. 4 and 7 rightly lay on the plaintiff, that the learned Munsif was wrong in calling upon the defendant to begin, and as the procedure was thus irregular, the defendant should be given a further chance to adduce all her evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge was distinctly of opinion that the burden lay on the plaintiff. But in his view the learned District Munsif's ruling that the defendant should begin first was right because on the "presumptions" arising in the case the plaintiff had discharged the initial burden; and therefore when the case was begun, the defendant had to prove her case by showing how the plaintiff's husband was disentitled to inherit the properties. There can be no doubt that the initial burden with respect to these issues (Issues Nos. 4 and 7) to prove that the plaintiff was in possession lay on the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that this burden was discharged because of the presumption that the defendant's possession of the properties was on behalf of her son, the husband of the plaintiff who was a minor, that after the death of the plaintiff's husband, the plaintiff and defendant lived together for some time, that the properties must have been enjoyed by them both, and that, if there is a presumption in favour of the plaintiff that her husband was in possession till his death in November 1926, then it is not necessary for her to lead any evidence assuming that she was out of possession on the date of the suit as her husband's possession was well within the statutory period. (See the end of para. 8 of the judgment.) The suit being thus in time, the main point for decision would be whether the defendant has shown that the plaintiff's husband was disqualified from inheriting the properties.

In this view the burden of proof will lie on the defendant and the defendant will have to adduce evidence first. This seems to be one way of looking at the question, but it is clear this was not the basis for the ruling given by the learned District Munsif. From his order it is clear that the process of reasoning adopted by the learned Judge was not at all present to his mind. What he said was this, that he called upon the defendant to begin "since on the main issues the burden is upon her"; that is to say, the main issue being whether the plaintiff's husband was disqualified from inheritance for the reasons mentioned in the defendant's written statement. Of this, of course, the burden is upon the defendant. The order of the District Munsif reads as if he decided without expressing any opinion regarding the burden of proof with respect to Issues Nos. 4 and 7, that the defendant should begin as on the main issue the burden was upon her. Though the learned Judge was of opinion that the District Munsif's ruling was right, he yet considered the question whether the failure of the defendant to adduce evidence should not be condoned as that failure must have been due to a bona fide mistake on the part of her Vakil who must have thought, though wrongly, that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff and that the plaintiff should first begin to adduce her evidence; and decline to condone the failure as the defendant had been given full opportunities to adduce evidence and had deliberately refused to adduce the same. The question is whether in these circumstances a fresh opportunity should be given to the defendant to adduce her evidence. I have given the matter my anxious consideration. As the grounds for the order of the District Munsif are not clear, and as undoubtedly the learned Subordinate Judge has declared his order correct on a ground which I do not think was present to the mind of the learned District Munsif, one can well hold that the position did not appear to be absolutely clear to the mind of the defendant's Advocate; and this probably is the explanation for his conduct in refusing to adduce evidence, though if this was the main reason one fails to see why he continued to adduce evidence for some time after the ruling and declined to give further evidence only afterwards. Even though it is assumed that the District Munsif did not give any definite ruling, or even if the ruling given is assumed to be wrong, still the defendant's Pleader was not justified in refusing to adduce further evidence, after he had submitted to that ruling and proceeded with the examination of defendant's witnesses Nos. 1 and 2. In view of the circumstances detailed above, I think it is necessary in the ends of justice that an opportunity should be given to the defendant to adduce her evidence. But having regard to her conduct this concession can be given to her only on condition that she pays all the costs of the plaintiff except the institution fee up to date irrespective of the result of the suit and should in no way endeavour to obtain possession of the properties from the plaintiff during the pendency of the suit. Mr. Vinayaka Rao has candidly stated that he is willing to be put upon terms. I would therefore set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the case for disposal to the lower Court according to law after allowing the defendant to adduce further evidence. The plaintiff will be allowed to adduce whatever evidence she thinks necessary to meet the further evidence adduced by the defendant. The costs incurred in the lower Court will be provided for in his decree by the learned Judge.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Appeal No. 100 of 1933

June 1, 1934

D. A. DAVID—RESPONDENT

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 109 (d)—Assignment of book-debt by company as security for securing existing debt, whether amounts to mortgage of that debt—Registration, if essential—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882 as amended by Act XX of 1929), ss. 130, 134.

An assignment of a book-debt as security for the purpose of securing an existing debt, constitutes a mortgage of that debt and unless it is registered as required by the provisions of s. 109 (d) of the Companies Act, the assignment will be inoperative as against the liquidator and the creditors of the Company. Saunderson & Co. v. Clark (3), relied on.

S. C. A. from Original Suit No. 20 of 1932.

Messrs. S. M. Bose and A. N. Bose, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sudhish Ray, for the Respondent.

Costello, J.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are fairly simple. The point of law which has to be determined upon a consideration of those facts is however one of some difficulty. A suit was brought by the liquidator of the Co-operative Hindusthan Bank, Limited, to recover from certain persons, who are the Wardens of the Armenian Church, a sum of money for work and labour done on behalf of the Wardens of the Church by a firm named Carr, Morrison & Co., Ltd. That firm has gone into liquidation and the liquidator of it, Mr. G. C. Read, is a party to this suit. The Wardens of the Armenian Church, so far as these proceedings are concerned, have in effect called upon the other two parties to interplead. They have paid into Court a sum of Rs. 2,971-12-9 which was the amount ultimately agreed as being owing in respect of the work done by Carr, Morrison & Co. The conflict of claims between the liquidator of the Bank and the liquidator of Carr, Morrison & Co., arises from the fact that Carr, Morrison & Co. borrowed from the Bank the sum of Rs. 3,000 and executed in favour of the Bank a promissory note, dated July 8, 1930. In addition, the Company assigned two bills, or rather 'invoices,' which were made out by Carr, Morrison & Co. as builders and contractors, addressed to the Wardens of the Armenian Church of Calcutta. One of those bills was for a sum of Rs. 5,737-10-0 and the other bill was for Rs. 6,935-3-0. The bills were numbered respectively 166 and 167 and they were both dated July 5, 1930. On the same date, a letter was addressed by Carr, Morrison & Co., to the Wardens of the Armenian Church in these terms:

Re: No. 2, Middleton Row.

"We beg to hand you herewith our final bills in respect of the above work (repairs, sanitary and plumbing), for favour of payment, at your early convenience.

The enclosed bills aggregate Rs. 12,720-13-0, against which you have, from time to time, advanced the sum of Rs. 7,000 only, leaving a balance of Rs. 5,720-13-0 still due.

These final bills cancel the running bills previously issued, viz., Nos. 122, 123, 125 and 126.

These bills are assigned and endorsed for valuable consideration to the Co-operative Hindusthan Bank, Ltd., Calcutta, and we will thank you to make payment to them direct to our a/c, at 12-2, Clive Row, Calcutta . . .

Upon the back of the bills there was the following endorsement:

Please pay to Co-operative Hindusthan Bank, Ltd.,
Carr, Morrison & Co., Ltd.
(Sd.) P. M. Morrison,
Managing Director.
Carr, Morrison, & Co., Ltd.
(Sd.) C. Carmichael,
Managing Director."

The position therefore was that by the endorsement on the back of the bills, coupled with the notification contained in the letter of the same date, Carr, Morrison & Co., assigned to the Bank the benefit of the debt then owing to them by the Wardens of the Armenian Church. The bills and the letter of July 5, were sent through the Bank and, on July 8, were forwarded by the Bank to the Wardens of the Armenian Church, under cover of a letter, which is in these terms:

"Please receive the following bills which have been endorsed to this Bank for valuable consideration and the cheque for which when passed should be drawn in favour of this Bank and sent to us for credit of the account of Carr, Morrison & Co, Ltd., with this Bank."

At the foot of the letter, there is a tabular statement in the following form:

No.	Drawer.	Currency.	Amount.
			Rs. as. p.
26493.	Yourselves...	D	5,720 13 0

Enclosures—

(1) One letter dated July 5, 1930, of Carr, Morrison & Co., Ltd.

(2) Bills Nos. 166 and 167, dated July 5, 1930, for Rs. 5,737-10-0 and Rs. 6,965-3-0.

Certain correspondence passed between the Bank and the Wardens of the Armenian Church, in which it appears that the Wardens of the Church disputed the amount said to be due from them to Carr, Morrison & Co., but ultimately, after two of the Wardens had gone into the matter, they admitted liability to the extent of Rs. 2,971-12-9, which, as I have already said, is the amount claimed in the suit, out of which this appeal arises.

The defendants, Carr, Morrison & Co. (in liquidation), by their Liquidator, G. C. Read, contended in the suit that the plaintiff, as the Liquidator of the Co-operative Hindusthan Bank, was not entitled to recover the amount from the Wardens of the Armenian Church and that the sum owing by the Wardens of the Armenian Church should be treated as a debt due to Carr, Morrison & Co., (in liquidation), and the liquidator of Carr, Morrison & Co., took the point that the assignment of the debt due from the Wardens to the Bank was of such a nature that we ought to treat it as if it were a mortgage and being a mortgage, it ought to have been registered under the provisions of s. 109 (d), Companies Act. That section provides that certain mortgages and charges are to be void, if not registered. The words of the section, so far as material for our present purposes, are these:

"Every mortgage or charge created..... by a Company and being either a mortgage or charge on any book-debts of the Company, shall so far as any security on the Company's property or undertaking is thereby conferred, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the Company, unless the prescribed particulars of the mortgage or charge, together with the instrument (if any) by which the mortgage or charge is created or evidenced, or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner, are filed with the Registrar for registration.....within twenty-one days after the date of its creation, by without prejudice to any contract or obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and when a mortgage or charge becomes void under this section, the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable."

Then there are certain provisos which are not relevant to our present inquiry. The liquidator of Carr, Morrison & Co., contended that the assignment constituted by the letter of July 5, 1930, and the endorsement on the bills dated July 5, 1930, was of such a nature that it ought to be considered as a mortgage and therefore subject to the provisions of s. 109 which I have just read. The learned Judge at the trial, by his judgment dated May 31, 1933, stated the point which he had to determine in this form:

"He (i. e., the Liquidator of Carr, Morrison & Co.) puts in issue the validity of the alleged assignment of the plaintiff Bank. He says that the assignment was not absolute but was by way of charge and that, inasmuch as it was not registered, it is inoperative against the defendant Company by reason of s 109 (1) (d), Companies Act....."

The matter falls to be decided upon a consideration of the provisions of s. 130, Transfer of Property Act, which by sub-s. (1) provides that:

"The transfer of an actionable claim, whether with or without consideration, shall be effected only by the execution of an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his duly authorized agent ....,shall be complete and effectual upon the execution of such instrument, and thereupon all the rights and remedies of the transferor, whether by way of damages or otherwise, shall vest in the transferee, whether such notice of the transfer ... ... be given or not."

It seems clear that in this case there was a transfer by Carr, Morrison & Co., to the Bank of an actionable claim and that such transfer was by an instrument in writing 'signed' by the transferors. It follows therefore that the transfer was complete and effectual upon the execution of the instrument in writing, that is to say, the letter of July 5, taken in conjunction with the endorsements on the two bills Nos. 166 and 167. It also follows that on the execution of these documents all the rights and remedies of the transferors, that is to say, Carr, Morrison & Co., vested in the transferees, the Co operative Hindusthan Bank, Ltd. Actually in the present case, notice of the transfer was given to the debtors by the letter of July 8, 1930, which I have already quoted. Sub-s. (2), s. 130 provides that:

"The transferee of an actionable claim may, upon the execution of the instrument of transfer ....., sue or institute proceedings for the same in his own name without obtaining the transferor's consent to such suit or proceedings and without making him a party thereto."

It is manifest from the judgment of the present Chief Justice in Sadasook Ramprotap v. Hoare Miller & Co. (1) that s. 130, Transfer of Property Act, contains a special scheme which has some of the features both of the English Common Law and of the principles of equity and it is analogous to the provisions which are contained in s. 25 (b), Judicature Act, 1873, which are now enacted in s. 126, Law of Property Act, 1925. It is unsafe, however, to endeavour to decide the point of the kind now before us by any extensive reference to the English authorities. For the purpose of the present case, it is important at the outset to recall that the Judicial Committee have decided that the assignment of an actionable claim, such as debt, although absolute in form may nevertheless in its effect operate by way of security only. The authority for that proposition is to be found in the judgment or Lord Moulton in Mulraj Khatau v. Vishwanath Prabhuram (2), where his Lordship said:

"The appellant bases his claim on an assignment in writing. . . . . dated August 13, 1909. It is in form an absolute assignment and was according to the evidence given under pressure from the appellant to whom Dwarkadas Dharamsey was then indebted in a much larger sum. The validity of the assignment is therefore established. It may well be that although absolute in form it was intended to be only by way of security so as to be subject to a right of redemption, but this does not affect the rights of the parties under the circumstances of the present case."

The assignment effected by the letter and the endorsement of July 5, 1930, was apparently intended to operate as an absolute assignment so as to pass to the Bank the whole of the rights and interest of Carr, Morrison & Co. It may be that, upon a scrutiny of the exact language used in the letter of July 5, 1930, it was the intention of Carr, Morrison & Co. that the whole of the amount properly recoverable by them from the Wardens of the Armenian Church should be paid to the Bank and credited to the account of Carr, Morrison & Co., with the result that if the amount paid by the Wardens of the Armenian Church was in excess of the amount owing by Carr, Morrison & Co., to the Bank on their overdraft, the balance would remain to the credit of the account of Carr, Morrison & Co. But it is not possible for us to consider or even to speculate as to what the result would have been upon the adoption of that view of the transaction, because the learned Judge found as a fact that the debts were assigned not as an out-and-out transaction but merely as security for the overdraft. The relevant passage in the judgment is in these words:

"I should hold that the words were sufficient to effect a transfer of the debt to the Bank, even if any of the parties were at liberty in view of their pleadings to dispute that proposition—a matter of some doubt. The question then is whether evidence is admissible to show a collateral agreement between the parties that the assignment of the debt was not absolute but was by way of security for the loan by the Bank. The evidence on which the liquidator relies and which the Bank seeks to exclude is contained in a letter of March 2, 1931, written by the Bank's Solicitor and stating that the bills were assigned by Carr, Morrison & Co. to the Bank for security. It has also been pointed out that when the Wardens questioned the amount of the bills, the Bank declined to discuss the question without reference to Carr, Morrison & Co. Ltd., thereby admitting that Carr, Morrison & Co, Ltd. had still an interest in the debt. I am prepared on the letter to say that the issue of fact raised by Carr, Morrison & Co, Ltd., should be decided in their favour. I am of opinion that there was an agreement between Carr, Morrison & Co., Ltd., and the Bank that the debts were assigned not as an out-and-out transfer but as security for an overdraft. I have now to decide whether evidence is admissible in proof of an oral agreement to this effect having regard to the language of s 92, Evidence Act."

We have not to concern ourselves in this appeal as to whether the learned Judge was right in resorting to the letter of March 2, 1931, and the course of dealings between the parties subsequent to the assignment, in order to arrive at a decision as to what in substance was the nature of the transfer effected by the endorsement of July 5, 1930, because no objection has been taken on that score, and moreover, the learned Counsel who appeared for the liquidator of the Bank have conceded that the assignment was by way of security only, even though in form it may have been an out-and-out transfer of all the rights and interests of Carr Morrison & Co. in the book-debt in respect of the liability of the Wardens of the Armenian Church towards Carr, Morrison & Co. We, therefore, have to decide the matter on the footing that there was an assignment of a book debt by way of security to ensure re-payment by Carr, Morrison & Co. to the Bank of the overdraft. Put into figures, the position was that there was an assignment of the debt due on a bill for Rs. 5,720-13-0 in order to secure repayment of a debt to the amount of Rs. 3,500. In those circumstances, s. 134, Transfer of Property Act, comes into action if I may so put it. Section 134 says:

"Where a debt is transferred for the purpose of securing an existing or future debt, the debts transferred, if received by the transferor or recovered by the transferee, is applicable, first, in payment of the cost of such recovery; secondly, in or towards satisfaction of the amount for the time being secured by the transfer; and the residue, if any, belongs to the transferor or other person entitled to receive the same."

Briefly stated, the effect of that section is this: that if a debt is transferred by way of security, the transferee is entitled to discharge the debt due by the transferor to him. Then, if there is any residue, that is, after payment of the cost of recovery and the amount actually due by the transferor to the transferee, that belongs to the transferor. The position created by the precise language of s. 134 seems to be somewhat anomalous, because where there is a transfer under s. 130, all the rights and remedies of the transferor vest in the transferee. The expression "all rights" must of course include the right of ownership, and yet s. 134 says that the residue, if any, belongs to the transferor which is only another way of saying that if there is anything left over, after the debt between the transferor and the transferee is satisfied, the transferor is the owner of the balance whatever it may be. The anomaly consists in this, that there is a contradiction between the provisions of s. 130 and those of s. 134. One would have expected that instead of saying any "residue belongs to the transferor," the section would have said "the residue, if any, shall be re-transferred by the original transferee to the original transferor." However, it seems reasonably clear that what is intended is that where a debt is transferred for the purpose of securing an existing debt then the whole matter should be interpreted, as far as possible, upon the analogy of a mortgage of any other kind of property. That the transferor still has some residuary interest in the transfer is clear from the fact that under the terms of s. 134 it would be possible for him to receive the original debt, and as I have already pointed out, the residue actually belongs to him. It seems to me, therefore, that even if there had been in form an absolute assignment and subsequently the transferor pays off his debt to the transferee then the transferor would be in the position of being entitled to receive from his debtor the whole amount of the debt which had been transferred upon the basis that in those circumstances the residue would, in fact, be the whole debt. I have no doubt whatever, even without referring to the marginal note, that this s. 134 is intended to deal with a case of mortgage-debt.

The main difficulty which confronts us in the present instance is to determine whether an assignment for the purpose of securing an existing debt is a mortgage of such a character as falls within the ambit of s. 109 (d), Companies Act. To put the matter tersely, the difficulty which I first felt in the matter is the determination of the question whether or not an assignment of a book-debt is really a mortgage of that book-debt, but I think that difficulty is entirely solved by the judgment of Lush, J. in Saunderson & Co. v. Clark (3). In that case, a limited Company, in consideration of an advance from their bankers, executed an assignment which, after reciting that the Company were entitled to £80. 7*s*. from the defendant, that it had been agreed that that debt should be assigned to the bankers, and that by a letter of even date the defendant had been directed by the Company to pay the debt in question to the bankers, assigned unto the bankers so much of the defendant's debt "as may be necessary to indemnify, the assignees" for the amount advanced by them to the Company. After executing that deed, the Company wrote to the defendant requesting him to pay the debt due to them to the bankers. A few days later the Company went into voluntary liquidation. The assignment to the bankers was not registered. The liquidator claimed to recover the debt from the defendant on the ground that the assignment to the bankers, being unregistered, was void as against him, but the defendant insisted upon paying the debt to the bankers. It was held that the liquidator was entitled to recover, inasmuch as by s. 93, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, the unregistered assignment was void as against him, and because it was impossible for the parties to a transaction by way of mortgage or charge to alter the effect of s. 93, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, by adopting a form which does not accord with the real transaction between them. Section 93, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, was the section corresponding to s. 109, Companies Act. The corresponding provisions of the English Law are now contained in s. 79, English Companies Act (1929). The passage in the report of the judgment of Lush, J., which has most bearing on the present problem occurs at p. 580* and is in these words:

"Mr. Schiller on behalf of the defendant had contended that the deed operated as an absolute assignment of the book-debt, a sale in fact, in consideration of the advance. He (Lush, J.,) did not think that the deed was capable of that construction. The recital appeared to suggest it, but the operative part treats the book-debt as given only as an indemnity, which must mean as a security, and it provides for payment of interest by the Company on the advance, thus treating them as debtors. Moreover, it had been given along with a director's guarantee, and the banking account, which was in evidence, showed that the Company were debited as debtors with the amount of the advance. The bankers themselves called their interest in the book-debt a charge in a letter they wrote to the defendant, dated January 4, 1910."

In passing I may recall that the bankers in the present case in their letter of March 2, 1931, described the assignment as being a further security. Lush, J., continued thus:

"The legal effect of the deed of December 24, 1909, therefore was this. The Company, accepting the loan as a loan to themselves, transferred their interest in the book-debt to the bankers as a security, and were consequently entitled to a re-transfer on paying off the loan. In other words, they mortgaged the book-debt to secure an advance. On January 1, 1910, the Company went into voluntary liquidation, and the mortgage therefore became subject to the provisions of the Companies Act, 1908, s. 93."

The words of Lush, J., to my mind indicate that if there is an assignment of a book-debt as security (to use the words of s. 134) for the purpose of securing an existing debt, then that constitutes a mortgage of that debt. Therefore the provisions of s. 134 are applicable and the matter must be dealt with as directed by that section. The moment one comes to the conclusion that a mortgage has been effected by means of an assignment, even though the transfer might in form be an absolute assignment, it inevitably follows that the transaction should have been registered as required by s. 109, Companies Act; or to put the matter the other way round, it follows that unless it is registered as required by the provisions of that Act, the assignment will be inoperative as against the liquidator and the creditors of the Company. In that view of the matter, and having regard to the fact that Counsel for the appellant admitted that this was an assignment by way of security, it follows that the decision arrived at by the learned Judge was correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. As regards payment of costs in this appeal, we make the appellant liable personally.

Lort-Williams, J.—I agree. But I desire to say that, in my opinion, the letter of March 2, 1931, upon which Panckridge, J., has relied, was not admissible in evidence within the meaning of s. 92, proviso (2), Evidence Act, or otherwise. The three documents dated July 5, 1930, coupled with the covering letter dated July 8, 1930, in my opinion, are unambiguous, and amount to an absolute transfer of the debts to the Bank, and not one by way of security only. The agreement sought to be established by reference to the letter of March 2, is inconsistent with these documents and may not be proved. If and when the bank had collected the debt, they would have become the debtors of Carr, Morrison & Co., to the extent of the sum collected, subject of course to the state of Carr, Morrison & Co.'s account, and to whether they were in debt or credit at that time.

In view, however, of the fact that Counsel for the Bank has conceded, for the purpose of the decision in this case, that the documents amount to a transfer by way of security, such as is contemplated by s. 134, Transfer of Property Act, and that, in my opinion, such an assignment is a mortgage of book-debts within the meaning of s. 104, Companies Act, and is void against the liquidator unless registered, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

It is a well established rule of practice to require corroboration of the statement of an accomplice connecting the accused person with the crime; but corroboration is not required in all details. Even slight corroboration is sufficient for the purposes of this rule, if the Court is satisfied thereby about the genuineness of the accomplice's story, so far as it implicates the accused person. To insist on corroboration of the story in every detail, would practically mean requiring independent proof which will do away with the necessity of relying on the testimony of the accomplice at all The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. But evidence in corroboration must be independent.

[Case-law discussed.]

Cr. Rev. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated June 2, 1933.

Mr. Bhagat Ram Puri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. C. Ralli, for the Crown.

Order.—Criminal Revisions Nos. 906, 1383 and 1384 of 1933 arise out of cases in which the facts are connected and the points for decision are of a similar character and it will be convenient to dispose of them together.

One Prem Kumar was undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for five years under s. 20, Arms Act, in the Borstal Jail. He was transferred to the Mayo Hospital for treatment and on April 11, 1932, managed to escape from the hospital with the help of two persons named Ram Nath and Inder Nath (petitioner in Criminal Revision No. 1384 of 1933). He was taken to the printing press of Sotindar Nath (petitioner in Criminal Revision No. 1383 of 1933) and was kept there for three or four days. He then left Lahore and wandered from place to place for some time. He reached Amritsar about the middle of November and was kept concealed on the top floor of a house, with the help of Hari Ram (petitioner in Criminal Revision No. 906 of 1933), who also used to supply him food, etc., till the Police got a clue about Prem Kumar's whereabouts and arrested him on December 28, 1932. On the basis of these facts, Hari Ram and Sotindar Nath have been separately tried and convicted under s. 216, Penal Code. Hari Ram has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 18 months while Sotindar Nath has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and nine months and a fine of Rs. 100. Indar Nath has been found guilty under s. 224-109, Penal Code, in a separate trial and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years.

The principal witness in all these cases was Prem Kumar himself, and it is not disputed that his evidence does implicate the petitioners and support their convictions. It is, however, urged that the evidence of Prem Kumar is in the nature of the testimony of an accomplice and there is little or no evidence in corroboration of it to sustain the convictions of the petitioners.

In the case of Hari Ram, there is ample evidence in corroboration of the statement of Prem Kumar as regards Hari Ram supplying food, etc., and this was not challenged, but it was urged that there was no evidence in support of Prem Kumar's statement that Hari Ram was aware of the fact that he had escaped from lawful custody and that in the absence of corroboration as regards Hari Ram's knowledge of this fact, his conviction cannot be sustained. I do not think this argument is sound. It is true that it is a well established rule of practice to require corroboration of the statement of an accomplice connecting the accused person with the crime; but corroboration is not required in all details. As pointed out by a Division Bench in a recent case, Sher Singh v. Emperor (1), even slight corroboration is sufficient for the purposes of this rule, if the Court is satisfied thereby about the genuineness of the accomplice's story, so far as it implicates the accused person. To insist on corroboration of the story in every detail, would practically mean requiring independent proof which will do away with the necessity of relying on the testimony of the accomplice at all. In the present instance therefore, there being sufficient corroborative evidence in other respects, it was not necessary, even according to the established rule of practice referred to above, to require independent corroborative evidence of the statement of the approver as regards the knowledge of Hari Ram about Prem Kumar being an absconder. It may, however be pointed out that the circumstances in which Prem Kumar was secretly kept on the top floor of the house and supplied with food, etc., the discovery of the key of Hari Ram's office with Prem Kumar, etc., are facts which indicate that Hari Ram must have been aware of the fact that Prem Kumar was an absconder and go to support Prem Kumar's statement in this respect.

The above remarks also apply to the case of Sotindar Nath. Sotindar Nath has admitted that he allowed Prem Kumar to stay in a room of the printing press for two or three days but it is urged on his behalf that he did so innocently and was not aware of the fact that Prem Kumar had escaped from lawful custody. Prem Kumar of course states that he was informed of the fact, but it is urged that there is no corroboration of Prem Kumar's statement in this respect. But Prem Kumar's statement is corroborated in several other material particulars and it was not essential that it should have been corroborated in this particular. Prem Kumar is a resident of the United Provinces and his location in a room in the press after his sudden arrival for two or three days instead of his being lodged in the residential house as an ordinary guest goes to indicate guilty knowledge. It was urged that the employees in the press and customers used to see Prem Kumar, but the latter was a stranger in Lahore and there was little risk involved in his being kept there for 2 or 3 days only. It was further argued that Sotindar Nath used to be sent away, when Prem Kumar's friends came to talk with him. But this very fact was sufficient to arouse Sotindar Nath's suspicion. Prem Kumar and his friends may not have cared to take Sotindar Nath into confidence as regards all their plans, but this would not show that Sotindar Nath was acting innocently. There is no allegation of any enmity on the part of Prem Kumar and the corroboration of his statement in other particulars together with the manner in which he was kept in the press, are in my opinion sufficient to justify his conviction.

As regards Indar Nath (a boy aged about 16 or 17) the learned Sessions Judge has held that there was no corroboration of the accomplice's statement implicating Indar Nath, but he was of opinion that the conviction of an accused person on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver is not absolutely illegal and in the special circumstances of this case, the sole testimony of the accomplice could be safely taken as a basis for conviction. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has urged that the learned Sessions Judge has erred in law in taking this view as the established rule of practice as to necessity of corroboration of the statement of an accomplice is practically tantamount to a rule of law: Balmokand v. Emperor (2), Barkati v. Emperor (3), Hakam Singh v. Emperor (4) and Ranbir Singh v. Emperor (5). In any case the accomplice Prem Kumar whose testimony has been relied upon is not a man of such character or antecedents or of such undoubted veracity that his word could be safely relied on without any corroboration. It was further pointed out that Prem Kumar had in fact told lies on certain points.

I am somewhat doubtful whether it would be justifiable to interfere in revision when a Court being aware of the rule of practice referred to above, and being alive to the risk involved in convicting a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice proceeds to base a conviction on the same, giving its reasons for doing so. But leaving aside this aspect of the question, it seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge was not right in holding that the testimony of Prem Kumar in this case was not corroborated. The learned Magistrate who had tried the case had relied upon the testimony of Muhammad Hussain, P. W. No. 8, who deposed that Indar Nath, petitioner, was with Prem Kumar when the latter arrived at the press of Sotindar Nath to seek shelter after his escape from the hospital. The learned Sessions Judge has not disbelieved this evidence but has held it to be insufficient as a piece of corroborative evidence, as this evidence did not establish that Indar Nath had abetted the offence of escaping from lawful custody, which had been already completed by them. I do not think this view of the learned Sessions Judge as regards the nature of the corroborative evidence required in such cases is correct. An authoritative exposition of the law on this subject is to be found in Reg v. Baskerville (6) in which after a review of previous authorities the rule laid down was as follows:

"We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it... .....The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show, that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the offence is true, not merely that the crime has been committed, but it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. A good instance of this indirect evidence is to be found in Reg v. Birkett (7)."

The above rule has been followed in several recent cases by this Court; see inter alia, Barkati v. Emperor (3), Hakam Singh v. Emperor (4) and Sher Singh v. Emperor (1).

It would appear from the above that it is not necessary that corroboration should relate to the actual commission of the crime; for to require such evidence would be (as pointed out already) tantamount to requiring independent proof of the offence, and this would practically do away with the necessity of the testimony of the accomplice.

What is necessary is corroboration in some material particulars which will satisfy the Court of the truth of the accomplice's story in so far as it implicates the accused. In Reg v. Baskerville (6) the accused was charged with having committed acts of gross indecency with two boys. There was no direct corroborative evidence as to the actual commission of the offence, but a letter written by the prisoner to one of the boys and his previous conduct were considered to be sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the boys —who on their own statement were accomplices in the crime. In Reg v. Birkett (7), which was cited with approval in Reg v. Baskerville (6), the prisoner was charged with theft of sheep and the only evidence available in corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice was the discovery of a quantity of mutton in the house of the prisoner corresponding with the size of the sheep. In Barkati v. Emperor (3), the prisoner was charged with murder and the only corroborative evidence available related to the association of the prisoner with the accomplice immediately before the commission of the offence. There was a difference of opinion between Broadway, J., and Agha Haidar, J., and on a reference being made to a third Judge (Fforde, J.) it was held after a consideration of the authorities on the subject that the corroborative evidence referred to above was legally sufficient to justify the conviction of the prisoner. A similar view was taken in Sher Singh v. Emperor (1), wherein the corroborative evidence consisted of recovery of certain ornaments belonging to the deceased and this evidence was considered to be sufficient to support the conviction under ss. 396 and 302, Penal Code, on the basis of the testimony of the approver. It would thus appear that the corroborative evidence in none of these cases related to the actual participation of the accused in the crime with which he was charged; but still it was held to be sufficient to establish the truth of the accomplice's evidence implicating the accused persons. In the present instance the evidence of Muhammad Hussain as regards the petitioner accompanying Prem Kumar when he went to the house of Sotindar Nath soon after his escape stands on a similar footing. It corroborates Prem Kumar's story in a material particular and "connects or tends to connect him with the the crime." In view of the fact that even the uncorroborated testimony of Prem Kumar appeared to the learned Sessions Judge to be sufficient for a conviction, this additional piece of evidence in corroboration should have been held to be quite sufficient to statisfy the requirements of the rule of practice. It may be pointed out here that there is also some further corroboration of the accomplice's statement to be found in the written statement of the petitioner Indar Nath and his defence witnesses in so far as they admit that it was Indar Nath who supplied Prem Kumar with the address of Sotindar Nath.

In my judgment the corroborative evidence on the record was sufficient to support the conviction of Indar Nath and in the circumstances there is no valid ground for interference with it in revision. As regards the sentences, Hari Ram seems to have taken a very prominent part in harbouring Prem Kumar at Amritsar, and I do not think there are any extenuating circumstances to justify reduction of his sentence. Sotindar Nath seems to have played a much less prominent part. It appears that Prem Kumar was not taken to his house with his consent by any previous arrangement and he kept him in the press only for a few days. The maximum sentence of imprisonment on him was, in my opinion uncalled for. I reduce his sentence to rigorous imprisonment for nine months. The fine and the imprisonment in default will stand. Indar Nath is a youth aged 17 only. He is not in any way connected with Prem Kumar and appears to have been used as a tool by the principal culprit Ram Nath and possibly by others who kept themselves in the back-ground. In view of the fact that Prem Kumar himself was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years only for the main offence of escaping from lawful custody, the sentence passed on him seems to be clearly excessive. Considering all the circumstances it seems to me that the period of imprisonment already undergone by him will be sufficient to meet the ends of justice and I accept the petition only to the extent of reducing the sentence to this period.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 2 of 1934

ABDUL JALIL—APPELLANT
versus
ASRAF ALI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Bengal Patni Taluqs Regulation (VIII of 1819), s 8—Proceeding for realization of arrears of rent, whether against defaulters personally—Notice published and sale held—Defaulter dead at the time of sale—Sale, validity of.

The proceedings taken under the Patni Regulation for realization of arrears of patni rent are not taken against the defaulter personally at all but are taken against the tenures. Consequently, where the necessary notice as required by the Regulation has been duly published, the sale is not invalid merely because at the time when the sale was held the defaulter was dead. There is no procedure in the Patni Regulation which enables the Collector to bring on the record the heirs of the defaulting patnidar, if he has died in the meantime, nor is there any provision in the statute which makes it incumbent on the zemindar to seek out such heirs and to apply to the Collector that the sale should be held after bringing the heirs of the deceased patnidar on the record Raj Narain Mitter v Ananta Lal Mandal (1), doubted.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Patterson, J., dated January 26, 1934.

Mr. Narendra Kumar Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal under s. 15, Letters Patent, against the decision of my learned brother, Patterson, J., who reversed the decision of the Courts below and has dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. The plaintiff instituted the suit in which this appeal arises for a declaration of his alleged taluki title to an undivided 2/3rds share of the lands described in the schedule to the plaint and for recovery of posssession of the same jointly with defendant No. 8. There was a further prayer in the plaint that the sale of the land held under the Patni Regulation on November 18, 1918, was void and did not affect the interest of the plaintiff in any way. Amongst the several defendants to the suit defendant No. 7 alone contested the suit. It is to be noticed that although the sale under the Regulation took place on November 18, 1918, the present suit was not instituted till neary ten years after, on February 7, 1928. The facts on which this suit is based, lie within a narrow compass. It appears that by reason of the arrears in payment of rent, the patni taluk in question was sold at a mid-year sale on November 18, 1918. Notices according to the terms of the Regulation were duly served on October 29, 1918. The patnidar died on November 10, 1918, and the sale which is now impugned took place on November 18, 1918. The ground of the suit is that as the heirs of the deceased patnidar were not brought on the record and as the Collector, held the sale in pursuance of the Regulation, the proceedings before the Collector which culminated in the sale, are void and without jurisdiction. It is contended that on general principles, any proceeding taken against a dead person is of no effect against those that succeed to his estate. This ground did prevail with the Courts below which decreed the suit. On appeal to this Court, Patterson, J., came to the conclusion that the Regulation nowhere provides that it is incumbent on the zamindar to ascertain who are the actual holders of any particular patni taluk or to enter the names of the actual holders in his books, and that all that it does in this respect is to require the zamindar, on the fulfilment of certain conditions, to register and otherwise give effect to alienations of patni taluks on an application being made to him to that end. After considering the relevant provisions of the Regulation, the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that as all conditions precedent to the sale are fulfilled prior to the death of the defaulter and the zamindar is under no obligation to trace out and substitute the heirs of the defaulter, the sale was a good one and must be allowed to stand. He has accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The present appeal, as has been already stated, is against this decision.

We are of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by Patterson, J., is right. The provisions of the Patni Regulation which relate to the service of notices with regard to sales held under the Regulation are contained in s. 8 of the Regulation. Section 8 says that on the first day of Kartic in the middle of the year, the zamindar shall be at liberty to present a petition to a Civil Court of the district and a similar one to the Collector, containing a specification of any balances that may be due to him on account of the expired year from all or any talukdars or other holders of an interest of the nature described in cl. 1, s. 8. The said petition containing this specification shall then be stuck up in some conspicuous part of the cutchery with a notice that if the amount claimed be not paid before the first Agrahayan, the tenures of the defaulters will, on that day, be sold by public sale in liquidation. In the case of a mid-year sale it is further stated that either the entire amount due shall be paid or so much of it as shall reduce the arrear including any intermediate demand for the month of Kartic, to less than one-fourth of the total demand of the zamindar, according to the kistiband, calculated from the commencement of the year to the last day of Kartic. Then it is stated that a notice shall be sent by the zamindar to be similarly published at the cutchery or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter. The zamindar shall be exclusively answerable for the observance of the forms above prescribed and the notice required to be sent into the mofussil shall be served by a single peon who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter or of his manager, for the same or in the event of inability to procure this, the signatures of three substantial persons residing in the neighbourhood, in attestation of the notices having been brought and published on the spot. Now it appears clear from these provisions with regard to the publication of notices that the proceedings taken under the Patni Regulation for realization of arrears of patni rent are not taken against the defaulter personally at all but are taken against the tenures.

In these circumstances there would be no doubts in this case that the necessary notice as required by the Regulation having been duly published, it seems difficult to hold that the sale is invalid merely because at the time when the sale was held the defaulter was dead. There is no procedure in the Patni Regulation which enables the Collector to bring on the record the heirs of the defaulting patnidar, if he has died in the meantime, nor is there any provision in the statute which makes it incumbent on the zamindar to seek out such heirs and to apply to the Collector that the sale should be held after bringing the heirs of the deceased patnidar on the record. In the absence of any such provision and having regard to the scheme and policy underlying the very stringent provisions of the patni sale law which is really enacted for the purpose of making it possible for the zamindars to pay the Government revenue in time, we do not think that it can be held that the sale held under the circumstances as in the present case was a void or invalid sale. We are, therefere, of opinion that Patterson, J., came to the right conclusion. Our attention has been drawn by the learned Advocate for the respondent to the case of Raj Narain Mitter v. Ananta Lal Mandal (1), where one of the learned Judges, Tottenham, J., held that even if the patnidar had died before all the proceedings under the Regulation were taken, the sale would not by reason of that circumstance be invalid. The learned Judge observed at p. 717* of the report thus:

"Issues Nos. 5 and 6 relate to the fact that two of the recorded patnidars were dead before these proceedings under the Regulation were taken. We think that the fact is immaterial, and that the Court below was wrong in holding that the proceedings were illegal by reason of their having been directed against dead persons; for proceedings under the Patni Regulation taken for the realization of the patni rent are not taken against persons at all, but against the tenure. And the zamindar is quite right in setting out in his petition and notices the name of the patni and the names of the patnidars as recorded in his books. The findings therefore of the lower Court upon these issues cannot avail the plaintiffs."

This was the opinion of Tottenham, J. who was one of the Judges who were dealing with the matter. C. M. Ghosh, J., did not express any such opinion. It is not necessary for the purposes of this appeal to express any opinion as to how far this decision is correct, in view of the provisions contained in s. 8 of the Regulation. Section 8 in para. 2 states:

"The zamindar shall be exclusively answerable for the observance of the forms above prescribed, and the notice required to be sent into the mufussil shall be served by a single peon who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter, or of his manager, for the same."

This evidently implies, or at any rate refers to, the case of a defaulter who is alive and not the case of a defaulter who is dead. Be that as it may, without expressing our final opinion, but as at present inclined, we say that we have some doubts as to the soundness of the decision of Tot-

Addison, J.—The business Salig Ram-Ram Lal was assessed for the year 1930-31 as a Hindu undivided family. The family consists of Ram Lal and his only son Amar Nath. In connection with the assessment for that year Ram Lal the head of the family put in a deed dated March 17, 1930, to the effect that the business was being run as a firm constituted by himself and his son Amar Nath, the shares of the partners being equal. The capital as well as the profits of the firm from April 10, 1926, to March 31, 1930, were to be distributed among the partners and it was claimed that the agreement would consequently take effect for previous years as well. An application was submitted for registration of the firm under s. 2 (14) and 26-A, Income Tax Act. There was also a definite claim on the ground that partition had taken place. Previous assessments had been made on the family as a Hindu undivided family. The Income-tax Officer inquired into the matter and came to the conclusion that the instrument of partnership was a bogus one and had only been executed for the purpose of deriving an improper advantage from the provisions of the Income Tax Act. He gave weightly reasons for coming to this decision and refused to register the partnership. As a result the family was assessed as an undivided Hindu family. There was an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax who came to the conclusion on the evidence not only that there had been no separation in status of the members of the family but also that the joint family property had not been partitioned among the two members constituting it. He, therefore, held that the Income-tax Officer had correctly refused to register the firm. The assesee then approached the Commissioner of Income-tax under ss. 33 and 66 (2), Income Tax Act. He declined to interfere under s. 33 and refused to make a reference to this Court on the ground that the question was one of fact. The assessee has now put in an application under s. 66 (3), Income Tax Act asking this Court to require the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case and to refer it for decision.

In the petition it is stated that the following points of law arise out of the order of the Assistant Commissioner:

(1) Whether s. 25-A, Income Tax Act, contemplates actual partition of the joint property by metes and bounds? (2) Whether under the circumstances of the present case petitioner firm should be assessed as a registered firm constituted under the instrument of partnership dated March 17, 1930, or a Hindu undivided family firm? (3) Was the Income-tax Officer legally justified in refusing the registration of the firm under the provisions of s. 2 (14) and s. 26-A of the Act? (4) Whether the Assistant Commissioner's finding that the arrangement of partnership was bogus and was executed to escape proper tax is based on proper evidence or materials."

Section 25-A of the Act, runs as follows:—

"Where at the time of making an assessment under s. 23, it is claimed by or on behalf of any member of a Hindu family hitherto assessed as undivided that a partition had taken place among the members of such family, the Income-tax Officer shall make such inquiry thereinto as he may think fit, and if he is satisfied that a separation of the members of the family has taken place and that the joint family property has been partitioned among the various members or groups of members in definite portions he shall record an order to that effect."

The opinion of the Commissioner was that the Income-tax Officer could only pass an order under s. 25-A if he was satisfied first, that separation of the family had taken place and, secondly, that the joint family property had been partitioned among the various members or groups of members in definite portions. It was only after that, that the question of registering the parties as a firm arose. Thus the only question in his opinion was whether the assessee was still a member of a Hindu undivided family or of a firm constituted under a deed of partnership. This the Commissioner held to be a question of fact.

The principal contention before us was that s. 25-A did not contemplate an actual partition by metes and bounds of the joint family property. It seems to us that it is impossible so to hold. If actual partition had not been contemplated, the clause "and that the joint family property has been partitioned among the various members or groups of members in definite portions" would not have been added to the section; for the clause immediately preceding it would be sufficient if the law was that actual partition of the property was not necessary. The preceding clause is "if he is satisfied that a separation of the members of the family has taken place." In Hindu law separation of the members of the family can take place without actual partition, and when this takes place, the members of the family change their status from coparceners to tenants-in-common of the joint property which ceases to be joint Hindu faimly property. There was, therefore, no necessity for the addition of the second clause if it was not intended that actual partition by metes and bounds was necessary as well. The words are clear and it is impossible to hold that the legislature added the second clause without intending that it should have a meaning. It was not disputed before us that if actual partition is necessary the Commissioner's decision is right. No question of law arises, therefore, as there was ample evidence on which the Income-tax Authorities could base their finding.

The only other contention raised before us was that registration should have been allowed under s. 26-A of the Act. At the time in question no appeal was given under s. 30 of the Act against a decision refusing to register a firm under s. 26-A. The decision, therefore, of the Income-tax Officer was final in this respect and this concludes the question. We might add, however, that it seems to us that s. 25-A is the only section applicable when a joint Hindu family claims to have ceased to be such and the members claim to be assessed as separate entities. The further question whether they should be registered as a firm only arises after that. As already remarked there was ample material on which the Income-tax Authorities could base their finding that the so-called deed of partnership was bogus. This disposes of all the points arising in the case and we dismiss the petition with costs.

Special Second Civil Appeal No. 136 of 1934

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 49—Mortgagors basing their claim for possession, on redemption of sub mortgage—Mortgages unregistered—Maintainability of suit.

In order that the ruling in Maung Sin v. Maung So Min (1) 129 Ind. Cas. 511 should be applicable, there must be privity of contract between the real owner and the person in possession, under which contract the person in possession has been allowed to obtain possession. When the plaintiffs-mortgagors do not suggest that the mortgagees are in possession of property by their leave and licence, but they base their claim on the fact that they have redeemed the mortgages in favour of the sub-mortgagees and assert that because they have redeemed these mortgages from the sub-mortgagee they are entitled to possession of the lands, their suit is a suit for possession of lands which have been redeemed and of which the person in possession has failed to deliver possession after the redemption, and, therefore, it depends entirely upon proof of the mortgages. If the mortgages are incapable of proof for want of registration, the suit of the plaintiffs must of necessity fail. Maung Sin v. Maung So Min (1), explained, Ma Thaing v. Maung Chit On (2), referred to.

S. S. C. A. against a decree of the District Court, Shwebo, dated February 28, 1934.

Mr. A. N. Basu for Mr. Ko Ko Gyi, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. K. Roy, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal clearly fails. It was alleged by the plaintiffs-appellants that the lands of which they claimed to be entitled to possession, in the suit before the Township Court of Kanbalu, were originally the property of their ancestors, that these lands and another piece of land had been mortgaged by usufructuary mortgage to the ancestors of the respondents, and that subsequently the ancestors of the respondents had sub-mortgaged by usufructuary mortgage the same lands to one Thet Pyin, who was a defendant in the original suit. They further alleged that they had redeemed these lands by paying the mortgage amount to Thet Pyin, but had only been able to obtain possession of one holding, of which Thet Pyin was in possession, although the redemption also referred to the two holdings now in suit, and in consequence of this redemption from Thet Pyin they claimed to be entitled to possession of these two holdings also. It is admitted that the respondents have, through their predecessors-in-title, been in possession of the lands in suit, for over thirty years. All the documents of mortgage on which the appellants relied are unregistered documents and are therefore invalid to prove any of the mortgages alleged. In his judgment in Appeal No. 22 of 1933, which was a preliminary appeal in connection with this same suit, the learned District Judge of Shwebo relying upon the decision in Maung Sin v. Maung So Min (1), held that these unregistered documents of mortgage, although invalid to prove the mortgages for want of registration, were nevertheless admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the nature of the possession of the respondents, but the judgment in Maung Sin v. Maung So Min (1), when correctly interpreted, is no authority for this conclusion of the learned District Judge. In Maung Sin v. Maung So Min (1), a suit for possession based on title was brought by the owner of the land against the person who was in possession thereof, and it was held that, although the mortgage under which the defendant was in possession was invalid for want of registration, yet in such a suit for possession based on title, the mortgage document was admissible in evidence for the very restricted collateral purpose of showing that the person in possesssion was in possession by licence of the real owner and not in his own right.

In order that this ruling should be applicable there must be privity of contract between the real owner and the person in possession, under which contract the person in possession has been allowed to obtain possession. In the present case nothing of that kind is alleged. The appellants do not suggest that the respondents are in possession of this property by their leave and licence, but they base their claim on the fact that they have redeemed the mortgages in favour of the defendant Thet Pyin, who is not a party to this appeal, and assert that because they have redeemed these mortgages from Thet Pyin they are entitled to possession of these lands. Consequently, their suit is a suit for possession of lands which have been redeemed and of which the person in possession has failed to deliver possession after the redemption, and therefore, it depends entirely upon proof of the mortgages. The mortgages being incapable of proof for want of registration, the suit of the appellants must of necessity fail. See Ma Thaing v. Maung Chit On (2). But furthermore, even supposing that these mortgages had been capable of proof, the appellant's suit would nevertheless fail. They base their suit on a mortgage with possession to the ancestors of the respondents, and a sub-mortgage with possession by the ancestors of the respondents to Maung Thet Pyin. Maung Thet Pyin has denied that these particular lands now in suit were ever mortgaged to him, and there is no evidence whatever to show that they were ever so mortgaged; moreover, it is quite plain that he never obtained possession of these lands. The appellants paid a certain amount of money to Thet Pyin and in consequence they obtained possession of the land which was in Thet Pyin's possession. Thet Pyin obviously could not give them possession of lands of which he was not in possession, and from the fact that he never obtained possession of the lands in suit the presumption arises that they were not included in the sub-mortgage in his favour. From whatever angle this case is viewed, it is plain that the claim of the appellants must fail.

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs, Advocate's fee in this Court three gold mohurs.

Appeal from the Allahabad High Court

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 4, 14, 3, Sch. I, Art. 181—Application for execution of final mortgage decree—Time during which preliminary decree was executed—Whether can be deducted in computing limitation—Ss. 4 and 14, distinction between—Computation under s. 14—How to be made—Period of long vacation—When can be deducted—Discretion of Court to relieve decree-holders in cases of hardship—Whether exists—Duty of Court to notice the Act and give effect to it even if not referred to in pleadings.

It cannot be said, apart from any other objection, that an application to obtain execution under a preliminary mortgage decree is an application for the same relief as the application to the Court for a final mortgage decree for sale in the suit. Consequently, it is not permissible, on the basis of s. 14, Limitation Act, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an application for execution, to exclude the period during which the decree holder was seeking execution under the preliminary decree. [p 207, col. 2.]

There is a marked distinction in form between ss. 4 and 14. The language employed in s. 4 indicates that it has nothing to do with computing the prescribed period. Where there is ground for excluding certain periods under s 14, in order to ascertain what is the date of the expiration of the prescribed period, the days excluded from operating by way of limitation have to be added to what is primarily the prescribed period. [p 207, col. 2.]

The provision in s. 4 means the proper Court in which the application ought to have been made and when it is impossible to say that the application was made to the proper Court on the day on which that Court re-opened, s. 4 will not apply. [p. 208, col. 1.]

There is no authority to support the proposition that there is some sort of judicial discretion which would enable the Court to relieve the decree-holders from the operation of the Limitation Act in a case of hardship, particularly when it is alleged that the decree-holder was in regard to the proceedings which he took by way of execution in some way misled by some mistake in the form of the preliminary decree. It is impossible to hold that, in a matter which is governed by Act, an Act which in some limited respects gives the Court a statutory discretion, there can be implied in the Court, outside the limits of the Act, a general discretion to dispense with its provisions. Section 3 of the Act is peremptory and the duty of the Court is to notice the Act and give effect to it, even though it is not referred to in the pleadings. Basvanappa v. Krishnadas-Govardhandas Madiwale (1), overruled [p. 208, col. 2]

Mr. A. Majid, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Respondents.

Lord Tomlin.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad dated May 6, 1929, by which a decree dated April 29, 1924, made by the Subordinate Judge at Basti was affirmed. The decree of the Subordinate Judge had dismissed the application of the decree-holder in a mortgage-suit to have the preliminary decree in the suit made absolute. The present appeal is brought by representatives of the decree-holder since deceased, complaining of the decrees to which reference has been made.

The facts of the case are shortly these. A preliminary mortgage-decree was obtained on May 7, 1917, which was amended in some respects not material to be particularised on May 22, 1917.

There were a number of mortgagors interested in different villages comprised in the mortgage, and some of them appealed to the High Court against the preliminary decree. There were in fact two such appeals. One appeal succeeded, with the result that certain villages were excluded from the decree, and the suit of the mortgagee was dismissed as against those appellants. So far as they were concerned, that was the end of the matter.

There was a second appeal, by which certain of the mortgagors sought to exclude other villages from the decree, and that appeal failed.

The decrees of the High Court disposing of those appeals were made on June 7, 1920.

After the decrees of the High Court dealing with the appeals in the way that has been indicated, the decree-holder proceeded to seek execution under the preliminary decree and between December 23, 1920, and November 8, 1921, he was occupied with those proceedings. It was held that he was not entitled to proceed by way of execution under the preliminary decree, and that all he could do was to take the proper steps to obtain a final decree in the suit.

The Additional Subordinate Judge, before whose Court the mortgage-suit was instituted and by whom the preliminary decree had been made, was, after the making of the preliminary decree, abolished and his jurisdiction was transferred to the Subordinate Judge at Basti.

At a later stage another Additional Judge was appointed, with specified jurisdiction, and on June 20, 1923, being the day after the end of the long vacation, the decree-holder made an application for a final decree for sale in the Court of the new Additional Subordinate Judge. His petition was returned to him on August 6, 1923, with an intimation that he had presented it in the wrong Court, that the Additional Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, and that the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Basti was the proper Court in which to proceed.

Accordingly, on the day on which he got back his petition, he presented it in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Basti. When that application came on, it was objected to upon the ground that it was out of time and barred by Art. 181 of the Limitation Act, three years since June 7, 1920, having expired.

The decree-holder, however, sought to escape from that defence by alleging that he was entitled to the exclusion of three periods in computing the prescribed period. The first period was from December 23, 1920, to November 8, 1921, while he was seeking execution under the preliminary decree which he contended, ought to be excluded in computing the prescribed period under the provisions of s. 14 of the Limitation Act. The second period was from May 20, 1923, to June 19, 1923, being the period of the long vacation, which he claimed should have been excluded under the provisions of s. 4 of the Limitation Act. The third period was from June 20, 1923, to August 6, 1923, being the period between the date of the application to the Additional Subordinate Judge and the presentation of the petition to the Subordinate Judge. That he urged should be excluded by virtue of s. 14 of the Limitation Act.

The Courts in India have determined the matter against the appellants, the decree-holder's representatives, holding, that the period during which execution proceedings were proceeding cannot be excluded from the calculation under s. 14, and that though the period from June 20, 1923, to August 6, 1923, ought to be allowed, no allowance should be made in respect of the period which represents the long vacation, namely from May 20, 1923, to June 19, 1923. The result was that the application on August 6, 1923, was held to be out of time and barred by Art. 181.

The appellants before their Lordships' Board by their Counsel have presented five propositions: firstly, that the period during which the execution proceedings were pending should be excluded; secondly, that the vacation period should be excluded; thirdly, that the period up to August 6, which has in fact been allowed to the decree-holder was properly allowed to him; fourthly, that the application was in fact made to the proper Court on June 20, 1923, and that the Additional Subordinate Judge was the proper Judge to deal with it; and, lastly, that the Court had a general judicial jurisdiction, outside the Limitation Act, to relieve a suitor from the provisions of the Act in a case where hardship is established.

It will be convenient to call attention to the provisions of the relevant sections of the Limitation Act. They are ss. 3, 4 and 14 (2). By s. 3 it is provided:

"Subject to the provisions contained in ss. 4 to 25 inclusive, every suit instituted, appeal preferred and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

Section 4 provides:

"Where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application, may be instituted, preferred or made on the day when the Court re-opens."

Section 14 (2) provides:

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the same party for the same relief, shall be excluded where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

If the appellants were entitled to succeed in regard to the first period, that is, from December 23, 1920, to November 8, 1921, having regard to the length of that period, that would be sufficient for them. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the Courts in India were clearly right in the way they dealt with the point. It is impossible to say, apart from any other objection, that the application to obtain execution under the preliminary decree was an application for the same relief as the application to the Court for a final mortgage decree for sale in the suit.

That being so, it is not permissible, on the basis of s. 14, in computing the period of limitation prescribed, to exclude that particular period.

The second period is the period of the long vacation. In regard to that matter the appellants seem to their Lordships to be in a position which is in the nature of a dilemma. It is to be noted that there is a marked distinction in form between s. 4 and s. 14. The language employed in s. 4 indicates that it has nothing to do with computing the prescribed period. What the section provides is that, where the period prescribed expires on a day when the Court is closed, notwithstanding that fact, the application may be made on the day that the Court re-opens; so that there is nothing in the section which alters the length of the prescribed period; whereas in s. 14, and other sections of a similar nature in the Act, the direction begins with the words: 'In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application", certain periods shall be excluded,

It, therefore, seems to their Lordships that, where there is ground for excluding certain periods under s. 14, in order to ascertain what is the date of the expiration of the prescribed period, the days excluded from operating by way of limitation have to be added to what is primarily the prescribed period; that is to say, if the prescribed period is three years, and twenty days ought to be excluded in order to determine when the prescribed period expires, twenty days have to be added to the three years, and the date of the expiration of the prescribed period is thus ascertained.

That being so, the appellants appear to be in this difficulty. They have been allowed, and (as their Lordships think), properly allowed, the period from June 20, 1923, to August 6, 1923. At p. 33 of the record, this passage in the judgment of the High Court appears:

"Even, therefore, if the three years and forty-eight days are counted from that date, the time expired some time about July 25, 1923. That did not fall within the long vacation. It, therefore, follows that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the benefit of s. 4."

That view of the way to calculate the prescribed period seems to their Lordships to be correct; but, even if it were not correct and it were necessary to turn to s. 4, the language of s. 4 is such that it seems to their Lordships to be impossible to apply it to a case like the present. What it provides is that, where the period of limitation prescribed expires on a day when the Court is closed, the application may be made on the day when the Court re-opens. In their Lordships' view that means the proper Court in which the application ought to have been made and, on that view of it, it is impossible to say that this application was made to the proper Court on the day on which that Court re-opened. Therefore, on either view of the case, the appellants necessarily fail in regard to that period.

That would be enough to dispose of the appeal but for the fact that two further points have been put before their Lordships: First that the application was in fact made to the proper Court on June 20, and that the Additional Subordinate Judge was the proper Judge. The point does not appear to have been raised in the Courts in India. It was assumed, as a fact, that the Additional Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction. There is no material before their Lordships upon which they could entertain the suggestion that they should interfere with that finding and, in their view, that is a point which cannot be made here.

Secondly, it was urged that there was some sort of judicial discretion which would enable the Court to relieve the appellants from the operation of the Limitation Act in a case of hardship and that this was a case of hardship, and in particular because it was alleged that the decree-holder was in regard to the proceedings which he took by way of execution in some way misled by some mistake in the form of the preliminary decree. It is enough to say that there is no authority to support the proposition contended for. In their Lordships' opinion it is impossible to hold that, in a matter which is governed by Act, an Act which in some limited respects gives the Court a statutory discretion, there can be implied in the Court, outside the limits of the Act, a general discretion to dispense with its provisions. It is to be noted that this view is supported by the fact that s. 3 of the Act is peremptory and that the duty of the Court is to notice the Act and give effect to it, even though it is not referred to in the pleadings.

Their Lordships only desire to add one other word, and it is this, that the decision which has been referred to in the case of Basvanappa v. Krishnadas Govandhandas Madiwale (1) cannot, in their view, be supported, having regard to the provisions of ss. 3, 4 and 11 of the Limitation Act.

As Counsel for the appellants referred to s. 5 of the Act and suggested that there was some discretion under that section which could be exercised by the Court in this case, it is right to say that in their Lordships' view that section has no application at all to the circumstances of this case.

In the result, therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The costs of the appeal must be paid by the appellants.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Father referring matter to arbitration—Decree in terms of award—Son filing suit for mere declaration that father had no authority and that proceedings subsequent to reference are null and void—Maintainability—Consequential relief must be asked—Court-fees payable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Plaint, amendment of—If can be allowed at the stage of hearing of appeal—Court-fees—Courts must look to substance of claim and not only form.

The father of the plaintiff had agreed to refer the matter in dispute to arbitration and a decree had been passed in the terms of the award. The son subsequently filed a suit for a mere declaration, that the father had no authority to agree to refer the matter to arbitration and that the proceedings from the date of reference to the date of the decree were null and void:

Held, that the suit was not maintainable. The plaintiff must have asked for consequential relief and such a relief can only be for setting aside the decree which has already been passed by a competent Court and should have paid ad valorem court-fee according to the provisions of s. 7 (iv), (c), Court Fees Act.

Held, also, that the High Court would not be justified in permitting the plaintiff to remodel his plaint and thus alter the frame of the suit at the stage of hearing of the appeal. Hakim Rai v Ishar Das Gorkh Das (1), relied on.

Courts of justice have not to look at the mere form of the suit but should try to find out what the real substance of the claim is. Although it is open to a party to save the amount of the court-fee by framing the plaint in a manner permitted by the law, still the litigants should not be permitted, to deprive the Revenue Authorities of what is due to them by adopting methods of pleading which cannot be supported by the language of the relevant Statute.

Messrs. Kishan Dayal and Bhagwat Dayal, for the Resondents.

Agha Haidar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration. The trial Court, without entering into the merits of the case dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that the suit in its present form was not maintainable. The plaintiff has come up to this Court in appeal. The facts of the case so far as they are necessary for the disposal of the appeal are as follows:

There is a firm at Delhi carrying on business under the name and style of Chhanga Mal-Mangi Lal. It consists of two members only, namely, Mangi Lal, defendant No. 1, and Sri Ram, his son the plaintiff. This firm through Mangi Lal instituted a suit on December 6, 1926, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Delhi, against Khawaju and Raju, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 20,380 3-0 on the basis of bahi account. During the course of the suit the parties referred the case to arbitration. Mangi Lal, on behalf of the plaintiff firm, joined in the reference and signed the agreement referring the subject-matter of the suit to arbitration. On March 15, 1928, the award was given and a decree for a sum of Rs. 14,000 in terms thereof was passed against defendant No. 2 only. On May 1, 1928, the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff Sri Ram, son of Mangi Lal. After stating that the plaintiff and Mangi Lal were partners in the firm "Chhanga Mal-Mangi Lal" and referring to the proceedings in the previous suit, the plaintiff alleged that defendant No. 1, Mangi Lal, was not authorised on behalf of the firm, "Chhanga Mal-Mangi Lal" to refer the case to arbitration and that he acted in collusion with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and, without any authority, knowledge, consent and information of the plaintiff. It was further alleged that the decree, which was passed under the terms of the award, had caused substantial loss to the firm and to the plaintiff, that the proceedings from the date of the execution of the agreement to reference were null and void as against the plaintiff and he was entitled to have the above mentioned proceedings from the stage at which the agreement to refer to arbitration was executed, declared null and void. He accordingly prayed that:

"It may be declared that the agreemnt to refer to arbitration, award and decree dated March 15, 1928, passed in terms of the award, that is, all the proceedings from November 24, 1927, the date of execution of the said agreement, in Suit No. 35, In re firm 'Chhanga Mal Mangi Lal' against Khawaju and Raju are absolutely null and void as against the firm Chhanga Mal and Mangi Lal and himself, and that the suit in question, from the stage at which the aforesaid agreement was executed, is triable by the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi."

A number of pleas were raised in the written statement filed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3; but for the purposes of the present appeal, it is only necessary to refer to the additional plea (f) contained in para. 6 of the written statement where it is pleaded that the suit was not maintainable in its present form. It may be noted that the valuation of the suit originally was

Rs. 130 and a court-fee of Rs. 10 had been paid on it. Subsequently this was altered and Rs. 6,300 was shown as the valuation. As a result of certain proceedings, with which we are not concerned in the present appeal, the case was transferred on January 16, 1929, by the learned District Judge, Delhi, to the Court of Sardar Sewa Singh, Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, who framed the following issue: "Is the suit for pure declaration in the present form maintainable?" No evidence was led and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge recorded the finding that the suit was not entertainable in the form in which it has been brought. He accordingly dismissed the claim.

Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant has argued that the decision of the learned Judge of the Court below was erroneous and that, as his claim was for a pure declaration, the Court ought to have entertained the suit in the form in which it was brought. No doubt there are cases which lay down that a suit for a pure declaration can be maintained and that it is not the business of the Court to find out what would be the result of the decree which may be granted in such a suit. It must, however, be remembered that Courts of justice have not to look at the mere form of the suit but should try to find out what the real substance of the claim is. Although it is open to a party to save the amount of the court-fee by framing the plaint in a manner permitted by the law, still the litigants should not be permitted to deprive the Revenue Authorities of what is due to them, by adopting methods of pleading which cannot be supported by the language of the relevant statute. In the present case a decree has already been obtained. The plaintiff sought the proceedings from the date of the agreement up to the date of the passing of the decree to be declared null and void as against the firm Chhanga Mal-Mangi Lal including himself. His learned Counsel, Mr. Rattan Lal, in his statement dated March 5, 1929, explicitly admitted that the plaintiff's suit was for a simple declaration, that he did not want any consequential relief and that all that his client wanted was that the decree should be declared null and void without its being cancelled or set aside. Now this is an impossible position to take up. If the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant were to prevail, there would be two decrees in the suit and they may be divergent in their effect. This would create an impasse which cannot be allowed. The plaintiff cannot possibly succeed unless he is prepared to ask for consequential relief and such a relief can only be for setting aside the decree which has already been passed by a competent Court. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiff ought to have prayed for the consequential relief and should have paid ad valorem court-fee according to the provisions of s. 7 (4) (c), Court Fees Act. Mr. Shamair Chand finally urged that he should be granted an opportunity to amend the plaint and pay the proper court-fee; but, having regard to the attitude of his client's Counsel in the Court below and also in view of the fact that even in the grounds of appeal filed in this Court, no such prayer is asked, I do not think this Court would be justified in permitting the plaintiff-appellant to remodel his plaint and thus alter the frame of the suit at this stage. If any authority were needed for this proposition, we have a case of this Court reported as Hakim Rai v. Ishar Das Gorkh Das (1). With the statement of law contained in this case I fully agree.

This being so, I would affirm the decree of the trial Court and dismiss with costs the appeal preferred by the plaintiff-appellant.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it had been brought and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision Petition No. 528 of 1934

THE CHAIRMAN, DISTRICT BOARD, GAYA—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 1 (2) (a) (b)—Suit not found to fail by reason of formal defect—Grounds for allowing plaintiff to file fresh suit not stated—Order allowing plaintiff to withdraw suit and file fresh suit—Whether Court has jurisdiction to pass—Cl. (b) of sub-r. (2), if to be read ejusdem generis to cl. (a).

Unless the Court brings the case within cl. (a) of sub-r. 2 of O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, or set out grounds why the plaintiff should be allowed to bring a fresh suit, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass an order allowing the plaintiff to withdraw a suit and to bring a fresh suit. Nathuni Ram v. Sheo Koer (1) and Uchant Ahir v. Basawan Ahir (2), relied on.

Clause (b) of sub-r. 2 of O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, although disjunctive, must be read ejusdem generis to cl. (a).

C. R. P. from an order of the Munsif, First Court of Gaya, dated August 1, 1934.

Mr. K. N. Moitra, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Rajkisore Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This Rule was directed against the order of the Munsif of Gaya allowing the plaintiff to withdraw a suit and to bring a fresh suit. The learned Judge purported to act under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure in making that order. The matter seems to me to be a very clear one, and I have no doubt whatever that the order of the Judge in the Court below was wrong. But the only question which arises is whether this Court has power to set aside the order in revision as relating to a matter of jurisdiction?

It is contended by the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the respondent to this application that the question which the learned Judge had to decide was one within his jurisdiction and therefore the application before this Court must fail. In this connection, however, I propose to and indeed I must follow the decision of this Court more particularly in Nathuni Ram v. Sheo Koer (1), and Uchant Ahir v Basawan Ahir (2). But in addition to following those authorities I propose shortly to state my reasons.

The case of Robert Watson & Co. v. The Collector of Rajshahye (3), is important only in the sense that it decided that the mofussil Courts in India had no jurisdiction to enter a non-suit as the Courts in England had at that time. Therefore the only jurisdiction that a Court in the mofussil can possibly have in these matters is contained in the Civil Procedure Code: Order XXIII r. 1, and any attempt to make an order such as this, which in effect is an order of a non-suit, unless it can be brought within the specific provisions laid down by the legislature, must be held to be without jurisdiction.

Now what the learned Judge in this case has done is to discuss the grounds upon which the plaintiff's suit must fail, or, in other words, the grounds upon which the plaintiff ought to be allowed to withdraw his suit. Had the matter rested there, the petitioner before this Court would be in a very considerable difficulty, because it might be argued that what the learned Judge was deciding was merely a question of law. But what actually happened was that the learned Judge discussing the grounds upon which the suit must fail, which were certainly not grounds under cl. (a) sub-r. 2 of r. 1, goes on to state that he found it a fit case in which leave to bring a fresh suit should be granted to the plaintiff. In other words, he proceeded first of all to decide on what grounds the suit would fail under cl. (a) and then made his order under cl. (b) for let it be noted that the two sub-clauses are disjunctive. Now it is obvious that there was no formal defect in the suit. It was a matter of evidence, and had the matter gone on and been heard and determined, it is quite possible the plaintiff's suit would fail not for some formal defect but fail by reason of the lack of evidence. That does not bring it under cl. (a). Now the learned Judge has come to no conclusion whatever which would appear to be the basis or can be the basis of his order that it was a fit case in which leave should be given to bring a fresh suit. Some of the authorities have purported to hold that cl. (b) must be read ejusdem generis with cl. (a), and there is a great deal to be said, if I may say so, for that point of view; because there can be no ground for bringing a fresh suit unless it be that the plaintiff has got evidence to support his cause of action, and that indeed cannot be a ground for holding that the plaintiff's action should be withdrawn and a fresh suit to be allowed. Therefore from that point of view it seems clear that cl. (b), although disjunctive as I have said, must be read ejusdem generis to cl. (a).

But I do not purport to decide the case on that ground. I decide it on the ground that the Judge has not brought the case within cl. (a) quite clearly, and has set out no grounds at all why the plaintiff should be allowed to bring a fresh suit. Unless he does one or the other of those, the learned Judge certainly had no jurisdiction to make the order.

That being so, the order of the Munsif

Custom (Punjab)—Decision in custom case, if a judgment in rem—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41 (3)—District Judge refusing certificate—Second appeal, if competent—High Court, whether can send case back ordering grant of certificate.

A decision in a custom case is not a judgment in rem. It is only relevant under s. 13, Evidence Act, as a judicial instance of the custom being recognized. It may be that, owing to faulty prosecution, one decision may be arrived at between certain parties while there may be another decision in a suit arising between other persons.

Where a District Judge considers an application before him and finds that a certificate should not be granted, a second appeal is not competent without a certificate and the High Court has no power to send back the case to him for re-consideration or with an order to grant the required certificate. Lehna Singh v. Jagat Ram (2), Jaita v. Har Chand (3), Mula v. Hoshiara (4) and Chinti v. Ishar (5), relied on.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated January 2, 1929.

Mr. A. N. Chona, for the Appellants.

Mr. Muhammad Monir, for the Respondents.

Addison, J.—The collaterals of one Fateh Din sued for possession of certain land on the ground that it was ancestral and Fateh Din was not competent to bequeath it to the defendant. The trial Judge dismissed the suit holding that the will was valid under custom. On appeal the District Judge held that Gujars of Jhelum had no power under custom to make wills. He accordingly decreed the claim. Against this decision the defendants have preferred this second appeal without the certificate required under the provisions of s. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act. They have also put in a petition on the revision side, praying that the refusal of the District Judge to grant this certificate should be set aside.

The Counsel for appellants relied upon Pahlwan Khan v. Bayga (1) as establishing that there was a custom among Muhammadan Gujars of Tahsil Jhelum whereby a sonless proprietor had a right to bequeath his ancestral land to an associated collateral to the exclusion of other collaterals of the same degree. This decision was not published till long after the District Judge had decided the appeal before him. Further, a decision in a custom case is not a judgment in rem. It is only relevant under s. 13, Evidence Act, as a judicial instance of the custom being recognized. It may be that, owing to faulty prosecution, one decision may be arrived at between certain parties while there may be another decision in a suit arising between other persons.

The principal question before us is, whether this Court has power to compel the District Judge to grant the certificate in question. It is necessary in this connection to set out s. 41 (1) and (3), Punjab Courts Act:

"41 (1) An appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to the High Court on any of the following grounds, namely: (a) the decision being contrary to law or to some custom or usage having the force of law: (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or custom or usage having the force of law; (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, or by any other law for the time being in force which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits. (3) Notwithstanding anything in sub-s. (1) of this section, no appeal shall lie to the High Court from a decree passed in appeal by any Court Subordinate to the High Court regarding the validity or the existence of any custom or usage unless the Judge of the lower Appellate Court has certified that the custom or usage is of sufficient importance, and that the evidence regarding it is so conflicting or uncertain that there is such substantial doubt regarding its validity or existence as to justify such appeal."

In Lehna Singh v. Jagat Ram (2), before Campbell, J., the question raised was the existence of a custom and it was held by him that the words

"'notwithstanding anything in sub-s. (1) of this section', with which sub s. (3), s. 41, Punjab Courts Act, commences, preclude a Court of second appeal in the absence of a certificate from going into the question of whether the first Appellate Court had erred in law or procedure."

This seems to be the correct view. Under s. 41 (1) a second appeal lies if the decision is contrary to law or to some custom or usage having the force of law, but the right of appeal given in sub-s. (1) is taken away by the opening words of sub-s. (3) which are to the effect that:

"notwithstanding anything in sub-s. (1) of this section no second appeal shall lie to the High Court regarding the validity of the existence of any custom or usage unless the Judge of the lower Appellate Court has certified that the custom or usage is of sufficient importance, and that the evidence regarding it is so conflicting or uncertain that there is such substantial doubt regarding its validity or existence as to justify an appeal."

The plain meaning of this section is that without the certificate in question no second appeal lies to the High Court.

It is not necessary to refer to all the decisions on this question, but I may allude to Jaita v. Har Chand (3), a decision of a Division Bench. An application for a certificate was made to the lower Appellate Court, but was dismissed on the ground that there was no material on the record on which any decision, as to the custom alleged, could be arrived at. It was held by the High Court that a question of custom was involved, and that even if the decision of the learned District Judge on the merits of the case be erroneous, a second appeal was not competent without a certificate. Similarly it was held by Shah Din, J. in Mula v. Hoshiara (4), that where a certificate to appeal on a question of custom is not granted, no second appeal lies to the High Court and it is immaterial on what ground the same is refused. Again Shah Din and Le Rossignol, JJ., held in Chinti v. Ishar (5), that although the District Judge's view regarding the reversion of the property to the plaintiffs was erroneous, no second appeal was competent without a certificate under s. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act. That was a case in which the District Judge had rejected the application for grant of a certificate on the ground that he entertained no doubt that Musammat Chinti was not an heir of the donee. It was also held by Johnstone, J., in Allah Din v. Salam Din (6), that the question of onus probandi could not be raised without a certificate under s. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act.

In the present case the District Judge recorded a clear order on the application for grant of a certificate that there was absolutely no conflict or uncertainty with respect to the point involved in this case. He, therefore, considered the application which was before him and found that the certificate should not be granted. In these circumstances I have not the slighest doubt that the second appeal is incompetent without a certificate, and that there is no power in this Court to send the case back to him for re-consideration or with an order to him to grant the required certificate. It follows that this appeal and revision petition must both be dismissed. Parties will bear their own costs in the revision petition, but the respondents' costs of the appeal will be borne by the appellants.

Abdul Rashid, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate — Joint life-tenants succeeding—Whether one can relinquish her right of survivorship — Succession, when will open out, if relinquishment takes place — Inheritance—Wife, if sapinda of husband—Death of step-daughter— Stridhana, *if devolves on step-mother—Widow carrying on litigation regarding estate of husband—Decree, if binding on reversioners—*Res judicata, principle of—Whether applies—Suit by widows to regain portion of their husband's estate—Suit lost due to technical defect—Decree for costs and mesne profits obtained by creditor—Widows, if personally liable for mesne profits—Accretions and accumulations—Intention of widow—Onus of proof—Execution—Certificate sale — Re-conveyance of what is sold—Effect.

Under Hindu Law, if more than one female joint life tenants succeed to an estate they may divide their life tenancy and hold portions of the estate separately if they like and this arrangement will continue till their life. In other words, they may convert the joint estate into estates held in severalty. One or more of them may relinquish her or their right of survivorship in that portion of the estate which is held by the other. In that case if one dies, the estate in her possession will not revert to the other who has relinquished but will go to her heirs as if it were her stridhan, and if she alienates any portion of the estate, the alienee will continue in possession of the estate till the death of the last survivor The joint tenant, who has surrendered her right of survivorship, cannot question the succession or alienation. The inevitable result, therefore, is that succession will not open till the last survivor is dead [p 218, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

A wife, according to Hindu Law, is a sapinda of her husband, and hence on the death of the daughter when her stridhan property reverts to the next-of-kin, it devolves on the father's wife (step-mother) who is a sapinda. Bai Kesserbai v. Hunsraj Morarji (6) relied on. [p. 218, col. 2.]

In carrying out litigation regarding the estate of her husband a widow represents the estate and the decree obtained against her is binding upon the reversioners, provided that the litigation is honest and is fairly conducted. The rule of res judicata as indicated in s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not strictly applicable to such cases, but the principle itself has been held to apply so as to bind reversioners by decision in litigation fairly and honestly conducted given for or against Hindu females who represent the estate in such litigation. The question in each case will be whether the estate was properly represented by her. She might have been labouring under a personal disability or an estoppel. But unless a decision itself was given on a ground personal to herself, it will not any the least be binding on the reversioners. [p 221, col. 2: p. 222, col 1.]

Where two widows along with their other cosharers brought the suit to regain a portion of their husband's estate which was lost on account of the revenue sale, and the widows had a ground to have the sale set aside but lost the suit on account of a technical defect and the decree obtained by a creditor for costs and mesne profits was a decree which could have been realised from the estate of the husband of the widows and the widows carried on the litigation from the income of the estate:

Held, that they should not be held personally liable for the mesne profits.

A Hindu widow has got an absolute right over the income of the estate and if she acquires any property from the saving of that income, it is optional with her either to keep the property separate from the estate or mix it up with it. In the absence of evidence of a contrary intention of the widow, the property does not form part of her husband's estate and the onus of proving that it was not treated by her as her separate property is upon him who alleges it to be so. Ishri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (14), Sriram Jankiji Birajman Mandis v. Jagdamba Prasad (15) and Nirmala Sundari Devi v. Deva Narayan Das Chowdhury (16), relied on. [p. 222, col. 1.]

Nothing is sold in execution of a certificate sale except the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor When what is sold is reconveyed to the judgment-debtors, they regain what is lost to them on account of the certificate sale. [p. 219, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated September 12, 1930.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Harnarain Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Manohar Lal, G. P. Singh and A. K. Mitter, for the Respondents.

Muhammad Noor, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to the properties of one Raghubans Narayan Singh who died in 1886, without any son, and was succeeded by his two widows, Deo Murat Kuer and Birita Kuer. Deo Murat Kuer had two daughters, Bhagwat Kuer and Asturan Kuer, both being issueless. Birita Kuer had no issue. Musammat Deo Murat Kuer is dead, but Birita Kuer is still alive. It is an admitted fact that the two widows came to some arrangement by which each took separate possession of a moiety of the estate of their husband with an understanding that each would have an absolute right unfettered by the other in the share which she got. In other words, instead of having a joint estate, they held it in severalty. According to the plaintiffs there was also an oral agreement between them that the one would not claim the right of survivorship in that portion of the estate which was held by the other. It seems that before her death Deo Murat Kuer, by a deed of gift, dated April 19, 1901, made a gift of some, if not of all the properties which she was in possession of, to her second daughter Asturan Kuer. This, as it appears, was done with the consent of the other daughter Musammat Bhagwat Kuer who was herself very rich through her husband. In this way Asturan Kuer came in possession of at least some of the properties of her father which were being separately held by her mother Deo Murat Kuer. Deo Murat died in 1916, and her co-widow does not seem to have claimed any of the properties in her possession on the ground of survivorship. If there was any property which was not covered by the deed of gift. It was taken by her daughter Asturan Kuer. Asturan Kuer died on December 16, 1928, and a few days before her death, namely, on December 12, 1928, she executed a deed of absolute sale in respect of certain properties in favour of the appellant Dulhin Parbati Kuer. According to the plaintiffs this deed was for the benefit of her husband defendant No. 1 Kumar Raghbe Surendra Sahi. This deed is the subject-matter of the present litigation. The plaintiffs, who are the two grandsons of Brij Bihari Singh, a brother of Brij Lal Singh, the father of Raghubans Narayan Singh, have instituted the present suit for recovery of possession of the properties covered by the deed of sale on the ground that they appertain to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh and that they (plaintiffs) succeeded to them on the death of Asturan Kuer as the next reversioners of Raghubans Narayan Singh. They have characterised the deed of sale as fabricated, illegal and void. The plaintiffs' case is that as by virtue of the mutual arrangement between the two widows of Raghubans Narayan Singh each gave up the right of survivorship in the share held by the other, on the death of one, her share was to be dealt with as if the other did not exist and, therefore, on the death of Deo Murat Kuer her daughter, Asturan Kuer, continued in possession of her properties as an heiress of her father, the other daughter Bhagwat Kuer raising no objection. They claim that in respect of that property succession opened on the death of Asturan Kuer and that the plaintiffs as the next heirs to Raghubans Narayan Singh have succeeded to those properties. They, therefore, seek possession of them by setting aside the deed of absolute sale executed by Asturan Kuer. They pray in the alternative that if for any reason the Court be of opinion that possession could not be decreed to them on account of Birita Kuer being alive, then it be declared that the deed of absolute sale, dated December 12, 19 8, executed by Asturan Kuer in favour of defendant No. 2, was illegal and void and was ineffectual against the reversionary heirs to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh and a declaratory decree to that effect be passed. The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit, holding that on the death of Asturan Kuer the plaintiffs were entitled to the immediate possession of that part of the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh which was being held by one of his widows Deo Murat Kuer. He has held the deed of sale to be genuine and executed for love and affection, that no cash consideration passed and that it was in fact a deed of gift. The claim for mesne profits prior to institution of the suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs did not claim any specific sum. The defendant No. 2 has preferred this appeal. There is a cross-objection on behalf of the plaintiff-respondents which is directed against the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the deed of absolute sale was a genuine document and against the dismissal of the claim for mesne profits for the period prior to institution of the suit.

Only two points have been urged before us in appeal. One is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to immediate possession of any portion of the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh, as one of the widows, Birita Kuer, is still living, and that the succession to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh has not opened. The only decree which the plaintiffs can get is a declaration that the deed of absolute sale would not be binding upon the reversioners of Raghubans Narayan Singh when the succession opens. The second point is that a portion of one of the villages in suit, namely, 3 annas 11 gandas 2 kowris 2 karants of Khosepur, tauzi No. 11374/6 was not a part of the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh and was the personal property of Asturan Kuer and the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief in respect of it.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that an arrangement between the two widows to hold the estate of their husband in severalty will not, on the death of one, allow the heir of the husband to get possession of the properties held by her as long as the other widow lives. The only effect even of surrender of the right of survivorship by the other will be that the alienations of one cannot on her death be questioned by the other and the alienee will hold the properties till the other dies or, if one dies without alienation, her share will go to her heirs as if it was her stridhan and the heirs will hold it till the other widow died. The heirs of the husband cannot claim the properties of one as long as the other widow is alive.

Mr. Mullick relied upon the case of Kailash Chandra Chuckerbutty v. Kashi Chandra Chuckerbutty (1). The facts of the case were that one Radhakrishna Chuckerbutty died, leaving a widow and three daughters Subhadra, Bishakha and Ganganeshwari. Subhadra was married to defendant No. 1. The widow and the three daughters remained joint with Radhakrishna's brother who refused to part with the share of his deceased brother in favour of the three daughters. Later on the widow died, Bishakha, the plaintiffs' mother, sued Kali Shankar for her share in her father's lands, making the two daughters defendants. The suit was compromised. Each of the sisters got a third share in the lands that Kali Shankar gave up. Subhadra, who was in possession of one-third, died without issue. Bishakha also died, and Ganganeshwari became a childless widow. The plaintiff, who was son of Bishakha, sued for possession of Subhadra's share in the lands as heir of his maternal grandfather. Radhakrishna defendant No. 1, who was husband of Subhadra, pleaded that according to the terms of the compromise by which the three daughters got the lands, he was entitled to remain in possession of his wife's share as it was her separate estate. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree, but on appeal the lower

(1) 24 C 339.

Appellate Courts reversed that decree, holding that Hindu joint tenants such as widows or daughters, were incompetent to convert, by mere acts of their own, joint estate into estates held in severalty, and that Ganganeshwari was consequently entitled to hold Subhadra's share. In second appeal the High Court (Banerjee and Rampini, JJ.) held that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that under the Hindu Law of the Bengal school (it is conceded that in this respect there is no difference between the Bengal school and the Mitakshara) when several daughters take a joint estate, they are incompetent to convert that joint estate into estates in severalty. But on the question of succession to the property left by Subhadra, their Lordships said as follows :—

"How far they (that is the sisters) were competent to do so (that is to convert a joint estate into estates in severalty) and how far this arrangement would entitle the plaintiffs to succeed in the present suit are questions which remain to be considered. Whilst taking this view of the compromise, we must, on the other hand, say that it does not, in terms, amount to a relinquishment by each daughter of her right of survivorship, so as to make shares allotted to the other daughters pass on to the reversionary heirs on their death. The petitions of compromise nowhere say that : but on the contrary, they distinctly provide that, upon the death of each daughter the properties taken by her, if not alienated by her in her lifetime, should go to her sons, grandson, etc., that is, to the heirs of her separate property which must mean stridhan, though the word stridhan is not used in the petitions. That being so, can it be said that though the compromise does not in terms entitle the plaintiffs to claim the estate left by Subhadra still the effect of the Hindu Law, which is to prevent the compromise from taking effect to its fullest extent, is to accelerate the succession of the plaintiffs who are the ultimate reversionary heirs at the present date in regard to the properties left by the deceased daughter ? We are of opinion, that this question must be answered in the negative.

Their Lordships held that the share of Subhadra would go to her heirs as if it was her stridhan, and not to the next reversioners of her father, that is, the plaintiff. Mr. Manohar Lal, who appears on behalf of the respondents, has contended that this case was decided on its own facts and is based on the terms of the compromise, because in the petition of compromise under which the three daughters took the property there was no mention that each relinquished her right of survivorship in the other's property. He contended that their Lordships by implication held that had there been in the petition of compromise any provision that the one relinquished her right of survivorship in the share of another, the position would have been quite different and the share would have gone to the reversioner of their father. I do not read in the judgment of their Lordships any such finding even by implication. They certainly laid stress upon the fact that the terms of the arrangement under which the three daughters took the estate did not allow the plaintiffs to come in. Relinquishment of right of survivorship also cannot accelerate the opening of succession as I shall presently show.

The next case to be considered is Ammani Ammal v. Periaswami Udayan, 74 Ind. Cas. 58 (2). That was also a case of two daughters. There is, however, no difference between daughters and widows as both of them take a life estate. There, the two daughters governed by the Mitakshara school, divided their father's properties absolutely with a right to sale, etc., and stipulated that neither of them would have any right over the properties set apart for the other. One of the daughters alienated some of the items which had fallen to her share. After her death the sons of the other daughters sued as heirs of their grandfather for recovery of possession of the share from the alienees. It was held :

(1) that the document of partition was relinquishment of survivorship of the one in the share of the other;

(2) that, as heirs of the alienor, the plaintiffs had no locus standi to challenge her alienation;

(3) that, as reversioners of the alienor's father, the plaintiffs could not maintain a claim for possession during the lifetime of the other co-tenant for life.

(4) that the agreement between the co-tenants for life as to the enjoyment of the estate, to which the plaintiffs were not parties, could not have the effect of accelerating their right to possession.

Dealing with the nature of partition between the two daughters, Venkatasubba Rao, J. said:—

" According to the Mitakshara School two or more daughters succeeding as heirs to their father take as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. It is well-settled that they may effect a partition each daughter giving up her right of enjoyment over the properties allotted to the other daughter during the lifetime of the latter. The question then arises can an arrangement be entered into by which each daughter may give up her interest not merely during the lifetime of the other daughter but during the whole of the lifetime ? It is difficult to see why such an agreement cannot be entered into. A and B inheriting their father's estate partition the property, B agreeing that in regard to the property that falls to A she gives up not only her interest for the lifetime of A but also for her own lifetime in the event of her surviving A. Why should such an agreement not be valid? If the arrangement amounted to a mere partition, the result is that B would give up her right in the property that fell to the share of A only for the lifetime of A and B's right to take by survivorship the share that fell to A would be unimpaired. But if, to an arrangement amounting to a partition was superadded the surrender by B of her right to take by survivorship, the effect would be to dispose of the entire interest of B in favour of A. For convenience I have, in the illustration, referred to B's disposal of her interest. It makes no difference whether we consider the case from the standpoint of A or B. The act of the nature referred to above on the part of either of the co-sharers amounts to an alienation of her interest in the property falling to the share of the other. Such an alienation is both on principle and authority perfectly valid and binding.

(2) 74 Ind. Cas. 58; 32 M L T 323; 45 M L J 1; (1923) M W N 652; A I R 1924 Mad. 75.

As was pointed out in Sadalal Ammal v. Gomati Ammal, 16 Ind. Cas. 428 (3), if it is not denied that one of the joint tenants may part with her own life-interest in favour of a stranger, it becomes difficult to imagine why she may not part with it in favour of the other joint tenant. In the above case the question in regard to two co-widows was under consideration. But on this point there is no difference between the case of widows and daughters and the principle is equally applicable to the case on hand."

His Lordship then referred to the case of Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (4), and observed:—

"Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (4), is a very useful authority in this connection A Hindu died leaving two widows who divided his property by a partition deed under which each took possession of her share with powers of alienation over the property comprised in it Certain alienations were made by one widow who subsequently died. On the surviving widow claiming the whole of her husband's property including the portion alienated, it was held that a widow could alienate for her life any estate which came to her as such and that she could, therefore enter into such a deed as would preclude her from recovering during her life property which she had alienated to the full extent of such alienation, provided it did not extend beyond her life-interest."

If the plaintiff's contention be accepted, it will follow that on the death of Deo Murat Kuer, if there had been no daughter, succession would have opened to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh to the extent of her share. In that case her alienation, if any, would have been void as against the reversioner. This is exactly against what was held in the case of Ramakkal v. Ramasami Naicken (4).

Mr. Manohar Lal, has relied upon a single Judge decision of the Madras High Court in Minakshi Ayi v. Subramanian Chettiar (5), for the proposition that one of the co-widows may give up her right of survivorship and then she will have no interest in the property of the other co-widow on her death. In my opinion this proposition is well established, but it does not follow that if, on the death of one widow, the other widow does not take her share by survivorship, it will go to the next reversioner of their husband. In the above case the alienee of one of the widows successfully resisted the claim of the other and got possession of the property on the basis of an alienation by the former. The learned Judge held that by one widow relinquishing her right of survivorship the other had an absolute right to make a transfer of her divided share and that this could not be questioned by the former. Mr. Manohar Lal contended that when one of two widows relinquished her right of survivorship in favour of the other, partial succession would open on the death of the latter and her share would go to the next reversioner of their husband. No authority for this was placed before us and it seems that this proposition, if accepted, will lead to anomalous results. It will follow that succession to a man's estate may open in respect of different properties on different occasions. If there are several widows and a partition took place between them and each relinquished her right of survivorship in favour of others, succession will open on the death of each one of them and different reversioners may succeed to different properties at different times. The next reversioner at the time of the death of one widow may not be living when the other widow dies and other persons may be the next reversioners at that time. When we pointed this out to Mr. Manohar Lal he realised the inevitable result of his contention and argued that the next reversioner at the time of the death of one of the widows and his heirs will hold the property only till the last widow died, and then the entire property would go to the reversioner who is the next of kin at the time of the death of the last widow. This will mean that the heirs of a deceased male will take the property not as an absolute owner but for a temporary period and this will create an estate which is unknown in the Hindu Law. The reason for the succession of widows is based upon the fiction that the husband survives in the body of his wife. Brahaspati says:

"Of him whose wife is not deceased, half the body survives How should another take the property while half the body of the owner lives."

As Mayne has pointed out, this metaphor

(3) 16 Ind. Cas. 428; 12 M L T 283, 23 M L J 355; (1912) M W N 903.

(4) 22 M 522; 9 M L J 101.

may be faulty, as if the husband lives even the sons cannot succeed, but nevertheless the Hindu Law never contemplates that the heirs of the husband can come in and take the property as long as a single widow survives. The only way in which a widow or widows can accelerate succession is if she, or, if there are more than one, all of them efface themselves and absolutely surrender their life estate. The law in this respect has been very clearly laid down. The surrender must be of the entire estate, and not in favour of any particular individual. Their must be their civil deaths before the reversioners of their husband can come in.

The result of the examination of the case-law on the subject seems to me to lay down the following proposition. If more than one female joint life tenants succeed to an estate, they may divide their life tenancy and hold portions of the estate separately if they like and this arrangement will continue till their life. In other words, they may convert the joint estate into estates held in severalty. One or more of them may relinquish her or their right of survivorship in that portion of the estate which is held by the other. In that case if one dies, the estate in her possession will not revert to the other who has relinquished but will go to her heirs as if it was her stridhan and if she alienates any portion of the estate, the alienee will continue in possession of the estate till the death of the last survivor. The joint tenant who has surrendered her right of survivorship, cannot question the succession or alienation. The inevitable result, therefore, is that succession will not open till the last survivor is dead. I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs have not succeeded to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh and they cannot succeed while Birita Kuer is alive, and that Musammat Asturan Kuer did not take the property as an heiress of her father but by virtue of the gift from her mother and if she succeeded to any property after her mother's death, she did so as an heiress of her deceased mother, as in case of relinquishment of her right of survivorship by Birita Kuer, the share in possession of Deo Murat Kuer became, for all practical purposes, her stridhan to be inherited by her heirs who were entitled to hold it as long as Birita was alive.

The evidence of Birita Kuer having given up her right of survivorship is, however, not very satisfactory and had the decision of the case rested upon the fact of surrender, I would have had no hesitation in holding that the relinquishment has not been proved. The story depends entirely upon the evidence of two witnesses which is to the effect that each widow orally gave up her right of survivorship in the share allotted to the other. No doubt, inference of such relinquishment can be drawn from the fact that on the death or Deo Murat Kuer, Birita Kuer did not interfere with Asturan's possession of the property. Birita Kuer has been examined in this case. She says that she was contemplating a suit. This statement of hers is not satisfactory, but it may be that she did not like to question the possession of Asturan Kuer out of love and affection for her and especially on account of the reason that Asturan was not looked after by her husband and had to fall back for her living on her mother and perhaps Birita Kuer did not like to deprive her of the means of her livelihood. On the whole, I am of opinion that the surrender of the right of survivorship by Birita Kuer has not been clearly established. The onus was upon the plaintiffs which they have not properly discharged. I do not, however, wish to pursue this matter further, as in my opinion, it makes no difference. I have come to the conclusion that in spite of the relinquishment of the right of survivorship, the plaintiffs have not succeeded to the properties.

The next point urged by Mr. Manohar Lal was that, assuming that the property of Raghubans Narayan Singh which came into the possession of Deo Murat Kuer, became her stridhan, on her death it was inherited by Asturan Kuer for her life and then it reverted to the next-of-kin of her father and in that view the plaintiffs had succeeded to the properties on Asturan Kuer's death. In my opinion, this is not so according to the Hindu Law, because Birita Kuer is a sapinda of her husband, and on the death of Asturan Kuer, when the property reverted to the next-of-kin (sapinda of her father), it devolved upon Asturan Kuer (Birita Kuer ?) see Bai Kesserbai v Hunsraj Morarji (6). Mr. Manohar Lal contended that the decision there was based upon Vyavahara Mayukha which is of special application in Bombay.

But their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed:

"If the case rested on the Mitakshara alone their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant would be entitled to succeed."

Then their Lordships quoted a passage from the Mitakshara, Chap. II, s. 11, placita 8, 9 and 11, of which placitum 11 is of importance, which runs thus:—

"Of a woman dying without issue as before stated, and who had become a wife by any of the four modes of marriage denominated Brahma, etc... ..... the (whole) property, as before described, belongs in the first place to her husband. On failure of him it goes to his nearest kinsmen (sapindas) allied by funeral oblations. But in the other forms of marriage, called Asura, etc ..... the property of a childless woman goes to her parents, that is, to her father and mother."

Their Lordships then proceeded:

"There can be no reasonable doubt that according to the Mitakshara definition of sapinda husband and wife are sapindas to each other."

I am, therefore, of opinion that Birita Kuer has succeeded to the stridhan property of her step-daughter Asturan Kuer. The result of my finding is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for possession. They are, however, entitled to a declaration that the deed of gift executed by Asturan Kuer in favour of defendant No. 2, Dulhin Parbati Kuer, so far as it relates to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh, will not be binding upon the reversioners when the succession opens on the death of Birita Kuer.

It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondents that at any rate the plaintiffs are entitled to immediate possession in respect of 8 gandas odd share of Khosepur, which has been separately mentioned in the plaint. The history of this share is that 1 anna 12 gandas odd share of this village belonging to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh was sold for arrears of cess and purchased by the plaintiffs. Birita Kuer, one of widows, and Asturan Kuer who had succeeded to the other widow Deo Murat Kuer, instituted a suit for recovery of that share. This suit ended in a compromise and the plaintiffs re-conveyed half of the share sold, namely, 16 gandas odd to Birita Kuer and Asturan Kuer jointly under a sale deed, dated July 14, 1921, (Ex. 1-J). The plaintiff-respondents contend that under the terms of this deed, which conveyed only a life estate to Birita and Asturan, they are entitled to get possession of half of the vended property, namely, 8 gandas odd which was the share of Asturan Kuer in the vended property. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have accepted this contention as he considered the point to have been conceded on behalf of the defendant-appellants. The defendants, however, appealed against the whole decree and they do not concede that under the terms of the deed as it stands, the plaintiffs are entitled to get these 8 gandas on the death of Asturan Kuer. I am not in a position to say what was the statement made by the Advocate on the basis of which the learned Subordinate Judge thought that the point was conceded. No note of it has been taken. As a matter of fact that written statement did make no concession and asked the entire suit to be dismissed. I have gone through the deed and in my opinion the contention of the plaintiffs has no foundation. The deed created a joint estate in favour of the two ladies Birita Kuer and Asturan Kuer, and it cannot be construed to mean that on the death of each one of them her share, which in fact is not defined in the deed, would revert to the vendor. The plain meaning of the deed seems to be that it was for their joint lives, and in case of the death of one, the other will continue to hold it till her death. This seems to me to be the correct interpretation on account of the fact that what was sold was the right, title and interest of the ladies in the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh. Nothing is sold in execution of a certificate sale except the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. The ladies being the judgment-debtors, what was sold was their right, title and interest and the same was reconveyed to them by this deed with the effect that they regained what was lost to them on account of the certificate sale. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for possession even in respect of this 8 gandas odd share.

The next point urged in the appeal is that the plaintiffs are entitled to no relief, not even to a declaration, in respect of 3 annas 11 gandas 2 kowris and 2 karants of village Khosepur, tauzi No. 11374-6. It appears that this village belonged to Brij Lal Singh, (father of Raghubans Narayan Singh) and his brothers. Brij Lal Singh, Jagarnath Singh and Brij Bihari Singh (grandfather of the plaintiffs) had 4 annas 13 gandas 1 kowri and 1 karant making up a total of 14 annas. Another brother Jain Singh had the remaining 2 annas. It appears that the family had to fight a case about the boundary of Khosepur and the entire expense of the litigation was borne by Raghubans Narayan Singh and the three sons of Brij Bihari Singh; two of them being the fathers of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, respectively, and they had to pay mesne profits also. In consideration of this, under some arrangement Jain Singh and Jagarnath Singh gave up their respective shares in the village in favour of Raghubans Narayan and the sons of Brij Bihari Singh, and thus Raghubans Narayan Singh got 8 annas of the village and the other 8 annas became the property of the three sons of Brij Bihari Singh. In consequence of this arrangement, on the death of Raghubans Narayan Singh, the heirs of Jain Singh, who held 2 annas share of the village, executed a sale-deed of that share in favour of the two widows of Raghubans Narayan Singh and the fathers of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 (Ex. 1) The share of Jagarnath Singh also remained in possession of Raghubans Narayan Singh and the sons of Brij Bihari and after the death of the former his share came in possession of his two widows. All these facts are clearly mentioned in paras. 12 and 13 of the plaint, showing that 8 annas of the village was the property of Raghubans Narayan Singh, and therefore on his death, each of the widows got 4 annas of it. These facts are not specifically denied in the written statement of the defendants. It is, however, said that by the sale-deed (Ex. 1), dated June 15, 1893, which the heirs of Jain Singh executed in favour of the two widows, the consideration of which was some money due to Raghubans Narayan Singh from Jain Singh, the widows got an absolute right in half of the share covered by the deed as the money belonged to them absolutely. Regarding the half share of Jagarnath, which was in possession of Raghubans Narayan Singh, it was urged on behalf of defendants that the widows came in possession of it by adverse possession and therefore got absolute right in it also. The fact that 8 annas of the village belonged to Raghubans Narayan Singh was not seriously disputed by the appellant before us, and I see no reason to differ from the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge in this respect. Mr. S. M. Mullick, however, urged that out of the four annas, which came to be possessed by Deo Murat Kuler, 3 annas 11 gandas odd was sold up and ceased to be the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh. It was purchased by Asturan Kuer in her own rights and she was an absolute owner of it. Mr. Mullick relied upon two sale-deeds one from Sagar Mal, dated March 4, 1910 (Ex. B) which is for 3 annas 1 ganda odd and the other from Ajodhya Prasad in favour of Ramgobind Pathak and Asturan Kuer, dated April 19, 1906 (Ex. C). Ramgovind was apparently benamidar for the other widow Birita Kuer.

I shall take up the second deed first. It seems that Ajodhya Prasad had purchased 1 anna share in execution of a certificate against Ram Prasad Narayan Singh and Kishundeo Narayan Singh for a sum of Rs. 40 and sold it for Rs. 68 to Asturan Kuer and Ram Govind. The fact seems to me to be that the property was sold in execution of a certificate against persons who had no interest in the property. Surajdeo was the son of Jain Singh who had already transferred his interest to the two widows and to the plaintiffs' fathers. Therefore Ajodhya Prasad having realised his position sold the properties to those to whom they really belonged, Birita taking it in the name of Ram Govind and Deo Murat in the name of her daughter Asturan. The sale-deed is of no effect, and when this was pointed out to Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick he did not press his case in respect of this 10 gandas share. He, however, pressed it in respect of the remaining 3 annas 1 ganda odd share, claimed under a sale-deed executed by Sagar Mal who had purchased it in execution sale under the following circumstances.

It appears that one Bishunpur Akha, etc., in Pargana Saresa in the District of Darbhanga, which belonged to the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh and his co-sharers, was sold for arrears of revenue and was purchased by one Sagar Mal. The two widows along with other co-sharers of the village including Harihar Prasad Singh, father of plaintiff No. 1, and Kishori Saran Prasad Singh plaintiff No. 2 instituted a suit for setting aside that sale. The suit was decreed by the first Court, but was dismissed with costs by the High Court on the ground that the illegality on which the sale was questioned was not mentioned in the grounds of appeal before the Commissioner. Sagar Mal got a decree for costs and mesne profits. In execution of that decree he got sold and purchased 6 annas 2 gandas odd share belonging to the two widows, the share of each widow being 3 annas 1 ganda odd, and then Sagar

Mal sold half of the share, namely 3 annas odd under Ex. B, dated March 4, 1910 to Asturan Kuer. Sagar Mal himself seems to have purchased the property on April 22, 1902. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that by virtue of the sale in execution of the decree against the two widows the six annas odd share ceased to be a part of the estate of the deceased Raghubans Narayan Singh and that Asturan Kuer who purchased it got an absolute right in it. Mr. Mullick has contended that even if it be assumed, of which there is no evidence, that the purchase by Asturan Kuer was benami for Deo Murat Kuer herself, she had an absolute right in that property which passed on her death to her daughter Asturan Kuer. This leads us to the consideration of the nature of the decree in execution of which the property was sold and purchased by Sagar Mal and the right which was acquired in it by Asturan Kuer or by Deo Murat Kuer if Asturan Kuer was a benamidar for her. That there was a decree of Sagar Mal is admitted by the plaintiff in his plaint. From the plaint and the judgment of the High Court in the revenue sale case, which are exhibits in the suit, it is clear that the two widows along with the father of one plaintiff and another plaintiff himself and other co sharers of the village had instituted a suit for setting aside a revenue sale of the family property and getting back its possession and that the suit though decreed by the trial Court was dismissed with costs by the High Court. The plaintiffs in their plaint say that Sagar Mal had a money decree in execution of which he purchased this property. There is nothing to show that there was any decree of Sagar Mal against the two widows other than the decree in connection with the setting aside of the revenue sale. No doubt, the defendant has not been able to produce a copy of the sale certificate or of the execution proceeding as the record has been destroyed; but oral evidence has been given to show that Sagar Mal had a decree of about Rs. 14,000 against the two widows. The defendant's witness No. 7 Sheodeni Pathak deposes as follows:—

"Raghubans Narain and the plaintiffs' ancestors had properties in Pargana Saraisa It was sold for arrears of revenue and Sagar Mall and Unkar Mull purchased it. There was a suit by Harihar Prasad and the widows which they lost in High Court Sagar Mal and Unkar Mull got a decree for Rs. 12,000 as costs and mesne profits on restitution. There was no other suit between the widows and Sagar Mal. Sagar Mal caused Khosepur to be sold and purchased it himself. He returned the shares to the respective maliks. Asturan Kuer also purchased Each purchased according to his respective share. Ajodhya Prasad also purchased share for arrears of embankment cess Asturan Kuer and Ram Gobind Pathak purchased the share half and half".

I leave aside the purchase of Ajodhya Prasad, which I have already dealt with. It is clear from the evidence of this witness on which there has been no cross-examination that the only decree of Sagar Mal against the two widows was for costs and mesne profits in respect of the property which was sold for the arrears of revenue and that it was in execution of that decree that Sagar Mal purchased 6 annas odd of Khosepur belonging to the two widows and then he reconveyed it to them according to their respective shares, the share of Deo Murat Kuer having been conveyed to Asturan Kuer. That the suit was a bona fide suit to get back a portion of the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh, which was lost by virtue of the revenue sale, cannot be disputed. One of the plaintiffs of this suit and the father of another plaintiff were also the plaintiffs in that suit. The suit was fought up to the High Court. It is also clear that in execution of the decree for costs and mesne profits in respect of that property Sagar Mal caused Khosepur to be sold. Mr. Manohar Lal contended that there was nothing to show that what was sold was the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh and not only the life interest of the two widows. In my opinion, what was sold in execution of that decree depends upon the nature of the decree itself Two questions therefore arise. One is, was the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh in Khosepur sold in execution of the decree, or in other words, was the decree against the two widows a decree against them personally or a decree against them as representing the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh, and the second is did it become again a part of the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh when Asturan Kuer or Deo Murat Kuer purchased it ?

It is settled law that in carrying out litigation regarding the estate of her husband, a widow represents the estate and the decree obtained against her is binding upon the reversioners, provided that the litigation is honest and is fairly conducted. Mayne (9th Edition, p. 950) referring to the position of a judgment obtained against a widow, says:—

"The rule of res judicata as indicated in s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not strictly applicable to such cases, but the principle itself has been held to apply so as to bind reversioners by decision in litigation fairly and honestly conducted, given for or against Hindu females who represent the estate in such litigation The question in each case will be whether the estate was properly represented by her. She might have been labouring under a personal disability or an estoppel But unless a decision itself was given on a ground personal to herself it will not any the least be binding on the reversioners".

In the case before us the widows along with their other co-sharers brought the suit to regain a portion of their husband's estate which was lost on account of the revenue sale. It appears from the judgment of the High Court that she had a good ground to have the sale set aside but lost the suit on account of technical defect. In my opinion, the decree obtained by Sagar Mal for costs and mesne profits was a decree which could have been realised from the estate of Raghubars Narayan Singh.

In Ramkishore Chuckerbutty v. Kallykanto Chuckerbutty (7), where a Hindu widow had instituted a suit to recover some property of her husband, which was dismissed with costs, it was held that as the widow did not seek to recover any interest personal to her and that she contracted the judgment-debt in the effort to recover her husband's estate to which her husband's heir would have succeeded the decree for costs was binding upon the estate of her husband and the decree-holders were on her death entitled to execute the decree against the legal representatives of her husband.

In Braja Nath Pal v. Jogeswar Bagchi (8) where a Hindu widow sought to set aside a sale of her husband's property, and the plaint, for want of jurisdiction in the Court where the suit was instituted, was returned for presentation to proper Court, and costs were awarded against the widow, it was held that the costs could be realised from the estate of the husband, and, when the decree was executed and property sold, the sale was not only of the limited interest of the widow but of the entire estate.

In Lalji Sahaya Singh v. Kurki Jha (9) where the widow had taken possession of property as a part of her husband's estate and she was ejected therefrom, it was held that the decree for mesne profits was on the widow's death binding on the reversioner. A similar view was taken in Dinomoni Chaudhrain v. Elahidad Khan (10).

(7) 6 C 479.
(8) 1 Ind. Cas. 62; 9 C L J 346.
(9) 2 Ind. Cas. 654; 14 C L J 90.
(10) 7 C W N 678.

In Rasal Singh v. Balwant Singh (11) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that a decree against the widow in a suit in which she sought to set aside the adoption by her of a son on the ground that she had no authority from her husband was binding on the reversioner notwithstanding the personal estoppel which bound the widow.

Mr. Manohar Lal, on the other hand, relied upon the case of Nafar Chandra Pal v. Kamini Kumar Lahiri (12) where a widow did not give up possession of a darpatni after it was sold and a decree for mesne profits was passed against her. It was held that it was a personal decree for her tortious act, and not as representing the estate of her husband. This case, however, is not applicable to the present one. Here, the widow, when the sale was set aside by the trial Court, got back possession of the property under a decree which was set aside by the High Court. The property of which she took possession was her husband's property. It cannot be said that in regaining under a decree of the Court possession of her husband's property which was lost, she was committing any personal tortious act. Mr. Manohar Lal also relied upon the case of Roy Mukhan Lal v. Stewart (13). That case also, in my opinion, has no application. There the question was whether a debt incurred by a widow for litigation to recover the property of her husband was on the widow's death binding upon the reversioners of the husband. It was held that it was not. In the case before us the widow carried on litigation apparently, without incurring any debt, from the income of the estate. She was made liable for costs and mesne profits. Under the circumstances I think she could not be personally liable for the mesne profits.

The next question for consideration is the effect of the sale of the property by Sagar Mal. If it was really purchased by Asturan Kuer herself, no question arises. The property became her stridhan. Assuming, however, that the property was purchased not by Asturan Kuer but by Deo Murat Kuer herself and she took it in the name of her daughter, the question is whether it became the personal property of Deo

Murat Kuer. It is settled law that the widow has got an absolute right over the income of the estate and if she acquires any property, from the saving of that income, it is optional with her either to keep the property separate from the estate or mix it up with it. The proposition seems to have been fully discussed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ishri Dutt Kuer v. Hansbutti Koerain (14) and this proposition is not disputed. In this case if she purchased the property she did so in the name of her daughter thereby clearly indicating that she was going to keep it as a separate property. It cannot be argued that the widow Deo Murat Kuer got the property fraudulently sold and purchased it herself to make it her own personal property. The decree was a bona fide one and re-sale by Sagar Mal was about eight years after the auction sale at which he had purchased. Perhaps Sagar Mal did not think it worth his while to keep the property. Apart from this, in this particular case it seems that a very large part of the consideration money payable to Sagar Mal was paid by mortgaging this very property. Asturan Kuer purchased the property from Sagar Mal on March 4, 1910, and mortgaged the share on March 20, 1910 Ex. B (1). In Sriram Jankiji Birajman Mandir v. Jagdamba Prasad (15) a widow in possession of her husband's estate acquired certain property through the exercise of the right of pre-emption. The price was paid by raising money by the mortgage of the pre-empted property. It was held that in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention of the widow the property did not form part of her husband's estate. In Nirmala Sundari Devi v. Deva Narayan Das Chowdhry (16) a female life estate holder (mother) had purchased a property from the surplus income of the estate in the benami name of another. There it was held that the onus of proving that it was not treated by her as her separate property was upon him who alleged it to be so. In the case before us there is no evidence of such intention; rather the circumstances are against its being made a part of the estate. I am, therefore, of opinion that 3 annas 1 ganda was the personal property of Asturan Kuer as it had ceased to be the estate of Raghubans Narayan Singh on account of the sale at which Sagar Mal purchased it; and even if it was purchased by Deo Murat Kuer, she did not include it in the estate and kept it separate and that it was inherited by Asturan Kuer.

The result is that the appeal, mainly succeeds and is partly allowed. The plaintiffs' suit in respect of the possession of the property and mesne profits will be dismissed. They will get a declaration that the deed of sale which the lower Court held to be a gift, dated December 12, 1928, executed by Babui Asturan Kuer in favour of the defendant No. 2 will not be binding upon the reversionary heirs of Raghubans Narayan Singh, except in so far as it relates to 3 annas 1 ganda 2 kowris 2 karants of Khosepur out of 3 annas 11 gandas 2 kowris 2 karants, tauzi No. 11374-6. The plaintiffs' suit in respect of this share will be entirely dismissed. The cross-appeal which relates to mesne profits, is dismissed.

Coming to the question of costs, though the plaintiffs have succeeded in obtaining a decree of declaration, the defendant has successfully resisted their claim for possession. Under the circumstances the parties should bear their own costs in the lower Court. The appeal has, however, in the main succeeded and the appellant will get her costs in this Court, the respondents bearing their own costs.

Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 2—Claim by co-owner for partition of party wall—If can be resisted—Applicability of s. 2—Co-owners—Party wall.

Judgment.—In order to understand the facts of this case clearly it is necessary to refer to the plan Ex. P. W. No. 2/1. The plaintiffs own the house shown in pink while the defendants own two houses one situated on the north and the other towards the south of the house of the plaintiffs. The case of the plaintiffs is that the walls marked G. A H. and L. B. M. are joint, that defendants are preventing them from converting these kacha walls into pucca walls and that the plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to have them partitioned. They also pray that an injunction may be issued to the defendants from interfering with the use of the parnalas C, D and E, and the construction of a door at F. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the walls were not joint and that in any case they could not be partitioned. They also denied that the plaintiffs had acquired any right of easement with respect to the parnalas or that the plaintiffs were entitled to open a door at F. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim in full. The defendants appealed to the learned District Judge. Their appeal was dismissed with this exception that it was held that the plaintiffs had not acquired any right of easement regarding the parnalas marked C and D on the plan. The defendants have now preferred a second appeal to this Court, and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections regarding the parnalas C and D.

It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the house in dispute did not belong to the plaintiffs and that the lower Appellate Court had erred in law in not giving any finding on this point. In my opinion this contention has no force. The trial Court had decided that the house shown in pink belonged to the plaintiffs. The defendants preferred an appeal to the District Judge and did not challenge the finding of the trial Court on this point. That explains why the lower Appellate Court did not deal with this point.

It was strenuously urged on behalf of the appellant that party walls cannot be conveniently divided and that, therefore, the suit of the plaintiffs for partition of the two walls G. A. H. and L. B. M. ought to have been dismissed. It is established that the plaintiffs' house as well as the house of the defendants on either side were originally built of mud. A few years ago the plaintiffs began rebuilding their house in brick. They have made their house pucca so far as the back, the front and the interior are concerned. The walls on the north and the south, however, were joint and the defendants have consistently refused to allow the plaintiffs to touch these walls. The plaintiffs have, therefore, been compelled to sue for the partition of these party walls. During the pendency of the appeal the plaintiffs offered to build the joint walls in brick at their own expense without any contribution by the defendants. They also stated that they were prepared to keep these walls joint in spite of their undergoing the entire expense of making them pucca. The defendants, however, refused this very reasonable offer made by the plaintiffs. It appears, therefore, that the defendants are deliberately obstructing the plaintiffs in making their house pucca.

It was held in Hardand Das v. Sundar (1), that a claim by a co-sharer to partition cannot ordinarily be resisted even where the claim causes inconvenience and difficulty of partition. In that case a party wall and a straircase were partitioned. In Gobind v. Narain Das (2), it was observed that where in a suit by one of the two joint owners for partition of a shop and for separate possession by plaintiff of his share, the defendant urged that the plaintiff could not enforce partition of the shop to his injury and that the shop was not capable of partition, it was held that it was practicable to make a partition of the shop and that the plaintiff was legally entitled to have a partition effected, and that the partition would not cause any injury in the legal sense to the defendant. In the peculiar circumstances of the present case, it is impracticable to take any action under s. 2, Partition Act, 1893, and it is, therefore, impossible to deny the plaintiffs the right to which they are undoubtedly entitled. Both the lower Courts have held that the door marked F abuts on a public street. This finding cannot be challenged in second appeal. For the foregoing reasons I dismiss this appeal with costs. The cross-objections have no force and are dismissed.

Practice—Courts should apply proper law and give proper relief—Litigant is not obliged to put down provision of law under which he seeks relief —Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Objection to execution—Objection upheld—Order for delivery of possession not passed—Restoration of possession under s. 151—Necessity of —Execution—Sale—Guarantee of title, if given—Auction purchaser's remedy when wrong property is sold.

It is the business of the Court to know the law and it is only incumbent upon the litigant to come before the Court and state the facts in respect of which he seeks the remedy. He must ask for such remedies as he requires and there is no obligation on him to inform the Court under which Statute or Rule he is entitled to claim those remedies. If he does not state the Statute or the Rule or if he states a wrong Statute or wrong Rule, that in no way relieves the Court of the obligation of itself applying the appropriate rule or section.

A tenant R sold part of his lands to B and later on a part to K. Both the sales were accepted by the landlord. He then filed a suit for arrears of rent against R, B and K including also rent for a period prior to the sale. An ex parte decree was passed but not against any definite portion of the land. In execution he brought to sale lands sold to B and K as well and was given possession. B and K objected and the Court held that their interest was not affected by the sale but as they were said to be in possession no orders were passed:

Held, that the Court should have, under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, restored possession to the objectors and directed that the possession should be re-delivered of their respective portions to the objectors as s. 151 emphasises the fact that nothing in the Code prevents the Court from passing such order as may be necessary to meet the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the processes of the Court.

An auction-sale carries no guarantee of title and no guarantee of any other kind and if the auction purchaser purchases rights which have been included in the sale improperly, he must restore posssession and must pursue such remedies as the law allows him against those persons who are to blame for it.

Mr. D. N. Varma, for the Respendents.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—These are two Miscellaneous Appeals and a Civil Revision which have arisen out of the following circumstances:

The plaintiff, Rai Bahadur Harihar Prasad Singh was the proprietor of Mauza Baragaon and in that mauza one Ramlakhan held 27 bighas and odd as a raiyat. In July 1926, Ramlakhan sold 3 bighas 8 kathas to one Bansropan Sahu who is one of the appellants before us (in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 37 of 1934). At a somewhat later date which does not seem to be precisely known, he sold 8 bighas 6 dhurs to the husband of one Musammat Kabutri who is appellant before us in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 301 of 1933. Both the sales were accepted by the landlord and the lands purchased by each purchaser were given a separate rental and a khata No., and Ramlakhan was left in cultivation of 16 bighas with a rent of approximately Rs. 100. On September 19, 1929, Rai Bahadur Harihar Prasad Singh sued for the arrears of rent due for the years 1333 to 1336 Fasli and it is agreed that in respect of the year 1333 the claim for rent was for a period prior to the time either of the two sales to the appellants before us was recognised. The plaint in the suit of which a translation has been put before us recites the facts of the respective purchases and states that the rent is in arrears and therefore asks for a decree in the following manner: (i) that the amount claimed in respect of rent be awarded against the properties and persons of the defendants, viz., against all of them; (ii) in the event of the defendants refusing to have the khatas separated and if the arrangement should be considered in the suit to be illegal by the Court, that a decree might be passed in respect of the entire holding as specified in Sch. 'A' to the plaint (Sch. 'A' sets forth the area of the lands known as Lakhan Singh, viz., the entire khata before the separation); and (iii) that if the defendants did not refuse that, a decree might be passed in respect of the remaining lands after excluding the lands transferred to the appellants in these appeals. The suit was not defended and the two transferees of the portions of the holding did not appear before the Court to dispute the separation of the khata or indeed to take any other attitude with the result that a decree was granted to this effect:

"This suit coming this day for final disposal before the Munsif of the First Court, Arrah, and in the presence of the Pleader for the plaintiff and in the absence of the defendants, it is ordered and decreed ex parte that a sum of Rs. 837-5-3 be paid by defendant (sic) to the plaintiff together with interest at 6 per cent till realization and together with costs."

The plaintiff then applied for execution and as appears from the judgment of the learned District Judge, he applied for execution against Ramlakhan only and no notice was served upon the two transferees who seem to have had no knowledge whatever of the proceedings. The decree-holder put the entire area of the holding including that portion which had been transferred to the appellants to sale and it was bought by the opposite party No. 1, Ram Prashad who proceeded to take delivery of possession and got dakhaldehani on January 24, 1933. Then the two appellants, viz., Bansropan who owned the 3 bighas 8 kathas and Musammat Kabutri who owned 8 bighas 9 dhurs came before the executing Court with an objection that the sale was not effective against them and they put in their objection in a somewhat unfortunate form. They claimed to be in possession of the lands said to have been purchased by them and said that they had not been made parties to the execution. Having put those allegations of fact before the Munsif, the first of which was manifestly erroneous, (for delivery of possession had been granted to the opposite party) they asked for relief from the Court. The Munsif held that their interest had not been affected by the sale at all and he accordingly purported to "allow their objections," but he does not seem to have made any order.

The matter then went on appeal by the opposite party to the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge considered the matter from what I venture to think a most unnecessarily technical point of view. He said that this being an objection under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code, and s. 47 of that Code, and the objectors having said that they were already in possession of the property (a statement which was on the face of it mistaken) there was no power to give a remedy because the Court could not give possession of that of which the claimants for possession said they were already possessed of; and he said that neither O. XXI, r. 100, nor s. 47, is applicable. This, in my opinion, was not the proper way to treat the case. It is quite immaterial whether an application is said to be under a special section or under a special rule. It is the business of the Court to know the law and it is only incum bent upon the litigant to come before the Court and state the facts in respect of which he seeks the remedy. He must ask for such remedies as he requires and there is no obligation on him to inform the Court under which Statute or Rule he is entitled to claim those remedies. If he does not state the Statute or the Rule or if he states a wrong Statute or wrong Rule, that in no way relieves the Court of the obligation of itself applying the appropriate rule or section. I have had occasion more than once to protest against the curious superstition that a proper recitation of the appropriate section or rule is necessary for obtaining a remedy.

There is one small matter that needs to be noticed in passing. The appeal by Bansropan Sahu is out of time as a matter of appeal. The matter first came before this Court as an application in revision and it was filed on January 11, 1934, whereas the date of the District Judge's judgment was September 16, 1933. It was then pointed out to the then applicant for revision that his proper course was to appeal and he lodged an appeal on a late date. But if the date of the lodging of his appeal be taken as the date of his application in revision, which is to give him the best of the possible circumstances, it is still out of time. Nevertheless the point is of no practical importance in this case. The decision, as taken up by the Munsif as far as the declaration of the law is concerned, is correct. The sale had no effect upon the rights of the two objectors and their property not having passed under the sale, but only the property of Ramlakhan, delivery of possession could not, if the decree had been properly carried out, have passed to the auction-purchaser. The Court should have acted under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code which emphasises the fact that nothing in the Code prevents the Court from passing such order as may be necessary to meet the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the processes of the Court, and the Court, therefore should have directed that the possession should be re-delivered of their respective portions to the objectors. That would have saved much trouble and would have prevented the technical view of the matter taken by the District Judge.

The order of this Court will be that we use the powers reserved to us under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code and we direct that if possession has not already been recovered by the objectors of those portions of the holding, which they had purchased from Ramlakhan, they will be put into possession of those portions. It is unfortunate that the auction-purchaser should have to suffer this loss for he appears to be an innocent party; but an auction-sale carries no guarantee of title and no guarantee of any other kind and if the auction-purchaser purchases rights which have been included in the sale improperly, he must restore possession and must pursue such remedies as the law allows him against those persons who are to blame for it. The parties will bear their own costs of these proceedings.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28 (6) (2)—Secured creditor can realize security by filing suit without obtaining leave of Court

A secured creditor of the insolvent is entitled notwithstanding s. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, to realise the security by filing a suit or otherwise in accordance with law without obtaining the leave of the Court in that behalf. In the matter of L. W. Nasse (1), dissented from.

[Case-law reviewed.]

S. S. C. A. from the judgment of the Assistant District Court, Mandalay, in C. A. No. 3 of 1934.

Mr. Tambe, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. N. Basu, for the Respondents.

Page, C. J.—This appeal must be allowed. The material facts are simple, and are not now in dispute. One Maung Thaung executed a mortgage of the land in suit to Maung Mya and Ma Kha. Thereafter Maung Mya and Ma Kha created a sub-mortgage of the property in favour of the appellants, the M. K. M. Chettyar Firm by disposing the mortgage deed executed by Maung Thaung with the appellants as security for a loan. Subsequently and before the present action was brought Maung Mya and Ma, Kha were adjudicated insolvents. On August 29, 1933, the appellants filed the present mortgage suit against Maung Mya Ma Kha, Maung Thaung and the Official Receiver of the estate of the insolvents. In the Sub-Divisional Court of Mandalay the appellants obtained a preliminary mortgage decree but on appeal to the Assistant District Court of Mandalay the decree was set aside and the suit dismissed. From the decree of the Assistant District Court the present appeal has been brought.

The sole issue to be determined in the present appeal is whether the appellant firm as mortgagees were entitled to realise their security by filing the present mortgage suit without obtaining the leave of the Court under s. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920). The learned Assistant District Judge held that it was incumbent upon the appellants to obtain the leave of the Court before filing the present suit, and as no such leave had been obtained the suit must fail. The question, therefore, is whether in so holding the learned Assistant District Judge correctly laid down the law. In my opinion he did not. Under s. 28 (2) it is provided that:

"on the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a receiver as hereinafter provided and shall become divisible among the creditors and thereafter, except as provided by this Act, no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under this Act shall, during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt or commence any suit or other legal proceeding except with the leave of the Court on such terms as the Court may impose,"

"nothing in this section shall affect the power of any secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realize or deal with it if this section had not been passed."

In support of the decree of the Assistant District Court the learned Advocate for the respondent relied upon the decision of Ormiston, J., in In the matter of L. W. Nasse (1); and that authority no doubt supports the contention of the respondent. Ormiston, J, held upon the construction of the proviso to s. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) which is in the same terms as s. 26 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act that,

"the words of the proviso can be amply satisfied by confining its operation to cases where the mortgagee can realize his security without the institution of a suit."

With all respect I am of opinion that in so holding Ormiston, J., did not correctly state the law.

It is common ground that it is only in the special cases to which s. 69, Transfer of Property Act applies that the mortgagee is entitled to realise his security without the intervention of the Court and if the construction that Ormiston, J., placed upon s. 28 (6) were to prevail, the result would be that except in such rare cases it would be incumbent upon the mortgagee, although admittedly a secured creditor, to obtain the leave of the Court before he proceeded to realise his security against the insolvent or his estate. In my opinion there is no justification for restricting the operation of s. 28 (6) in the way that found favour with Ormiston, J. In my opinion the language in which s. 28 (6) is couched is quite plain and the construction which I am disposed to put upon s. 28 (6), namely, that a secured creditor of the insolvent is entitled notwithstanding s. 28 (6) to realise the security by filing a suit or otherwise in accordance with law without obtaining the leave of the Court in that behalf is in consonance with the view that is held by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and Patna. So far as I know the only discordant note is sounded in the judgment of Ormiston, J., in In the matter of L. W. Nasse (1): See B. N. Lang v. Heptullabhai Ismailji (2), Bai Kashi v. Chunilal Hathising (3) Official Receiver, Coimbatore v. Palaniswami Chetti (4), Rajendrachandra Sarkar v. Bipinchandra Shah Bhaumik (5), Sant Prasad Singh v. Sheodut Singh (6). Further it would appear that in Kalachand Banerjee v. Jaganath Marwari (7), the construction that I would place upon s. 28 (6) was accepted as correct by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In that case in which s. 16 (5), Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) which corresponds to the proviso to s. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, and s. 28 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, was under consideration, Lord Salvesen delivering the judgment of the Board observed:

(1) 118 Ind. Cas. 615; A I R 1929 Rang. 229; 7 R 201; Ind. Rul. (1929) Rang. 263.

"that the rights of the secured creditor over a property are not affected by the fact that the mortgagor or his heir has been adjudicated an insolvent is, of course plain, but that does not in the least imply that an action against him may proceed in the absence of the person to whom the equity of redemption has been assigned by the operation of law. The latter alone is entitled to transact in regard to it and he and not the insolvent has the sole interest in the subject-matter of the suit."

In the present case the Official Receiver as the assignee of the estate of the insolvents was impleaded as a defendant in the suit, and in my opinion, it was not incumbent upon the appellants to obtain the leave of the Court before the suit was filed.

In England the practice and the procedure is the same: Bankruptcy Act, 1914 and 1926, s. 7 (2) White v. Simmons (8), Ex parte Pannell; In re England (9), Waddell v. Toleman (10), and Ex parte Hirst; In re Wherly (11).

For these reasons the appeal will be allowed, the decree of the Assistant District Court set aside, and the proceedings remanded to the Assistant District Court to decide the other questions raised in the appeal before that Court and to determine the appeal according to law. The appellants are entitled to the costs of the hearing before the Assistant District Court and their costs of the appeal as against the respondent Maung Thaung.

Civil Revision No. 560 of 1934

HAZARI LAL LABH—PETITIONER

versus

ABDUS SAMAD AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 89, 92—Purchase of property at something under its value—Whether evidence of fraud—Scope of O. XXI, in setting aside sales.

In order to set aside an auction sale it is necessary to bring the matter within O. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure. The mere fact that the purchaser purchased the property at something under its value is not by any means evidence of fraud and would not justify the setting aside of the sale. Once the property has been knocked down at the auction, there is an end of the matter unless the sale can be set aside under the provisions of O. XXI.

C. R. from the orders of the Munsif, Darbhanga, dated July 9 and 10, 1934.

Messrs. P. Jha and Rati Kant Chaudhary, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Murari Prasad, Hasan Jan, Muhamad Hasan, R. Misser and B. P. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—There can be no dispute that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale. In order to set aside an auction sale, it is necessary to bring the matter within O. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure; outside that order there is obviously no jurisdiction to act as the learned Judge in the Court below has acted in this case. He appears to have come to the conclusion that there was some sort of fraud, but a mere suspicion of any particular kind of fraud will not justify the Judge's action. There was no evidence in the case, and the mere fact that the purchaser purchased the property at something under its value is not by any means evidence of fraud and would not justify the setting aside of the sale. Once the property had been knocked down at the auction, there is an end of the matter unless the sale can be set aside under the provisions of the order to which I have referred.

The Rule must be made absolute, the orders of the Judge, dated July 9 and 10, 1934, will be set aside, and it must be held in the circumstances that the property was knocked down to the petitioner for Rs. 1,000, which sale, in the ordinary course of events, will be confirmed. The petitionor has brought the decree-holder into this Court. Although he succeeds and is entitled to recover his costs, he must pay the costs of the decree-holder which costs must be added to the costs he recovers from the decree-holder. Hearing fee two gold mohurs in each case.

Jurisdiction—Valuation—Objection as to valuation, if can be raised for first time in execution.

It is not open to the parties during the course of the execution proceedings to raise an objection for the first time regarding the under-valuation or over-valuation of a suit. A person who has himself given the valuation during execution proceedings cannot contend that he had under-valued his application for the filing of the award, which has to be regarded as a plaint in a regular suit. Sundar Das v. Umda Jan (1), Rajalakshmi Dassee v. Katyayani Dassee (2), Sardar Khan v. Aisha Bibi (3), Abdur Rahman v. Charagh Din (4) and Muhammad Shah v. Abdullah Shah (5), distinguished.

Misc. S. C. A. from an order of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated April 24, 1933.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. G. Sethi, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts relevant to the question of law involved in this appeal may be shortly stated. On October 5, 1931, Charanji Lal presented an application to the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sialkot, under para. 20, Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, alleging that certain matters which were in dispute between him and two other persons, namely, Gian Chand and Diwan Chand had been referred to arbitration, and that an award had been made thereon, on August 3, 1931. He prayed that an order for the filing of the award in Court may be passed, and that a decree in the terms of the award be granted to him. In this application which was numbered and registered as a suit, it was stated that the value for the purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 5,000. A notice was issued to the defendants who filed certain objections against the award. These objections were, however, subsequently withdrawn, and therefore, the Court passed a decree for Rs. 2,025 against the defendants, in accordance with the terms of the award, on July 4, 1932.

During the execution of this decree a warrant of attachment of movable property of both the judgment-debtors was issued, but it could not be executed. Gian Chand thereafter put in an application objecting that the execution could not proceed because the decree based on the award amounted to a decree for declaration only, that court-fee was required for such execution, and that the greater part of the decretal amount had already been paid. These objections were overruled by the Senior Subordinate Judge on August 31, 1932, and he directed that the execution shall proceed. Against this order Gian Chand and Diwan Chand preferred an appeal to the District Judge. Before the learned District Judge a preliminary objection was raised by the learned Counsel for the respondent (decree-holder) that as the valuation of the suit for the purposes or jurisdiction exceeded Rs. 5,000, the appeal lay to the High Court and the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The learned District Judge accepted this preliminary objection, and dismissed the appeal of the judgment-debtors. Against that order the judgment-debtors have preferred an appeal to this Court.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants that in his application under Sch. II, para. 20, Civil Procedure Code, the respondent had stated that the value of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction was only Rs. 5,000, that this application had been registered as a suit, and stood on the same footing as a plaint in a regular suit. The defendants had not raised any objection regarding the valuation of the suit and the Court therefore passed a decree in accordance with the terms of the award on July 4, 1932. It was not open to the respondent during the course of the execution proceedings to contend that the value of the suit was more than Rs. 5,000, having himself valued the suit at that figure, he should not be allowed during the execution proceedings to raise a plea that the suit had been under-valued. It was further urged that the executing Court could not go behind the decree, and that if the value of the suit was not mentioned in the decree sheet, the plaint could be looked into to discover the value for the purposes of jurisdiction. Moreover, there being no legal proof on the record regarding the value of the property, it was not open to the executing Court to enter into this question during the execution proceedings.

On behalf of the respondent it was contended that it was not open to the parties to confer jurisdiction on an Appellate Court by under-valuing the suit and that the question of jurisdiction was governed by statute or by rule having the force of law. It was urged that for the purposes of appeal the market value of the property dealt with by the award must be taken to be the value of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction. Reliance was placed on Sundar Das v. Umda Jan (1), Rajalakshmi Dassee v. Katyayani Dasee, (2), Sardar Khan v. Aisha Bibi (3), Abdur Rahman v. Charagh Din (4) and Muhammad Shah v. Abdullah Shah (5), in this respect. None of these rulings, however, seems to me to be applicable to the facts of the present case. In each one of the abovementioned cases objection regarding the valuation of the suit was either taken in the trial Court or in the Appellate Court. In none of these cases was the objection raised, for the first time during the course of the execution proceedings. It was conceded by the learned Counsel for the respondent that he had not been able to find any reported case wherein an objection relating to the under-valuation or over-valuation of a suit was given effect to during the course of the execution proceedings. In the absence of any authority to the contrary, I am of the opinion that it is not open to the parties during the course of the execution proceedings to raise an objection for the first time regarding the under-valuation or over-valuation of a suit. In the present case the respondent, Charanji Lal was himself responsible for the under-valuation, if any. It is not open to him, during the execution proceedings, to contend that he had under-valued his application for the filing of the award, which has to be regarded as a plaint in a regular suit.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that there is no force in the preliminary objection raised by the respondent in the Court of the learned District Judge. I, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order and decree of the learned District Judge, dated April 24, 1933, and remand the case to him under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, and direct that he shall decide the appeal on the merits in accordance with law. The court-fee levied on the memorandum of appeal in this Court shall be refunded, and the other costs shall abide the event.

There is nothing in the provisions of ss. 138 and 139, Agra Tenancy Act, which may bar a suit for recovery of arrears of rent even if either of the parties fail to take necessary steps under ss. 138 and 139 for the division of the produce where the rent is taken by division or for estimate or appraisement of the standing crops. Indarjit Partap Bahadur Sahi v. Shewak Rai (1), referred to.

Mr. A. P. Pandey, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal and arises out of a suit brought by him against the defendant-respondent to recover arrears of rent which was payable admittedly by division of produce. The trial Court decreed the suit but the learned District Judge, Ghazipur, dismissed the suit with a finding that the plaintiff had not taken necessary steps for the division of the produce at the time of the produce. Against this decision this appeal has been preferred. The only question for determination is whether the suit lies or not. There is no provision in the Agra Tenancy Act which forbids the filing of a suit if the necessary steps for the division of produce, such as are prescribed under ss. 138 and 139 of the Tenancy Act, are not taken in time. On the other hand, s. 132 of the Tenancy Act which applies to the recovery of arrears of rent lays down: "An arrear of rent shall be recoverable by suit, or by distraint or by notice through the tehsildar in accordance with the provisions of this Act or in any one or more such ways." Sections 138 and 139 provide for the procedure to be adopted in case either party applies for the division of the produce in kind, or for estimate or appraisement of the standing crops where rent is taken by estimate or appraisement. As already stated there is nothing in the provisions of ss. 138 and 139 which may bar a suit for recovery of arrears of rent even if either of the parties fail to take necessary steps under ss. 138 and 139 for the division of the produce where the rent is taken by division or for estimate or appraisement of the standing crops. This view is not without an authority. In Indarjit Partap Bahadur Sahi v. Sewak Rai (1) it was held that where rent was payable by division of the produce and the rent was in arrears, a suit for the money equivalent of such rent lay under s. 132, Tenancy Act of 1926, and that ss. 138 and 139 simply laid down the procedure for the deputation of an officer and there was nothing in them which could cut down the right of suit granted by s. 132.

The learned District Judge did not enter into the question as to how much rent was due by the defendant-respondent. It is therefore ordered that the appeal be allowed with costs. The case be remanded to the lower Court to admit it under its original number and to dispose it of in accordance with law on the evidence on the record. The court-fee will be refunded as usual.

Permission to file a Letters Patent Appeal is rejected.

The provisions of O. XXI, r. 2, and O. XXIII, r. 3, are complimentary of each other. There is nothing in the terms of O. XXIII, r. 3 to exclude suits based on mortgages from the operation of this rule. While on the one hand O XXXIV, r. 5 contemplates a payment into Court, on the other hand under O. XXIII, r. 3, the payment has to be recognised even though it has been made out of Court. If before a final decree is passed a payment is made out of Court and the payment is admitted by the plaintiff, it would be in the highest degree unreasonable to ignore that payment because of its not being made in Court as required by O XXXIV, r. 5. In such cases if the payment is admitted by both parties, the satisfaction based on such payment ought to be recorded under O. XXIII, r. 3 in spite of its not being made into Court. On the other hand, if the alleged payment out of Court is disputed, the payment having been made in clear disregard of the mandatory provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5, the Court is not bound to embark upon any inquiry into the question whether the alleged payment was in fact made or not. Durga Devi v. Nand Lal (1), Tirloki Nath Dube v. Sadhu Ram Tewari (2) and Viswanath Ayyar v. Chimmukutti Amma (6), relied on [p. 233, col. 2.]

Messrs. Hyder Husain and Akbar Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the order dated February 13, 1933, passed by the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on an application made by them under O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure for a final decree for sale.

The facts of the case are that on March 2, 1932, the plaintiffs-appellants obtained a preliminary decree for sale on the basis of a mortgage-deed which had been executed in their favour by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 on January 29, 1920. On September 28, 1932, the plaintiffs made an application under O. XXXIV, r. 5, alleging that the date fixed for payment in the preliminary decree had expired and the defendants had not made any payment to the plaintiffs and praying that a final decree be passed for Rs. 6,601-4 together with interest thereon. November 15, 1932, was the date fixed for the hearing of this application. Three days before this date on November 12, 1932, an application was made by one Gulzari Lal, a general agent of plaintiff No. 1, to the effect that he had realised the entire decretal amount and nothing remained due from the defendants in respect of the decree and praying that the application which had been made by the plaintiffs for a final decree be dismissed. When the case came up for hearing before the Court on the date fixed both the plaintiffs made an application denying the payment alleged to have been received by Gulzari Lal in his application dated November 12, 1932, and alleging that the application had been made by him in collusion with the defendants. The Court thereupon ordered that notices be issued to the defendants as well as to Gulzari Lal to show cause against the application made that day by the plaintiffs. On February 11, 1933, when the matter came up for disposal before the Court, Counsel for both the parties stated that they did not want to adduce any oral evidence in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge held that Gulzari Lal was the agent only of plaintiff No. 1 and that he had neither authority nor could give a valid discharge of the decree on behalf of plaintiff No. 2. He was, however, of opinion that the satisfaction of the decree certified by Gulzari Lal by means of his application dated November 12, 1932, must be upheld as valid to the extent of half the amount of the decree so far as it concerned plaintiff No. 1. In result he made the decree for sale final only for half of the mortgage money and proportionate costs in favour of plaintiff No. 2 alone. Both the plaintiffs have come to this Court in appeal against the last mentioned order of Subordinate Judge.

The main contention on behalf of the appellants is that no payment having actually be made in Court it could not be recognised under O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and a final decree should therefore be passed for the entire amount due under the preliminary decree and not merely for half of that amount. Order XXXIV, r. 4, which provides for a preliminary decree in a suit for sale lays down that if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a preliminary decree to the effect mentioned in cls. (a), (b) and (c) (i) of sub-r. (1) of r. 2, cls. (c) (i) of sub-r. (1) of r. 2 directs "that if the defendant pays into Court the amount so found or declared due". Order XXXIV, r. 5, provides for the final decree in a suit for sale and cl. (1) of it uses the words "makes payment into Court". Clause (3) of that rule lays down that "where payment in accordance with sub-r. (1) has not been made", the Court shall pass a final decree. Form No. 5-A in Appendix D of the Code of Civil Procedure which gives the prescribed form for a preliminary decree for sale also contains the words "pay into Court", and the preliminary decree for sale prepared in the present case is also in the same form. Thus there can be no doubt that these provisions of O. XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to decrees for sale contemplate payment into Court of the amount payable under the preliminary decree. It should also be noted that the words "relating to payment into Court" did not find place in s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act but were introduced for the first time when the provisions relating to decrees passed in mortgage-suits were included in the Code of Civil Procedur of 1908. The learned Counsel for the respondents does not deny that under the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5 the payment has to be made into Court. He has, however, argued that the provisions of O. XXI, r. 2, and O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to such a case and that even if the payment does not comply with the terms of O. XXXIV, r. 5, yet the Court is bound to take notice of them, if the necessary conditions of O. XXI, r. 2 or O. XXIII, r. 3 are satisfied. We are of opinion that O. XXI, r. 2, has no application to the case. Order XXI opens with the heading "Execution of decrees and orders". All the rules contained in that Order are rules laying down the procedure relating to execution of decrees and orders. It is not disputed that proceedings for a final decree for sale are proceedings in the suit and not proceedings in execution. We have, therefore, no difficulty in holding that O. XXI, r. 2, did not apply to a payment made before the final decree for sale. The same view has been taken by the Lahore High Court in Durga Devi v. Nand Lal, 136 Ind. Cas. 732 (1) and by a learned Judge of this Court in Tirloki Nath Dube v. Sadhu Ram Tewari (2). The learned Counsel for the respondents on the other hand has relied on the decisions in Piran Bibi v. Jitendra Mohun Mukerjee (3), Mangar Sahu v. Bhatoo Singh (4) and Ahmed Rehman v. A. L. A. R. Chettiar Firm (5) in support of the contrary view. In all these cases the application of O. XXI, r. 2, to proceedings for a final decree for sale seems to have been assumed, but the specific question about the rule in question having no application because of the proceedings being proceedings in suit and not in execution, was not considered or discussed in any of those cases.

Next as regards the application of O. XXIII, r. 3. It deals with the adjustment wholly or in part of a suit by means of an agreement, compromise or satisfaction and provides that where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been so adjusted the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded. The provisions of O. XXI, r. 2 and O. XXIII, r. 3, are complimentary of each other. While O. XXI, r. 2, deals with adjustments made after decree, O. XXIII, r. 3 deals with adjustments before decree. We are of opinion that there is nothing in the terms of O. XXIII, r 3 to exclude suits based on mortgages from the operation of this rule. But the application of that rule to the present case gives rise to an apparent inconsistency. While on the one hand O. XXXIV, r. 5 contemplates a payment into Court, on the other hand under O. XXIII, r. 3, the payment has to be recognised even though it has been made out of Court. One of the elementary canons of construction is to construe the various provisions of a statute so as to make them consistent. If before a final decree is passed a payment is made out of Court and the payment is admitted by the plaintiff, it would be in the highest degree unreasonable to ignore that payment because of its not being made in Court as required by O. XXXIV, r. 5. We are, therefore, inclined to hold that in such cases if the payment is admitted by both parties the satisfaction based on such payment ought to be recorded under O. XXIII, r. 3, in spite of its not being made into Court. On the other hand if the alleged payment out of Court is disputed, the payment having been made in clear disregard of the mandatory provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5, the Court is not bound to embark upon an inquiry into the question whether the alleged payment was in fact made or not. The view taken by us appears to be the only reasonable and middle course between the two provisions which are not quite consistent with each other. A similar view appears to have been taken in the two cases referred to above, Durga Devi v. Nand Lal, 136 Ind. Cas. 732 (1) and Tirloki Nath Dube v. Sadhu Ram Tewari (2) and also by the Madras High Court in Viswanath Ayyar v. Chimmukutti Amma (6). In the present case the payment alleged to have been received out of Court by Gulzari Lal was denied by both the plaintiffs. In the circumstances we are of opinion that the Court was not required to enter upon an inquiry as regards the alleged payment and ought to have refused altogether to recognise it as the payment was not made into Court. In any case assuming that the Court was bound to make an inquiry under O. XXIII, r. 3, we must hold that the defendants have completely failed to establish the alleged payment. They have given absolutely no evidence in proof of the payment and rely solely on the application dated November 12, 1932, made by Gulzari Lal. No attempt was made even to prove this application which was challenged by the plaintiffs. Admittedly Gulzari Lal was the agent of only one of the plaintiffs. He alleged that as the family of the plaintiffs was joint so he, as general agent of one of the plaintiffs had realised the entire decretal amount. No evidence has been given about the plaintiffs being members of a joint family or about the plaintiff No. 1 being the manager thereof. It is well settled that in the case of a joint decree passed in favour of several mortgagees one of them cannot give a valid discharge against the other mortgagees. Thus prima facie Gulzari Lal as the agent of one of the mortgagees could not realise the money on behalf of both the plaintiffs. The whole story as regards the alleged payment contained in the application of Gulzari Lal is in the highest degree suspicious. So the burden lay heavily upon the defendants to establish the alleged payment. The mere admission of Gulzari Lal cannot in the circumstances be accepted as sufficient. We are, therefore, of opinion, that even if an inquiry under O. XXIII, rules, was necessary, the defendants having failed to adduce any evidence in support of the payment we must find that they have failed to establish it.

For the above reasons we are of opinion that the appeal must succeed. Cross-objections have also been filed on behalf of the defendants. In view of the opinion expressed by us above the cross-objections must fail. The result, therefore, is that we allow the appeal with costs and modify the order of the lower Court by directing that a final decree for sale in terms of O. XXXIV, r. 5 should be prepared for Rs. 6,601-4 instead of Rs. 3,310 as ordered by the lower Court. The cross-objections fail and are dismissed with costs.

S. S. C. A. against the decree of the District Court, Lower Chindwin, dated February 23, 1934.

Mr. A. N. Basu, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. C. Sanyal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Court of Lower Chindwin, passed on appeal from the judgment and decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Monywa in Suit No. 11 of 1933. It was a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration of his title to a ¼th share in the estate of U Po Kin and Ma Ein Byaung, who were his grandparents, and for partition and delivery of possession of his share. Unfortunately the appeal to the District Court was greatly complicated by the wrong method in which the Sub-Divisional Court dealt with the suit. This Court not only went into the question of the appellant's right to a share, but also, before passing a preliminary decree, decided the detailed questions as to the properties, both movable and immovable, comprised in the estate of U Po Kin and Ma Ein Byaung, and then appointed a Commissioner merely for the purpose of ascertaining the mesne profits arising from the immovable properties.

The proper course for the Sub-Divisional Court to have adopted was to have passed a preliminary decree declaring the appellant's right which, as a matter of fact, was not contested and then to have referred the whole case to a Commissioner to decide what were the properties comprised within the estate and the values of the respective items thereof. When the case came on appeal before the District Court, a large number of separate items of property alleged to be comprised within the estate were the subject of contest, with the result that, although a preliminary decree only had been passed, the learned District Judge had to consider in detail the bulky evidence regarding the properties comprised in the estate—a task which at this stage he should never have been required to undertake. Before being required to do this, he should have had before him the findings of the learned Sub-Divisional Judge on the report of a Commissioner, and the items in dispute would thereby have been brought within a sufficiently narrow compass to enable him to deal effectively with them. Even at that stage, had I been in the place of the learned District Judge, I think I should have declined to take into consideration the grounds of appeal referring to specific items of property and should have passed the decree which the Sub-Divisional Court ought to have passed, viz., declaring the appellant's right, and referring the whole case to a Commissioner for report. When this case now comes before this Court on second appeal the appeal is prosecuted in respect of certain items of property of small value, questions which probably would never have reached this Court if the case had been properly dealt with in the beginning.

In regard to the immovable properties, the contest is now narrowed down to four items. These were accepted in mortgage in the names of various children of U Po Kin as mortgagees. The appellant claims that these transactions were benami transtions and that the money lent on these mortgages was provided by U Po Kin himself, and therefore the mortgaged properties form part of U Po Kin's estate. The items now in dispute are items Nos. 27, 28, 29 and 30 of Sch. "A" attached to the plaint. In my opinion, the matter is concluded against the appellant by the decision of this Court in the case of Maung Kyaw Pe v. Maung Kyi (1). It does not matter in the least whether U Po Kin provided the money lent to the mortgagors or not. Even if he did, since the names of his children are mentioned in the mortgage-deeds and his name is omitted therefrom, the presumption arises that he intended these mortgages as advancements for the benefit of his children who are respectively named in the deeds. No evidence worthy of the name has been called by the appellant to rebut this presumption.

With regard to the movable property, the contest is now confined to the question whether an item of one gold chain worth Rs. 30, which has been allowed by the learned District Judge, should really have been three gold chains worth Rs. 90. It is rather absurd that I should have to deal with a matter of this kind; but, however, as the learned District Judge himself has pointed out, the appellant in his own evidence contradicted himself in regard to this matter. At one stage he said that there were three gold chains left by his grand-parents, at another stage he said that there was only one. It is quite clear that he really knows nothing about the matter, and that he entered these items in the schedule merely on hearsay. The learned Sub-Divisional Judge cut the Gordian knot with regard to the movable properties by making an assessment of their total value and then giving the appellant a fourth share therein. This, of course, he was not entitled to do. If he decided to go into this question as to the movable and immovable properties comprised in the estate, it was essential that he should deal with each item separately and the evidence in respect thereto. That he did not do in regard to the movable properties, and it was unfortunately left to the learned District Judge on appeal to consider all this evidence. His decision that only one gold chain could be allowed is a reasonable decision with which I do not propose to interfere.

The third question that has been raised before me is that in the decree of the District Court the appellant's right to item No 21 of Sch. "B" attached to the plaint, a debt of Rs. 100 which has been recovered by the respondents, has not been allowed. The appellant was allowed a sum of Rs. 25 on this account by the Sub-Divisional Court and this item was not disputed on appeal to the District Court. Consequently, it must be allowed, and it is clear that it has been omitted from Sch. "C" of the schedules attached to the decree of the District Court by mistake. This is a mistake which could have been corrected at once by an application to the District Court for amendment of the decree, and there was no necessity to come up to this Court on appeal in regard to this matter. I notice, moreover, that there are two other errors occurring in the decree of the District Court which require correction. The properties mentioned in Schs. "B" and "C" attached to the decree are described in the decree as immovable properties. They are, of course, movable properties, and the decree of the District Court must be corrected in this sense, as it should also be corrected by adding this recovered debt of Rs. 100 to Sch. "C."

In the result the appellant actually fails

(1) 110 Ind. Cas. 646; A I R 1928 Rang. 220; 6 R 203.

in this appeal, for as I have said that point on which he succeeds is a point which could have been rectified by an application to the District Court for amendment of the decree. Consequently he must pay the respondents' costs of the appeal to this Court, Advocate's fee in this Court three gold mohurs.

D. Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152, 153, O I, r. 8—Powers under—Discretion—Suit in representative capacity by one creditor—Other creditors brought on record as plaintiffs by officer of Court mistaking order of Court—Dismissal of suit with costs—Amendment of decree and plaint for removal of names of other creditors from array of plaintiffs—Whether should be allowed.

The language of ss. 152 and 153, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to cover the correction of mistakes and errors in any proceeding in a suit. Extensive powers may be exercised under the provisions of ss 151, 152 and 153 of the Code, and the question whether these extensive powers ought to be exercised in any given case is a matter purely within the discretion of the Court with reference to the facts of each particular case. [p. 238, col. 1.]

The plaintiff in a suit applied for permission to sue on behalf of all creditors of the defendant. All that was required of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, was to have a notice of the institution of the suit sent at the expense of the plaintiff to all such persons whom the plaintiff wanted to implead either by personal service or where from the number of persons or any other cause such service was not reasonably possible, by public advertisement as the Court in each case might direct. But although no order was passed by the Court making them plaintiffs, the peshkar of the Court amended the plaint by bringing them on record. The suit was ultimately dismissed with costs and the defendants applied in execution for recovery of their costs not only from the plaintiff but also from the other creditors who had been wrongly impleaded as plaintiffs:

Held, that Court neither intended nor had the jurisdiction to saddle the other creditors with the costs of the suit and that this was a fit case in which the High Court should exercise the powers vested in them under ss 151, 152 and 153, Civil Procedure Code and their names should be removed from the array of the plaintiffs in the plaint and the decree. C. App. for revision of an order of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated September 6, 1934.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and P. D. Rustogi, for the Applicant.

Messrs. R. K. Bose, Muhammad Nazir-ud-din and Govind Behari Lal, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision under s 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure against an order dated September 6, 1934, passed by Mr. Muhammad Abdul Haq, Additional District Judge of Lucknow, dismissing the application of the applicant Musaddi Lal for amendment of the judgment and decree dated March 16, 1933.

The facts out of which this application for revision arises are briefly as follows:

One Dal Chand was adjudged an insolvent on October 30, 1928. Among his scheduled creditors were The Kathiwar Ahmedabad Banking Corporation, Ltd., (in liquidation), and some other creditors. The creditor Bank mentioned above, filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Malihabad against Dal Chand and Radha Shiam for a declaration that the transfer of certain property made by the insolvent Dal Chand in favour of Radhe Shiam was void in law. On March 14, 1932, the creditor Bank, (in liquidation), through its Official Liquidator Mr. Sarabai Dalal, applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, for permission to sue on behalf of and for the benefit of the other scheduled creditors, who were mentioned in the petition as Ram Narain, Musaddi Lal, R. S. Phool Chand Rai, and Narain Das. Notices were served on these four persons but only Ram Narain appeared in Court and declined the offer of the plaintiff Bank to sue for his benefit. On August 9, 1932, the Subordinate Judge passed the following order:

"The plaintiff applies for permission to sue on behalf of all creditors of the defendant No. 2 (Dal Chand). Out of the four creditors besides the plaintiff, one Narain Das refuses his consent to the suit. The other three creditors are served and they do not turn up. I presume their consent."

"ORDER."

"I permit the plaintiff to continue the suit for the rest of the three creditors, that is, Ram Narain, Musaddi Lal and Rai Sahib Phool Chand Rai."

No order was passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in his own hand-writing making Ram Narain, Musaddi Lal and R. S. Phool Chand Rai plaintiffs in the suit, but the Peshkar of the Court somehow misinterpreted the Court's order of August 9, 1932, and thought that the names of the three secured creditors of the defendant Dal Chand were to be brought on the record as plaintiffs, and he accordingly amended the plaint and got the Subordinate Judge to initial the amendment. No such amendment was necessary under O. I, r. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and these persons, Ram Narain Musaddi Lal and R. S. Phool Chand Rai could not be made plaintiffs against their will and without their consent. No notice was sent to these persons informing them that they were to be made plaintiffs in the suit brought by the Kathiawar and Ahmedabad Banking Corporation, Ltd., against Dal Cand, and Radhe Shiam.

The suit of the plaintiff Bank was ultimately dismissed with costs by the Subordinate Judge by his order, dated March 16, 1933. The heading of the suit as given in the judgment is "The Kathiawar and Ahmedabad Banking Corporation, Ltd., through its Official Liquidator, plaintiff v. Dal Chand & Radhe Shiam defendants," and throughout the judgment the learned Subordinate Judge considered that in the suit in which he was writing judgment, there was only one plaintiff, that is, the Official Liquidator of the creditor Bank. Everywhere in the judgment he uses the singular word "plaintiff" and not the plural "plaintiffs". In the decree, however, the decree-writer of the Court finding that the plaint showed four plaintiffs, prepared the decree in conformity with the plaint.

Subsequently when the defendants applied in execution for recovery of their costs not only from the creditor Bank but also from Babu Ram Narain, Musaddi Lal and R. S. Phool Chand Rai, who had been wrongly impleaded as plaintiffs, then the applicant Musaddi Lal realised that he was saddled with costs in a suit which he had never filed, and to the prosecution of which he had never given his consent. He therefore applied under the provisions of ss. 151, 152 and 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure for amendment of the decree dated March 16, 1933. The learned Additional District Judge of Lucknow declined to amend the judgment and decree holding that there was no clerical or arithmetical mistake in the judgment and decree, and that the Subordinate Judge had deliberately passed an order impleading the applicant Musaddi Lal as a plaintiff, and although that order may have been wrong, the applicant could only get it corrected by filing a regular appeal against, or for a review of that order. He therefore rejected the application of Musaddi Lal on September 6, 1934. Dissatisfied with the order of the learned Additional District Judge the applicant has filed the present application for revision under s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In our opinion this application must be granted. Section 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down that a Court may, at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise, as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceedings in a suit and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding. It is clear from the facts of the case cited above that there was in the present case no order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in his own hand-writing impleading the applicant Musaddi Lal as a plaintiff. In fact no such order could have been legally passed by the Court. All that was required of the Court under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, was to have a notice of the institution of the suit sent at the expense of the plaintiff to all such persons whom the plaintiff wanted to implead either by personal service or where from the number of person or any other cause such service was not reasonably possible by public advertisement as the Court in each case might direct.

The applicant Musaddi Lal no doubt received notice that the Kathiawar and Ahmedabad Banking Corporation, Ltd., which was itself in liquidation, had filed a suit against the insolvent Dal Chand. Musaddi Lal did not think it necessary to appear in Court nor was he bound to do so. The costs of a suit brought by a plaintiff in his representative capacity cannot be ordered to be paid by any other person alleged to be interested in the suit on whose behalf the suit might have been brought and indeed the learned Subordinate Judge in dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs made it clear that he was only referring to the plaintiff Bank, namely, the Kathiawar and Ahmedabad Banking Corporation, Ltd., (in liquidation), which was the sole plaintiff in the present suit although it was purported to have been filed in a representative capacity on behalf of all the scheduled creditors of the insolvent Dal Chand.

As pointed out by Sir Dinshaw Mulla in his standard Commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure, 10th Edn., pp. 465 and 466, the heading of a suit brought in a representative capacity under O. I, r. 8,

Civil Procedure Code, is to be as follows

"A B on behalf of himself and all other creditors of X Y..... ....Plaintiff v.

C. D.... ....Defendant."

Had the learned Subordinate Judge in the present case adopted this heading in his judgment in the preparation of the decree no mistake would have arisen, and the applicant Musaddi Lal would not have been saddled with costs in respect of a suit which he never filed and to which he was no party. The object of instituting a representative suit under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, is to create the bar of res judicata by reason of Explanation (6) to s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure [See Kumaravelu Chettiar v. Ramaswami Ayyar (1)]. But in any case the persons whom the plaintiff represents cannot be saddled with the costs of the suit if the plaintiff should fail to win his case. The learned Counsel for the opposite party referred to a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Saidogir v. Deo Dat Misir (2), as also to another Bench decision of the same High Court reported as Aziz Ullah v. Court of Wards, Shahjehanpur (3).

In our opinion the facts of these cases are entirely different from those of the present case. The language of ss. 152 and 153, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to cover the correction of mistakes and errors in any proceeding in a suit. It has been held that extensive powers may be exercised under the provisions of ss. 151 and 152 and 153 of the Code and the question whether these extensive powers ought to be exercised in any given case is a matter purely within the discretion of the Court with reference to the facts of each particular case.

As was pointed out by a learned Judge of the Bombay High Court in Bika Bai v. Hariba Raghuji (4), in giving leave to the plaintiff under O. I, r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, for suing in a representative capacity, the Court should exercise caution before it makes persons liable for large sums who are not actually parties to a suit nor have personally authorised it, and that in drawing up an order for costs in a repesentative action it should be stated whether the representing party alone or all other members of the representative party were to bear the costs of the suit assuming there was juris liction in the particular case to make such an order.

In our opinion upon the facts of this particular case the learned Subordinate Judge neither intended nor had jurisdiction to saddle the applicant Musaddi Lal with the costs of the suit filed by the creditor Bank against the defendants. We consider that this is eminently a fit case in which we should exercise the powers vested in us under the provisions of ss. 151, 152 and 153 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We, therefore, allow this application for revision with costs, set aside the order of the learned Additional District Judge, dated September 6, 1934, and grant the application for amendment of the decree dated March 16, 1933. The plaint filed by the Kathiawar and Ahmedabad Banking Corporation, Ltd., should also be amended and the names of Ram Narain, Musaddi Lal and Rai Sahib Phool Chand Rai wrongly entered therein should be removed from the array of plaintiffs. Their names should also be removed from the decree dated March 16, 1933. The judgment of March 16, however, in our opinion needs no amendment since the learned Subordinate Judge has throughout his judgment made reference only to the plaintiff Bank.

No orders are necessary on Civil Miscellaneous Applications Nos. 70 and 72 of 1935 as we have in disposing of this application for revision virtually granted the relief sought by it. The stay order dated January 22, 1935, is hereby vacated.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 115, s 20—Contract for building construction—Before completion contract given to another—Original contractor suing for value of work done—Limitation—

Payment as a matter of grace and not towards admitted debt—Limitation, if saved.

A contract for the construction of a building was given to the plaintiff but before the completion of the work the contract was given to another person. The plaintiff sued for the value of the work already done :

Held, that Art. 115 of the Limitation Act applied and the period of three years began from the date of the breach of contract. Mahomed Ghasita v. Siraj ud-din (1), referred to.

Limitation is not saved by a payment made as a matter of grace and not towards any admitted debt

F. C. A. from the decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated January 3, 1927.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal and Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. C. Mahajan and Ajit Parshad, for the Respondents.

Bhide, J.—The plaintiff in this case had undertaken a contract on February 23, 1920, to build a bungalow for the defendants. The bungalow was to be finished within five months. But the work was progressing very slowly and the market rates for materials also having risen in the meantime, a fresh contract was entered into by the parties on May 21, 1920, the plaintiff thereby agreed to complete the building by December 31, 1920. Even thereafter, however, the progress of the work was found to be very unsatisfactory and the plaintiff was, therefore, asked by the defendants to stop the work about June, or July 1920 and the rest of the work was carried out through another contractor.

The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff on December 23, 1924, for recovery of Rs. 17,961-8-0 as the value of the work done by him and the price of the materials left by him on the spot when he was asked to stop the work together with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem. It may be noted here that no damages were claimed on account of breach of contract by the defendants. The plaintiff apparently realized that he could make no grievance in respect of his having been asked to stop the work.

The defendants denied the plaintiff's claim in toto, pleading inter alia that the plaintiff had already been overpaid and that his suit was barred by time. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit has found in favour of the defendants on both these points and dismissed the suit. From this decision plaintiff has appealed.

The first important question in this case is that of limitation. The suit as framed seems to be clearly governed by Art. 115 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act (See Muhammad Ghasita v. Siraj-ud-Din (1), and the period of limitation was three years from the date of the breach of the contract. The plaintiff himself realized that his suit was prima facie barred by time and in para. 6 of the plaint he, therefore, relied on certain subsequent payments towards the debt alleged to have been made by the defendants which according to him saved limitation. These payments were stated to be as follows: "(i) Rs. 25 in November 1922, in cash; (ii) Rs. 25 in December 1922 by a cheque, (iii) Rs. 25 in August 1924 in cash, (iv) Rs. 25 in November and December 1924, in cash."

These payments with the exception of (2) have not been proved and the only point which requires decision in connection with the question of limitation is whether the payment of Rs. 25 made by a cheque in December 1922, can serve to bring the suit within limitation. According to s. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, this payment cannot help the plaintiff unless it was made in part payment of the principal of the debt as alleged by him. The burden of proof lay on the plaintiff and after carefully considering the evidence on the record it seems to my mind perfectly clear that he has failed to discharge it. The cheque for Rs. 25 on which reliance has been placed has not been produced and there is no documentary evidence of any kind on the record to show that the cheque was in fact paid towards the principal of the debt now claimed by the plaintiff. Mumtaz Hasan Khan defendant has stated in the witness-box that he took some 'Bajri' and paint from the plaintiff and the cheque was given in payment of these articles. It was urged that this statement could not be believed as the plaintiff is not a dealer in these articles but the plaintiff is a contractor and I do not see that there is anything inherently improbable in his having supplied these articles from his stock. In any case the burden of proof was as stated already on the plaintiff and it was for him to establish that the payment was made towards the debt, which forms the subject-matter of this suit. The plaintiff is now claiming a sum of over rupees seventeen thousand and it seems prima facie difficult to believe that this petty payment of Rs. 25 could have been offered or accepted as part payment of this debt if it were due. The plaintiff's explanation on this point was that he received Rs. 25 in 1922 as the defendant (Mumtaz Hasan Khan) suggested that he should carry on his expenses with the same and he would settle with him later and that he accepted Rs. 25 and Rs. 35 from him in 1924, i. e., two years later with the same suggestion (vide p. 34 of the printed record). The explanation is, on the face, of it absurd.

The plaintiff is apparently undertaking works consisting thousands of rupees and it can scarcely be believed that such petty sums could have been offered to the plaintiff to enable him to carry on his expenses or that he would have been content to accept them as part payment of the debt now claimed by him. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff drew our attention to a letter written by defendant Mumtaz Hasan Khan to Khan Bahadur Pirzada Muhammad Hussain Khan marked as Ex. P. 6 which is printed at p. 84 of the paper-book and urged that the plaintiff had acknowledged his liability in this letter. But this letter instead of being an "acknowledgment" appears to me to be a clear repudiation of liability by the defendant Mumtaz Hasan Khan. Mumtaz Hasan Khan stated plainly in his letter that the plaintiff had not only been paid to the last farthing but that something was due from him. If he offered to pay him a little more it was only as a matter of grace and for the sake of the recommendation of Khan Bahadur Pirzada Muhammad Hussain Khan. I do not see how this letter can possibly be looked upon as an acknowledgment of any liability. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff drew our attention to Mani Ram v. Roop Chand (2), in which an admission as to the existence of a mutual open and current account was held to be sufficient for the purposes of s. 19 of the Indian Limitation Act but here there was no admission of the existence of any account or debt. As stated already, Mumtaz Hasan Khan said in the clearest possible language in this letter that nothing whatever was due to the plaintiff. This letter was written on February 3, 1922, i. e., some ten months before the payment of Rs. 25 by cheque which is not relied on. There is nothing on the record to connect that payment with this letter but the utmost that can perhaps be said in favour of the plaintiff is that that may have been made to Mumtaz Hasan Khan in pursuance of his promise to pay a little more. But even if he did so the payment was evidently made as a matter of grace and not towards any admitted debt. Moreover, the plaintiff had to prove that it was a part payment of the debt and that any balance was expressly or impliedly admitted by the defendants to be still due, but there is no evidence on the record on this point also.

In my judgment the plaintiff has entirely failed to prove the requirements of s. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act in connection with the payment of Rs. 25 by cheque in December 1922 on which alone reliance was placed before us and in the circumstances his suit was rightly held to be barred by time. The learned Subordinate Judge has found on merits also that the plaintiff had failed to establish his belated claim but as the suit appears to be clearly time-barred, it would be useless to enter into any discussion of the merits of the plaintiff's claim. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Rangi Lal, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Suit of nature cognizable by Small Cause Court—Defence, nature of, if makes any difference as to nature of suit—Suit for damages for cutting of and appropriation of fruit of, trees—Defence that land on which trees stood did not belong to plaintiffs—S. 102, if applies—Second appeal, if lies.

Section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes irrespective of what defence is put up in the case.

A suit for damages in regard to the cutting of two seeshum trees and appropriation of the fruit of mango trees is of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The defence that the land on which the trees stood did not belong to the plaintiffs makes no difference so far as the nature of the suit is concerned. Section 102, Civil Procedure Code, applies to it and no second appeal is competent. Allah Bux v. Nurul Hasan (1), relied on, Mirza Dilbar Husain v. Sadruddin Chowdhury (2), distinguished.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ali Hasan and Balbhaddar Sahai, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for damages in regard to the cutting of two sheesham trees and appropriation of the fruit of mango trees.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that the suit being of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, no second appeal lies under s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The preliminary objection is in my opinion sound. It cannot be denied that the suit was of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that as the suit involved a question of title to immovable property, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to try it and, that therefore, s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not apply to it. No doubt the appellant's contention was that the land on which the trees in question stood did not belong to the plaintiffs-respondents but so far as the nature of the suit is concerned, I do not think the defence makes any difference. The case of Allah Bux v. Nural Hasan (1), was very similar to the present case. In it the claim was for price of a fallen tree and as a question of title was involved, the plaint was returned for presentation to the ordinary Civil Court under s. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. It was held that the nature of the suit continued to be a Small Cause Court one in spite of the transfer of the case to the ordinary Civil Court and that, therefore, a second appeal was barred under s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Counsel for the appellant also sought to invoke the aid of Art. 35 (ii) of the Second Schedule of the Small Cause Courts Act and it was argued that as the facts alleged in the plaint showed as if the appellant was guilty of a criminal offence, the suit was not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. A similar plea was taken in the Calcutta case of Mirza Dilbar Husain v. Sadruddin Chowdhury (2), but it was held that the claim in that case, which was also for price of trees alleged to have been wrongfully cut away by the defendants and in which also arose a question of title to the land under the trees, was cognizable by the Small Cause Court and that, therefore, no second appeal lay under s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It appears to me that s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes irrespective of what defence is put up in the case. As noted above, it cannot be denied that so far as the relief claimed in the suit is concerned, the suit was of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and as such s. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to it.

The preliminary objection is allowed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Criminal Revision No. 1017 of 1934

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

TAYAB AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—RESPONDENTS

Criminal trial — Sentence — Substantial but light sentence—Interference—Propriety— Practice (Lahore High Court).

Where the sentence though light is substantial, it is not the practice of the Lahore High Court to interfere with it.

Cr. R. reported by the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated July 16, 1934.

Facts.—The above-mentioned nine accused, on conviction by Sheikh Abdul Ali, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the First Class, in the Rawalpindi district, were sentenced, by order dated May 31, 1934, under s. 412, Penal Code, to two years' rigorous imprisonment each; and a revision application has been put in for enhancement of the sentences.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds: The main grounds for enhancement are that the evidence on the file would have justified the finding that the nine accused were actually guilty of commiting a dacoity and should have been convicted of the major instead of the minor charge. However although I myself have a strong suspicion that the accused were in fact the actual dacoits, I do not think that the evidence on the file was sufficiently strong to warrant their convictions under s. 395, as I have held in dealing with the appeals of these persons, and thus I do not think that this can be put forward as a ground for enhancement of the punishment. However the view of the law is clearly that s. 412 deals with a much more serious offence than s. 411 and the sentence of two years, which has been imposed, is not even equal to the maximum sentence under s. 411, and I thus think the sentences are much too lenient.

I accordingly forward the revision to the High Court with the recommendation that the sentences, on each of the accused be increased to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

Order.—The sentence, though on the light side, is substantial and in such cases it is not the practice of this Court to interfere. I therefore reject the revision petition and direct that the records be returned.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 77, 100—Scope of s. 77—Suit against defendants as trespassers—Court finding them to be tenants-at-will—Suit becomes cognizable in Revenue Court only—Duty of Civil Court to return plaint for presentation before Collector—Passing of decree without observing provisions for ejectment—Decree, if can be registered as decree of Revenue Court.

All suits by a landlord to eject a tenant can only be instituted and heard and determined by a Revenue Court under s. 77 (3) (c) of the Punjab Tenancy Act. Although the defendants are described as trespassers in the plaint, when the Court comes to the conclusion that defendants were holding the land as tenants-at-will, and, therefore, could not claim that they were in adverse possession of the land as against the proprietors, the suit becomes one in which it is necessary to decide a matter which under s. 77 can only be heard and decided by a Revenue Court, and the Civil Court should then return the plaint for presentation to the Collector. Nawab v. Azura (2) and Murid Hussain v. Fazal Ilahi (3), relied on.

A definite procedure is prescribed for the ejectment of tenants under ss. 41, 42 and 43 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. If a decree is passed in favour of a plaintiff without observing the provisions regarding the ejectment of a tenant, it must be held that the tenant was prejudiced by the mistake as to jurisdiction and it would be inequitable in these circumstances to register the decree of the Civil Court as a decree of the Revenue Court.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated August 31, 1931.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellants.
Mr. Mohsin Shah, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of certain land instituted by the plaintiffs-appellants against the defendants-respondents on August 8, 1929. The allegations in the plaint were that Musammat Mehran, widow of Shah Wali, was the occupancy tenant of the land in dispute, under s. 6 of the Tenancy Act, and that on her dying childless, the occupancy rights terminated and the land reverted to the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 3 to 129, who were proprietors. The land was mutated in the name of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 3 to 129, and thereupon, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 brought a declaratory suit to establish their occupancy rights on the strength of a gift alleged to have been made by Musammat Mehran in their favour in 1918. That suit was dismissed, and the plaintiffs prayed in their plaint in the present suit that as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had refused to transfer possession to them they must be treated as trespassers and a decree for possession of the land in dispute should be passed in their favour. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are the only contesting defendants, stated inter alia that they were the proprietors of the land and that they had been in adverse possession for over 30 years. On January 27, 1931, the defendants presented an application stating that as they had been shown as tenants-at-will regarding the land in dispute the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The trial Court decided that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of the land in dispute, and that the claim of the defendants as regards proprietorship was unsustainable. It also held that the latest jamabandi showed that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were paying rent in cash, and were recorded as tenants-at-will. In view of this fact the trial Court came to the conclusion that the defendants never possessed the land adversely to the plaintiffs, and that the suit was, therefore, not barred by limitation. The trial Court further found that as the plaintiffs had brought this suit against the defendants who were described as trespassers, the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The defendants preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge who held that according to the findings of the trial Court the defendants must be regarded as tenants-at-will; and that as the tenants-at-will could not be dispossessed by a Civil Court, the suit was one cognizable by a Revenue Court. On this preliminary point he accepted the appeal, and setting aside the decree of the trial Court returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Against this order the plaintiffs have preferred this second appeal to this Court.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants that as the defendants were described as trespassers in the plaint and as they claimed to be the proprietors of the land, the suit was one between proprietors and trespassers and that the provisions of s. 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, were inapplicable and the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Reliance was placed on Ghulam v. Jowala Singh (1), where it was observed that if the defendant according to the allegations in the plaint is not a tenant of the plaintiff but a mere trespasser and claims to succeed to the land in dispute as the alleged collateral of the deceased occupancy tenant, the suit is not one which can be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court. It was further contended that in any case the District Judge should have adopted the procedure prescribed by s. 100 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, and ought to have submitted the records to the High Court so that the decree of the trial Court could be registered as a decree of the Revenue Court.

On behalf of the respondents it was submitted that proviso 1 to Sub-s. (3) of s. 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, was applicable to the facts of the present case. The trial Court when dealing with the question of limitation had held that the latest jamabandi showed that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 paid rent in cash and had been recorded as tenants-at-will of the plaintiffs. It was urged that in these circumstances the defendants must be regarded as tenants-at-will of the plaintiffs, and that it could not be said that they ever held the land adversely. It was maintained that as soon as the trial Court had arrived as this conclusion, it became necessary for it to decide a matter which under s. 77, could only be determined by a Revenue Court, and that at that time the Civil Court should have endorsed upon the plaint, the nature of the matter for decision and the particulars required by O. VII, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, and ought to have returned the plaint for presentation to the Collector.

All suits by a landlord to eject a tenant can only be instituted and heard and determined by a Revenue Court under s. 77 (3) (e) of the Punjab Tenancy Act. The defendants no doubt originally pleaded that they were proprietors of the land in dispute but on the January 27, 1933, they adopted the alternative plea that they were recorded as tenants-at-will in the revenue records, and that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit of the plaintiffs. As soon as the trial Court came to the conclusion that the defendants were holding the land as tenants-at-will, and therefore could not claim that they were in adverse possession of the land as against the proprietors, the suit became one in which it was necessary to decide a matter which under s. 77, could only be heard and decided by a Revenue Court. It was held in Nawab v. Arura (2), that where in a suit for possession on the allegation that the defendant was a trespasser, it becomes necessary, on the plea of the defendant that he was an occupancy tenant, to adjudicate as to the status of the defendants as occupancy tenant the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was ousted and the suit became one cognizable by a Revenue Court only. It was held by a Division Bench of this Court in Murid Hussain v. Fazal Ilahi (3) that when after having entertained the suit the Court reached a point in the trial at which it holds that the plaintiff is a tenant and is suing as such, the proviso to s. 77 takes effect, and makes it incumbent on the Court to return the plaint for presentation to the Collector. Similarly if the Court finds that the defendant is a tenant-at-will of the plaintiff, it must follow the procedure laid down in proviso (1) to s. 77 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the learned District Judge has arrived at a correct conclusion, and that on the finding of the trial Court on Issue No. 3 the suit is one which involves a point which can be heard and decided by a Revenue Court only.

The provisions of s. 100 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, are not applicable to the present case. A definite procedure is prescribed for the ejectment of tenants under ss. 41, 42 and 43 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. If a decree is passed in favour of a plaintiff without observing the provisions regarding the ejectment of a tenant, it must be held that the tenant was prejudiced by the mistake as to jurisdiction and it would be inequitable in these circumstances to register the decree of the Civil Court as a decree of the Revenue Court.

For the foregoing reasons I dismiss the appeal, but in view of all the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Appeal from Original Decree No. 44 of 1931

February 1, 1935

FAZL ALI AND ROWLAND, JJ.

SITAL RAUT AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

ADALAT RAUT AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Suit for declaration that plaintiff is daughter's son of deceased—Plaintiff not pressing for relief that deeds executed by deceased's widows were not binding on him—Whether fatal to suit—Pleadings—Declaration under s. 42—Discretion of trial Court—When can be interfered with—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 6, Sch. I, Arts. 125, 120—Suit for declaration after death of widows whose alienation is challenged—Limitation—Minority of plaintiff—Suit within three years of majority — Plaintiff, if entitled to benefit of s. 6.

Where the plaintiff is the person who will succeed to the estate of his maternal grandfather S and it cannot be seriously argued that the passing of the bulk of the estate into the hands of persons who had no right to it did not involve any danger to the estate, his suit should not be thrown out on the technical ground that the plaintiff while asking for a declaration about his being the son for the daughter of S did not press for the further relief that the deed of gift executed by the widows of S should be declared to be not binding on him. Janakiammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (4), and Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narain Singh (5), applied. [p. 246, col. 2.]

Nor can the suit be thrown out merely on the ground that the plaintiff had not stated in so many words in the plaint that the persons in possession, the descendants of the alienees, had either denied or were interested in denying his title. [p. 246, col. 1.]

The matter of granting a declaration claimed under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is one within the descretion of the Court. So once the trial Court has, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, granted the declaration to the plaintiff under that section, the Appellate Court should not, as a rule, reverse the decree, unless it finds that the discretion has been improperly exercised. Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (3) relied on. [p. 247, cols. 1 & 2.]

A suit for a declaration filed after the death of the widows whose alienation is challenged does not fall under Art. 125, Limitation Act, but is governed by Art. 120 under which Article read with s. 6, the plaintiff will be entitled to bring his suit within three years of his attaining majority. Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (6), and Govinda Pillai v. Thayammal (7), relied on. A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Champaran, dated December 23, 1930.

Messrs. P. Dayal and K. P. Upadhaya, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and G. C. Das, for the Respondents.

Fazl Ali, J.—The circumstances giving rise to this appeal are briefly these:

One Surujman Raut died leaving two widows Musammat Deorati and Musammat Markathi and in the year 1898 they executed two deeds of gift, one in favour of Musammat Dhanwati, a daughter of Surujman Raut by his first wife Deorati in respect of 5 bighas 7 kathas of land; and the other in favour of Udit Raut, an agnate of Surujman in respect of the remaining property left by Surujman. The 1st defendant in this action is Musammat Dhanwati, the daughter of Surujman. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the descendants of a brother of Udit Raut and are admittedly in possession of the properties which had been transferred to Udit under one of the deeds of gift. It is common ground that Musammat Dhanwati married three persons one after another, their names being Lobhi, Budhan and Ramballi. The plaintiff's case in the plaint is that he is the son of Musammat Dhanwati by her second husband Budhan, that on the death of the two widows of Surujman Musammat Dhawati became entitled to those properties also which the former had transferred to Udit; that the failure on the part of Musammat Dhanwati to recover possession of the properties from Udit or defendants Nos. 2 to 4 amounted to an alienation and that he was entitled to recover possession of those properties from defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The plaint concludes with a prayer for the following reliefs among others:—

(1) That it may be determined by the Court that the property mentioned in Sch. I forms part of the estate of Surujman Raut, grandfather of the plaintiff; and that after the death of Musammat Markathi and Musammat Deorati, grandmothers of the plaintiff, defendants Nos. 2 to 4 had no right thereto and that defendant No. 1 had no right to allow defendants Nos. 2 to 4 to retain possession thereof.

(2) That on the adjudication of the above facts, possession may be awarded to the plaintiffs over the property of defendant No. 1 by dispossessing defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

Defendant No. 1 supported the plaintiff but defendants Nos. 2 to 4 contended that he was not the son of Musammat Dhanwati; that he had no cause of action to bring the suit, that the suit was not maintainable and that it was barred by limitation.

At the trial the lawyers appearing for the parties made certain admissions; the Pleader for the plaintiff admitting that the plaintiff was not entitled to any of the reliefs prayed for except the declaration that he was the daughter's son of Surujman Raut and the Pleader for the defendants admitting that the right of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 under the deed of gift executed by the widows of Surujman in favour of Udit Raut legally came to an end with the death of the widows in 1906 and the position of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 since that time became that of trespassers who were liable to ejectment by the next reversioner on the death of defendant No. 1.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was the son of Musammat Dhanwati and gave a declaration to that effect, overruling the defendants' objection that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a suit for such declaration.

Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 have now preferred this appeal to this Court from the decree of the Subordinate Judge and it is contended on their behalf—

(1) that the suit for a mere declaration is not maintainable;

(2) that the suit is barred by limitation, and

(3) that the Subordinate Judge has erred in holding that the plaintiff is the son of Musammat Dhanwati.

In contending that the suit is not maintainable, the learned Advocate for the appellant referred to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act which runs as follows:

"Any person entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled and the plaintiff need not, in such suit, ask for any further relief."

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the present suit is not maintainable as in the plaint, there is neither any statement to the effect that the defendants had at any time denied the fact that the plaintiff was the son of Musammat Dhanwati nor has it been said in so many words that the defendants were interested in denying his title. Now, it is true that the plaint does not show that the defendants had ever denied the plaintiff's title, but there can be no doubt from the facts of the case which are set out in the plaint that defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were interested in denying the plaintiff's title and this is also apparent from the written statement of the defendants and from the attitude taken up by them during the trial. The learned Advocate for the appellant relies upon the observation made by this Court in Nirmal Kumar v. Surjan Dusadh (1), that in a declaratory suit a declaration claimed by the plaintiff will not be granted as a rule, unless it is shown that a cloud had been thrown on the title of the plaintiff before the suit was instituted. It is to be remembered that the plaintiff's case is that the bulk of Surujman's estate which should have been in the possession of his mother (who according to him is the rightful heir of Surujman) has passed into the hands of trespassers and it appears to me that on these allegations the plaintiff's suit was clearly maintainable. In Mohesh Chandra Misra v. Nistarini Dassya (2), a suit had been brought for a declaration that an ex parte decree and a sale in execution of that decree were fraudulent and it was argued on behalf of the defendants that there being no present danger to be averted by the declaration asked for and as no cloud had been thrown on the plaintiff's title before the institution of the suit, the suit was not maintainable. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, however, rejected the contention, observing that it could not be suggested in the circumstances of the case that the defendant was not interested in denying the title of the plaintiff or that the plaintiffs had no business to bring him into Court. I am also not prepared to lay down any such rigid rule as I am asked to lay down by the learned Advocate for the appellant that in determining whether the defendant is interested in denying the plaintiff's title, the Court can, in no circumstances, take into consideration the pleading of the defendant. It is enough to point out that in Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (3). their Lordships of the Privy Council did take into consideration the written statement of the defendant and while stating their reasons for refraining from interfering with the decision of the Courts in India observed:

(3) 26 A 238; 31 I A 67; 14 M L J 149; 7 O C 239; 8 C W N 465; 6 Bom L R 495; 8 Sar 625 (P. C.).

"When the appellants came to file their written statement, and thereby to define their position and put their own interpretation upon what had gone before, there was no ambiguity left. It was made clear that they relied upon an alleged title in the first appellant inconsistent with any present or future rights of the respondent or any other reversionary heir."

In my opinion, therefore, the suit could not have been thrown out merely on the ground that the plaintiff had not stated in so many words in the plaint that defendants Nos. 2 to 4 had either denied or were interested in denying his title.

A more serious contention which was advanced on behalf of the appellant was based upon what may be conceded to be a settled rule in this country that the Courts will not, at the instance of a presumptive reversioner, grant declarations which may be unavailing or premature, and reliance is placed in this connection upon the decision of the Privy Council in Janakiammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (4). In that case the plaintiff had brought a suit as a presumptive reversionary heir against a widow in possession of her husband's estate with the avowed object of protecting the property and made charges against the widow of waste, misappropriation and other wrong dealings with the property, but as none of those charges were established, the Privy Council held that he was not entitled to a declaration of his right as a reversionary heir even though his title had been disputed in the suit. Lord Shaw who delivered the judgment in that case observed:

"It follows from this state of the law that it is impossible to predicate at this moment who is the reversionary heir to the deceased proprietor. If the Court of law proceeded to make any declaration of right upon that subject, such a declaration would be subject to being rendered valueless by the development of events. It would not, after events had developed, be even of authority in regulating or declaring the rights of the present respondents as against any other claimant to the character of reversionary heir. A priori, accordingly a declaration of right granted at the present stage would appear to be stamped with something in the nature of futility," and later his Lordship observed:

"In their Lordships' opinion the plaintiff respondent was not entitled to such a declaration. Had waste of, or danger to, the estate been established, the title of the plaintiff to bring those matters before the Court in his representative capacity as a possible reversionary heir would have been allowed, and a decree following upon the finding of fact of such waste or danger would have followed. But the whole of that part of the case has failed. And in their Lordships' opinion the case must accordingly be treated as if the suit had been directed simpliciter to a declaration of the plaintiff's individual right."

This decision must be read with another decision of the Judicial Committee in Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narain Singh (5), and in my opinion the principles laid down in neither of these cases seem to disentitle the plaintiff from getting the declaration which has been given in this particular case. In the present case there can be no doubt that the plaintiff is the person who would succeed to the estate of Surujman Raut on his mother's death and it cannot be seriously argued that the passing of the bulk of the estate into the hands of persons who had no right to it did not involve any danger to the estate. Indeed the learned Advocate for the appellant concedes that the plaintiff would have been entitled to a declaratory decree, if he had also asked for the further relief that the deed of gift executed by the two widows of Surujman Raut was not binding upon him. This relief was in fact substantially asked for by the plaintiff in his plaint and Issue No. 6 was framed by the trial Court to the following effect:—

"Is the deed of gift, dated March 1, 1898, executed by Musammat Deorati and Markathi genuine and valid and is it operative, after their death and binding on the plaintiff?"

It appears, however, that the learned Pleader for the plaintiff for some reason which is not apparent from the record admitted that the plaintiff was not entitled to any of the reliefs except the declaration that he was the daughter's son of Surujman Raut. I, find, however, that notwithstanding this admission the learned Subordinate Judge proceeded to deal with Issue No. 6, and decided it in favour of the plaintiff, though in discussing the issue he once more referred to the admission of the plaintiff's Pleader that he was not entitled to any relief except the declaration as to his being the son of Musammat Dhanwati and also referred to the admission of the defendants' Pleader that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 had, after the death of the two widows of Surujman, become trespassers and were liable to ejectment by the next reversioners of defendant No. 1. It is contended by the learned Advocate for the respondents that it was in view of the latter admission made by the defendants' Pleader that the plaintiff's Pleader did not consider it necessary to press for any relief other than the one that has been granted by the learned Subordinate Judge. However that may be, in the peculiar circumstances of the case and particularly in view of the admission made by the Pleader for the defendants, it appears to me that the suit should not be thrown out on the technical ground that the plaintiff while asking for a declaration about his being the son of Musammat Dhanwati, did not press for the further relief that the deed of gift executed by the two widows of Surujman should be declared to be not binding upon him. There can be no doubt that if the plaintiff is the son of Musammat Dhanwati and if the property in question was that of Surujman Raut, the deed of gift executed by the two widows of Surujman would not be binding on the plaintiff. The learned Advocate for the appellant tried to argue that having regard to certain acts stated in the two deeds of gift, the properties which were the subject-matter of these deeds would appear to be not the exclusive properties of Surujman but also of Udit and Jata as members of the same joint family. However, plausible this case may be, it was not put forward by the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 in their written statement in which they did not traverse the allegation made by the plaintiff in his plaint that the properties which were the subject-matter of the gift were Surujman's properties, but on the other hand founded their title on the deed of gift in favour of Udit Raut, stating that the widows of Surujman were competent to execute it and the deed in question was valid and had conferred an absolute right to the properties in dispute upon defendants No. 2 to 4. In my opinion it cannot be said in the circumstances of the case that the declaration sought by the plaintiff was futile. It was also not premature, because according to the plaintiff the property was already in possession of persons who had no right to it and if the plaintiff had delayed the institution of the suit, the evidence which was available to him might have been lost and in any case if he instituted the suit after the death of Musammat Dhanwati, his mother as is suggested by the learned Advocate for the appellant he could not avail himself of the evidence of Musammat Dhanwati in proving that he is her son. It must also be remembered that the matter of granting a declaration claimed under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is one within the discretion of the Court. So once the trial Court has in the exercise of the diseretion vested in it under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act granted the declaration to the plaintiff under that section, the Appellate Court should not, as a rule, reverse the decree, unless it finds that the discretion has been improperly exercised. This principle was emphasised by the Judicial Committee in Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (3), where their Lordships expressly stated that they were always slow to reverse the decision of the Courts below made in the deliberate exercise of a discretion entrusted to them by law. It appears to me, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit and that this Court should not interfere with the decree passed by the Court below granting them the declaration which they had asked for.

The second question which was raised in this appeal was one of limitation and in this connection the learned Advocate for the appellant was at pains to point out that the suit could not escape the bar of limitation, because the plaintiff was not in existence at the time when the cause of action for the suit arose, that is to say, when the two widows of Surujman executed the deed of gift. It appears to me, however, that the question of limitation does not arise on the facts of the case. The learned Advocate for the appellant sought to apply Art. 125 of the Limitation to the present case but it does not clearly apply, because this suit has been instituted by the plaintiff after the death of Musammat Deorati and Markathi whose alienation is challenged in the suit. As was pointed out in Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (6), and as was also conceded by the learned Pleader for the appellants in the Court below, the Article which is properly applicable to the present case in Art. 120 of the Limitation Act. Now, in this particular case the right to sue could not have accrued to the plaintiff before his birth and, therefore, under Art. 120, read with s. 6 of the Limitation Act the plaintiff was clearly entitled to bring the suit within three years of his attaining majority. This view seems to be supported by Bhagwanta v. Sukhi (6) and Govinda Pillai v. Thayammal (7), in which it has been pointed out that a person who is a minor on the date of the alienation by a widow or is born subsequently during the life of the widow is entitled to the benefit of s. 6 of the Limitation Act. Besides in a number of cases it has been held that the starting point of limitation under Art. 120, is the date on which the circumstances entitling the plaintiff to have his interest guarded first came to his knowledge. In the plaint it is stated that the plaintiff came to know, when he attained majority, that defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were in possession of the bulk of the estate of Surujman Raut and in any case it is evident that he could not have come to know those facts before his birth. It is clear, therefore, that he was entitled to bring the suit within three years of his attaining majority. As to when he attained majority I find that the evidence given by the plaintiff as to his age and the date of his birth is almost one-sided and I have no doubt that the plaintiff's version on this point must be accepted. As the learned Subordinate Judge points out while the plaintiff has stated that he was born in the month of Magh 1336 Fasli Sambat the defendants have not suggested any other date of his birth in their evidence.

The only point which remains to be considered is the question of fact, namely, whether the plaintiff is or is not the son of Musammat Dhanwati. In order to prove his case the plaintiff has examined not only Musammat Dhanwati herself, but also a number of witnesses belonging to the village to which his father Budhan admittedly belonged and their evidence apparently found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge. As a rule this Court is slow to interfere with the decision of the trial Court when it is based upon the oral evidence of witnesses who appeared before it to give their evidence, but in this particular case we have been taken through the entire evidence on the record and we are inclined to agree with the Subordinate Judge's view that the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff is much superior to that adduced on behalf of the defendants. In the first place one cannot overlook the fact that the plaintiff's case is supported by Musammat Dhanwati herself. Musammat Dhanwati's evidence has been criticised on the ground that she has made one or two statements on minor points which seem to be inaccurate and that her statement in cross-examination that she has two young sons living with her is not supported by any other evidence. The alleged inaccuracies, however, are so trivial that it will not serve any useful purpose to discuss them and the matter of the existence of two sons is irrelevant to the present enquiry. It may also be observed that although Musammat Dhanwati's deposition was recorded on December 19, defendant No. 2 who gave his evidence on December 20, did not contradict Dhanwati on the question of her living with two other sons. It is argued that if the plaintiff had been the son of Dhanwati he would have accompanied her when she went to live with Ramballi whom she married after the death of Budhan. This argument though it deserves consideration does not appear to me to be decisive. The plaintiff was at least eight or nine years old by that time and Rambaran who appears to have been an agnate of Budhan and who is said to have taken him back to his father's village may not have liked the boy to live with his mother after she had re-married. Besides, the evidence discloses the fact that Dhanwati soon returned to Piparpatti and began to live with the plaintiff.

I may here refer to two admissions made by D. W. No. 4 Jang Bahadur Raut who is a resident of Piparpatti where Budhan lived and where the plaintiff still lives and who is the only witness among those examined by the defendants who was competent to make a statement about Budhan and the plaintiff. This witness has stated in his cross-examination that the plaintiff was born after Budhan had married defendant No. 1. If this statement is true, it makes the case of the defendant that the plaintiff is the son of Budhan by his former wife Murti, highly improbable even if we accept the statement made by this witness which is entirely opposed to the statement made by the other witnesses that Budhan married Dhanwati during the lifetime of Murti. As a matter of fact it was admitted by D. W. No. 1 that Budhan married Dhanwati one year after Murti's death. The other statement made by this witness which seems to me to support strongly the case of the plaintiff is that the plaintiff was 18 or 19 years of age at the time when the document Ex. B was executed by Ramnarain Bajpai, the first witness for the plaintiff. This document was executed in the year 1925 and if the plaintiff was 18 or 19 years old at that time he must have been born sometime about 1907. Now a reference to Ex. A which is a plaint filed by Musammat Dhanwati in 1907 shows that it was signed by Budhan on her behalf as her husband. This would go to show that the plaintiff was born at the time when Dhanwati was the wife of Budhan. It appears to me, therefore, that the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff is the son of Dhanwati must be upheld and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision Application No. 502 of 1934
December 20, 1934
BENNET, J.
RAM SARAN DAS—PLAINTIFF —APPLICANT
versus
MALLU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —OPPOSITE PARTIES—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XVII, r. 2—Finding as to sufficient cause—Necessity of, under O. IX, r. 13—Case fixed for final hearing—Pleader applying for adjournment and then stating 'no instructions'—Dismissal—Application by way of restoration under O. XVII, r. 2—Whether lies—Remedy of defendant.

Under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that the Court should find that defendants were prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing.

Where on the date fixed for final hearing of a suit, the pleader for defendants asked for an adjournment which was refused and he then stated he had no instructions and the case was heard and decided:

Held, that as the pleader was engaged in making an application it must be held that the defendants did appear on the date in question and hence no application by way of restoration under O. XVII, r. 2 lay and that the only remedy which defendants had against the decree was by way of appeal.

C. R. App. against the order of the Munsif, Moradabad, dated August 11, 1934.

Mr. S. N. Seth, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision by a plaintiff against an order of a learned Munsif restoring a suit which was dismissed ex-parte. The defendants made an affidavit alleging various grounds, but the Munsif has merely recorded:

"The defendants' Counsel had then stated that he had no instructions from his client. Ground is consequently sufficient."

The Munsif has not recorded any reason why the defendants' Counsel had no instructions or why the defendants were absent. Under O. IX, r. 13, it is necessary that the Munsif should find that defendants were prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing.

Another point was taken in ground No. 1 of the revision that the Court below had no jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree and the remedy open to the defendants was only an appeal against the decree as it stood. The defendants entered an appearance in the suit and filed a written statement. Therefore the case did not come prima facie under O. IX, r. 6. The date in question on which defendants were held to have failed to appear was the date which was fixed for final hearing in the suit. It was therefore, a date which came under O. XVII, r. 2 as a date to which the hearing of the suit had been adjourned. It is shown from the order-sheet that on that date the pleader for defendants asked for an adjournment which was refused and he then stated that he had no instructions. In the Explanation to r. 2 of O. XVII it is stated that no party shall be deemed to have failed to appear if he is either present or is represented in Court by an agent or pleader, though engaged only for the purpose of making application. The pleader for defendants was engaged in making an application and therefore I must hold that the defendants did appear on the date in question. All that happened was that they did not produce their evidence and the case was heard and decided. No application by way of restoration under O. XVIII, r. 2, which applies the provisions of O. IX, therefore lies as the defendants must be held to have actually appeared. The order therefore of the lower Court allowing restoration must be set aside. The only remedy which the defendants had against the decree was by way of appeal.

For these reasons I set aside the order of the lower Court and allow this civil revision with costs.

S. C. A. from a decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 107 of 1928.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee, S. Y. Abhyankar and S. R. Parulekar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These appeals which have been heard together arise out of two Suits Nos. 84 and 85 of 1925 filed by the appellant against the respondents to recover possession of certain lands leased to them by him. The lands belonged originally to two brothers Gopal and Martand, sons of one Girmaji Yardi and distant cousins of the appellant. Suit No. 84 related to the lands which had originally belonged to Martand, and Suit No. 85 to those which had belonged to Gopal. The history of the lands in the two suits is different, and it is therefore necessary to state the facts with regard to each separately.

Martand had mortgaged his entire separated half share to his brother Gopal on October 27, 1896, by a possessory mortgage. Within a month after this, on November 18, 1896, he sold his rights in the lands to the appellant's brother Ganesh Raghunath Yardi by a sale-deed (Ex. 84). In March 1901, Ganesh mortgaged the lands to respondent No. 1 and his brother Sadu and to Rakhma, the father of respondent No. 2, with possession, for Rs. 1,000. In 1910 he instituted Suit No. 378 of 1910 against the respondents to redeem the mortgage of March 1901. The appellant and his brother Govindrao were co-defendants in that suit. During the pendency of the suit Ganesh died and the appellant and his brother Govindrao were substituted as plaintiffs. On July 4, 1912, a decree was passed by which the plaintiffs in that suit (i. e., the present appellant and his brother) had to pay Rs. 625 and costs to the mortgagees (i. e., the present respondents) within six months, and the respondents were ordered to restore possession of the lands to the appellant and Govindrao. The decretal amount was paid off by the plaintiffs before the stipulated period and the defendants transferred possession by passing the rent-note (Ex. 25) to the plaintiff, i. e., the present appellant on December 16, 1912. That rent-note forms the basis of Suit No. 84.

Gopal died some time before 1900 and the lands belonging to him were, after his death, mortgaged with possession by his mother Laxmibai and his widow Sitabai to two persons Bhawani valad Punjaji Pachora and Vithu valad Raoji Lonare on January 16, 1900. In November of the same year Laxmibai and Sitabai sold the whole of Gopal's share to the appellant's brother Ganesh by a sale-deed (Ex. 81). Ganesh filed Suit No. 377 of 1910 against the heirs of the original mortgagees for redemption. He died during the pendency of the suit, and the appellant and his brother, who had been on the record as defendants, were substituted as plaintiffs. The suit ended in a compromise decree passed on June 5, 1912, by which the appellant and his brother Govindrao were ordered to pay to the mortgagees Rs. 1,275 and costs and future interest by yearly instalments of Rs. 150 each, and it was provided that the mortgagees were to remain in possession as tenants of the plaintiffs on a yearly rental of Rs. 150, and that the amount payable to them by the plaintiffs under the decree should be satisfied out of the amount of the rent. On September 2, 1913, the plaintiffs in that suit paid off the full amount due from them under the decree to the mortgagees, and the latter delivered possession of the lands to the plaintiffs.

On January 10, 1914, the plaintiff leased the lands for ten years to the present respondents by a rent-note (Ex. 22) which forms the basis of suit No. 85. Prior to this, however, in 1913, Laxmibai and Sitabai had brought Suit No. 430 of 1913 against the original mortgagees on a rent-note passed to them in 1910. There was a compromise decree on February 9, 1914, by which the two women were allowed to get possession, and on April 21, 1914, they are said to have obtained actual possession. On December 27, 1914, they leased these lands to a stranger for 11 months on a rent-note. The appellant, who had already leased the lands to the respondents on January 10, 1914, filed two miscellaneous applications (Nos. 56 and 57 of 1914) under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code, against Laxmibai and Sitabai, complaining that he had been in possession through his tenant respondent No. 1, and that the possession of his tenant had been disturbed. The Court on January 22, 1915, ordered possession to be restored to the appellant, and it was actually restored on June 24, 1915, and respondent No. 1 passed a receipt for the lands on behalf of the appellant. The respondents contested both the suits on the ground that the lands had belonged really to Laxmibai and Sitabai, the mother and widow of Gopal, and that the respondents had been cultivating them from these two women for 25 to 30 years. They admitted having passed the suit rent-notes, but alleged that they had done so as a result of the fraudulent representation of the appellant that he was taking the rent-notes in the names of the real owners Laxmibai and Sitabai. They further alleged that the rights, if any, acquired by the appellant under the rent-notes had become extinguished by the decision in Suit No. 1142 of 1919, and that that decision operated as res judicata so far as these suits were concerned. They also alleged that after the expiry of the period of these rent-notes they had passed rent-notes for the suit lands to the real owners Laxmibai and Sitabai.

The trial Court found that the respondents had failed to prove that the appellant had obtained the rent-notes from them by fraud. It also held that the appellant was not barred from suing on the rent-notes by the decision in suit No. 1142 of 1919, and the appeal arising out of it, that the suits were not barred as res judicata, and that the respondents were stopped under s. 116, Evidence Act, from denying the appellant's title. It therefore decreed the plaintiff's suits. In appeal the First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik with appellate powers held that the respondents had not been let into possession of the lands by the appellant under the two rent-notes (Exs. 22 and 25), that these rent-notes had really been taken by the appellant for Laxmibi and Sitabai, that respondents were not estopped from denying the appellant's title and setting up that of Laxmibai and Sitabai, and that the appellant's title had been extinguished by the decree in Suit No. 1142 of 1919. He, therefore, reversed the decrees of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suits. The respondents failed completely to substantiate the allegation of fraud and misrepresentation made by them. That allegation is absolutely inconsistent with the conduct of respondent No. 1 in connection with the proceedings arising out of applications Nos. 56 and 57 of 1914 made by the appellant against Laxmibai and Sitabai. In those applications the appellant had claimed that he was the owner of the lands and in possession of them through his tenant. Respondent No. 1 Ghama was examined in connection with the applications on January 9, 1915, (Ex. 99) and stated that the lands were at the time in possession of the appellant and that he was cultivating them as the appellant's tenant. It is clear that if respondent No. 1 had passed the rent-notes to the appellant under the impression that he was passing them in favour of Laxmibi and Sitabai, he would never have supported the appellant in these applications against Laxmibai and Sitabai, nor would he have made the statements referred to above expressly admitting that the appellant was his landlord.

The trial Court found that no fraud had been proved, and that the respondents had passed the rent-notes to the appellant under the bona fide belief that he was the owner. The Appellate Court agreed that the action of the plaintiff was not fraudulent in obtaining the rent-notes in his own name, but it found that a different kind of fraud had been committed. It held that the action of the plaintiff and defendants was fraudulent in executing the rent-note of January 10, 1914, in the name of the plaintiff, who was evidently a benamidar of the two ladies, even when they (i. e., the plaintiff and defendants) knew that the real beneficial owners, viz., the two ladies, had already got possession of the lands and had leased them to the representatives of the mortgagors. This was a kind of fraud which the defendants themselves had never alleged. According to the Appellate Court, the defendants-respondents were themselves parties to the fraud.

It has been held by the Privy Council in Abdool Hoosein Zenail Abadin v. Turner (1) that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud has been charged, another kind of fraud cannot, on failure of proof, be substituted for it. In the present case not merely was the fraud, which the Appellate Court has held proved, not alleged by the respondents in their pleadings, but it was one which, even if it had been alleged in their pleadings, they could have taken advantage of. They could not set up a fraud to which they had themselves been parties in order to defeat the plaintiff's claim: Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (2). There is, however, no evidence to support the Appellate Court's finding that there was any collusion between the appellant and the respondents to practise a fraud on Laximibai and Sitabai.

There is evidence to show that the respondents were let into possession of the lands in both the suits by the appellant. With regard to the lands which had belonged originally to Gopal, the respondents had not been in possession prior to the date of their lease, i. e., January 10, 1914. The lands had been in the possession of the mortgagees, Bhawani walad Punjaji Puchora and Vithu V. Raoji Lonare, from January 1900. Laxmibai and Sitabai had obtained possession of the lands from them in suits Nos. 430 and 431 of 1913 and had leased them to a stranger. The respondents' connection with the lands began with the lease granted to them by the appellant. It appears that they had been put in possession by him. Their possession was disturbed by Laxmibai and Sitabai and the appellant had to apply to the Court under O. XXI. r. 100 in miscellaneous applications Nos. 56 and 57 of 1914. He obtained possession, the lands being actually handed over to respondent No. 1 as his tenant: Laxmibai and Sitabai filed suit No. 65 of 1915 against the appellant and respondent No. 1 to get the orders passed in miscellaneous applications Nos. 56 and 57 of 1914 set aside, but the suit was dismissed. During the course of these proceeding respondent No. 1 was examined as a witness and he stated on January 9, 1915, that the lands were at the time in the possession of the appellant, and that he, as a tenant of the appellant, was in possession of them on his behalf. There can be no room for doubt, therefore, that with regard to these lands the respondents were let into possession by the appellant, and the Appellate Court's finding on this point that is difficult to understand. The possession was restored by the Court on June 24, 1915, because it found that the appellant's tenant had been in possession under the rent-note of January 10, 1914, and that possession had been wrongly disturbed.

"the defendant thus got possession of the lansd in suit No. 85 of 1915 through Court on June 24, 1915, under the kabaja pavati, Ex. 31 and 32 in suit No. 95 of 1915, and not on January 10, 1914, under the rent-note,"

With regard to the land of Martand's share the respondents had been in possession as mortgagees from Ganesh from 1901. In 1912, in suit No. 378 of 1910 they were ordered to hand over possession to the appellant on the latter paying to them a sum of Rs. 625 which was found due. This amount was paid and the respondents, instead of handing over actual possession, passed to the appellant the rent-note in suit (Ex. 25) taking the land on lease from him for ten years.

For the purposes of s. 116, Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the tenant should have been actually put into possession by the landlord. It is sufficient if, being already in possession, he passes a rent-note to the landlord acknowledging that a new tenancy has arisen. In Shankar Nana Patil v. Jagannath Mathuralal (3), it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that once the relation of landlord and tenant was established between the parties, the tenant was estopped from denying the landlord's title under s. 116, Evidence Act. It was not necessary that the tenant should be put into possession by the landlord for the estoppel to arise. Where a tenant was already in possession before a new tenancy began, the pertinent question to ask under s. 116 was not whether the tenant had been let into possession by the landlord, but whether the new tenancy had arisen. This view was followed in Nagindas Sankalchand v. Bapalal Purshottam (4).

The conduct of the parties in connection with miscellaneous applications Nos. 56 and 57 of 1914, and in suit No. 65 of 1915 which arose out of them, renders it impossible to hold that the appellant could have taken the rent-notes as a benamidar for Laxmibai and Sitabai or that the respondents could have been under that impression. Both the appellant and the respondents strenuously contested the claim of Laxmibai and Sitabai in 1915, very soon after the respondents' tenancy had commenced, and asserted the appellant's ownership over the lands. In both the applications the appellant said that he was the owner of the lands and in possession of them as owner through his tenant. Respondent No. 1 made a similar statement. It has been argued by Mr. Desai for the respondents that the proceedings in these two applications and in suit No. 65 of 1915 were concerned only with the question of the present possession of the lands and did not relate to the question of title. This, however, is not correct. From the applications and the order passed on them, and from the plaint in suit No. 65 of 1915, it is clear that what the parties were fighting about was the question of the title to the lands and not merely the question of present possession. It was held in Unni Moidin v. Pocker (5), that the scope of a suit under O. XXI, r. 103, Civil Procedure Code, filed to contest an order made under either r. 98, or r. 99 or r. 101, is not the determination of the mere question of possession of the parties concerned but the establishment of the right or title by which the plaintiff claims the present possession of the property. It is true that these proceedings and the suit related only to the lands of Gopal's share and had nothing to do with the lands in suit No. 84: but the respondents were holding the lands in both the suits at the time from the appellant, and it cannot be believed that when they contested so strenuously the claims of Laxmibai and Sitabai to the one set of lands, and denied that she was the real owner, they could have accepted her claim with regard to the other set of lands. In both the suits, therefore, the defendants (i. e., the respondents) must be held to have been let into possession by the appellant and to have passed the suit rent-notes to him knowing that they were being passed in the appellant's own name, and believing that he was the real owner.

The question then arises whether the respondent can deny the appellant's title, or whether they are prevented from doing so under s. 116, Evidence Act. It has been contended for the respondents that in Suit No. 1142 of 1919 it was held that the sale-deeds (Exs. 81 and 84) passed by Martand, Laxmibai and Sitabai to Ganesh in 1896 and 1900, on which the appellant's title is based, were bogus, and passed merely to save the property from creditors. The suit was decided in 1920 and in appeal the decision of the lower Court was confirmed in August 1923. It has been argued that as a result of the finding in that suit the appellant was held to be only a benamidar and had lost his title to the lands as against the two women, and that subsequent to the expiry of the leases now sued on, the respondents had attorned to the real owners and taken the suit lands on lease from them. The question of the appellant's title to these lands was, therefore, res judicata as between him and the two women, and as the respondents now claim through the two women, it was res judicata between the appellant and the respondents also. It is, therefore, contended that as the appellant's title had been extinguished by that decision the respondents were not estopped from denying it. Mr. Desai for the respondents has relied on the rulings in Shravan Shahasing Patil v. Fattu (6), Purshottam Yeshwant v. Vishnu Garathe Dalvi (7), and Chandri v. Daji Bhau (8), as showing that where on the expiration of a tenancy, the tenant continues in possession without executing a fresh rent-note to the landlord, or without paying rent, the possession by the tenant becomes adverse to the landlord. But it is a well-established principle that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. In Vasudev Daji v. Babaji Ranu (9), it was held that if the existence of a tenancy be established by the fact of the tenant's payment of rent to his landlord or otherwise, the tenant cannot ordinarily dispute the title of his landlord in a suit brought against him for recovery of possession. He must first give up possession and then, if he has any title aliunde, that title may be tried in a suit of ejectment against the landlord. It was held in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (10), that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however, defective it may be so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. In Ekoba v. Dayaram (11), in which the decision in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (10), was followed, Macleod, C. J., held that a tenant who wishes to dispute his landlord's title must not only see that the tenancy has come to an end, but that the possession which was in him as a tenant has been surrendered. A tenant who holds over and remains in possession cannot be allowed to use that possession as a lever to support a case in which he denies the landlord's title.

It is contended for the respondents, however, that s. 116, Evidence Act, does not prevent them from showing that subsequent to the commencement of the tenancy, the title of the landlord has been extinguished. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the ruling in Nakchedi Bhagat v. Nakchedi Misir (12), where it was held that the rule of law which prohibits a mortgagee or tenant from disputing his mortgagor's or landlord's title does not bar the mortgagee or tenant from showing that the title of his mortgagor or landlord under which he entered has determined.

According to the respondents the appellant's title to the suit lands was extinguished by the decision in Suit No. 1142 of 1919. To settle this point it is necessary to see what Suit No. 1142 of 1919 really decided. The suit had been filed by the appellant against one Anant Raoji Kavale to recover certain lands other than the suit lands which Kavale had purchased from Laxmibai and Sitabai to whom they had been sold by Ganesh's widow Sarasvatibai. Laxmibai and Sitabai were parties to the suit as defendants but did not contest it either at the trial or in appeal. It was held by both the Courts that the sale-deeds passed to Ganesh by Martand, Laxmibai and Sitabai, were bogus and intended only to save the property from creditors. There was no specific issue on the point, but it may be conceded that the nature of the sale-deeds was in issue in substance in that suit. That suit was not, however, concerned with the lands which are the subject-matter of the present suits. What the learned Judge in Suit No. 1142 of 1919 decided was that the sale-deeds to Ganesh in 1896 and 1900 were bogus and intended only to defraud creditors, and that the real ownership of the lands remained with Laxmibai and Sitabai. This finding, however, would not necessarily prove that the appellant's title to the lands involved in the present suits has been extinguished. The sale deeds were passed 20 to 24 years before suit No. 1142 of 1919. The appellant's title to these lands was not the subject-matter of that suit and it is possible that he may have acquired title to the suit lands subsequent to the years 1896 and 1900 by adverse possession or in other ways.

With regard to Gopal's land, in Suit No. 85 he had openly denied the title of Laxmibai and Sitabai in 1915 by his application under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil Procedure Code. His claim had been upheld, and under O. XXI, r. 103, Laxmibai and Sitabai had to establish their right within one year. They filed Suit No. 65 of 1915 to do so, but for some reason the suit was withdrawn and allowed to be dismissed. It is doubtful whether they could now establish their title to these lands against the appellant. Even with regard to the land in Suit No. 84, the appellant may be able to establish a valid title against them. His title to these lands was not in issue in Suit No. 1142 of 1919, and could not be and was not decided in that suit. The rulings in Ananta Balacharya v. Damodar Makund (13), and Kedar Nath Singh v. Sheo Shankar (14), which have been relied on for the respondents do not really help them. In Ananta Balacharya v. Damodar Makund (13), the question in issue in the later suit was whether a partition had taken place between two brothers, and it was held that the decision in an earlier suit between those brothers that a partition had taken place rendered the question in issue in the later suit res judicata. In Kedar Nath Singh v. Sheo Shankar (14), it was held that where a claim to a certain property was based entirely on a sale-deed and the question of the validity of the sale-deed had arisen directly in a previous suit between the same parties, relating to another property also included in the deed which could not be determined without a decision as to the validity of the sale-deed, the decision in the previous suit must be held to be binding as between the parties.

In the present suits the question of the appellant's title to these particular lands which might be based on other grounds besides the sale-deeds of 1896 and 1900, was not directly or substantially in issue in Suit No. 1142 of 1919. The trial Court thought it possible that the plaintiff may lay claim to the suit lands on the strength of adverse possession against Laxmibai and Sitabai and that this question was a moot point which may be agitated by the plaintiff if a claim were made against him by the two women that this question had been left untouched by the decision in Suit No. 1142 of 1919 and it could not, therefore, be said that the plaintiff's claims in respect of these lands were barred as res judicata. This view appears to me to be perfectly correct. The appellant's rights in respect of these lands as against Laxmibai and Sitabai have yet to be decided. His claims in the present suits to be the real owner of these lands is not barred as res judicata nor can it be said that his title to these lands has been extinguished. It has been proved that the respondents executed the suit rent-notes to the appellant, they acknowledged his title in 1915; they have admittedly paid rent to him, and they cannot, therefore, be allowed to dispute his title. Mr. Desai for the respondents has relied on the ruling in Kuppu Konan v. Thirugnana Sammandam Pillai (15), to show that where a deed is executed by a tenant in favour of a person benami for another, the real owner and not the benamidar, is the landlord whose title the tenant is estopped from denying under s. 116, Evidence Act. In a suit by such benamidar for rent, the tenant can deny his right to sue on the ground that he is not the person entitled. It may be noted that in the case cited the plaintiff had admitted that he was a benamidar.

In the present case the conduct of the parties in Miscellaneous Applications Nos. 56 and 57 of 1914 and Suit No. 65 of 1915 renders it impossible to hold that in the suit rent-notes the appellant was only a benamidar for Laxmibai and Sitabai or that the respondents had believed that he was a benamidar. On the contrary the evidence shows that they dealt with him as the real owner and asserted his title as such against Laxmibai and Sitabai. In Prabhat Chandra Chatterji v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap (16), it was held that where the defendant had executed a kabuliyat and obtained possession of certain lands as tenant on the strength of the kabuliyat, he was estopped from denying the title or seisin of his grantor in a suit for rent on the ground that he was merely a benamidar of some other person. On these grounds I allow the appeals and reverse the decisions of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the trial Court. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court from the respondents.

ISHAR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANT AND PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law — Alienation — Father—Proof of connection between immorality and antecedent debt—Necessity of—Antecedent debt, if should be independent of mortgage security—Debt small —Whether can burden the estate, if not for necessity—Custom (Punjab) —Alienation—Necessity—Distinction in Punjab Customary Law and Hindu Law—Applicability of custom —Family following agriculture for two or three generations—If necessary to substitute custom for personal law—Proof, necessity of.

Under Hindu Law the sons must prove that the debts were incurred by the father for immoral purposes. A connection between the debt and the alleged immorality must be established. Ulfat Rai v. Tej Narain (9), relied on.

All the antecedent debts included in the mortgage in dispute must be held to constitute valid necessity. They need not be independent of mortgage security. Labhu Mal v. Bishan Das (10) held no good law in view of Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (11).

Where a debt is not for necessity though it forms only a small portion of consideration, the debt should not be allowed to burden the land in the absence of any proof as to necessity. Bahadur Singh v. Des Raj (12), relied on.

Both under Hindu law and the custom of agricultural tribes, alienation of ancestral immovable property is subject to restrictions, but the nature of the restrictions is somewhat different in the two cases.

To hold that a person is governed by agricultural custom solely on the ground that his family has followed agriculture or lived amongst an agricultural tribe for 2 or 3 generations would be to substitute conjecture for proof. There is at best a possibility of such a family adopting the rules of custom, but whether it has actually done so or not is a question of fact which must be decided on evidence and not on conjecture. According to the Punjab Laws Act the initial presumption is that Hindus and Muhammadans are governed by their personal laws and if a custom modifying such laws is alleged, it must be proved, Daya Ram v. Sohal Singh (6) and Abdul Hussein Khan v. Sona Dero (7), relied on.

F. O. A. from the decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, dated September 17, 1928.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal and S. L. Puri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Faqir Chand and Bal Kishen Mehra, for the Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This was a declaratory suit of the usual type by the sons of one Isar Singh, a Sikh Jhiwar of the Ludhiana District to contest a mortgage of about 85 bighas of ancestral land for a sum of Rs. 11,000. It was alleged by the plaintiff that Isar Singh was a man of immoral character and that the alienation was effected without valid necessity and consideration. The plaintiffs alleged that they being agriculturists were governed by custom, but also relied on Hindu Law in the alternative. The trial Court held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they were governed by custom and applying Hindu Law has found that there was necessity for the alienation only to the extent of Rs. 3,303-8-0, and has passed a decree to that effect. From this decision the alienee Sohan Lal has appealed and the plaintiffs have preferred cross-objections challenging the trial Court's finding that they are governed by Hindu Law and not by custom.

It will be convenient to deal with the question of custom first. The evidence produced by the plaintiffs on this question only establishes that their family has followed agriculture for the last 2 or 3 generations. These witnesses do not even definitely say that the plaintiffs are governed by custom as opposed to Hindu Law in the matter of alienation. It need hardly be pointed out in this connection that both under Hindu Law and the custom of agricultural tribes, alienation of ancestral immovable property is subject to restrictions, but the nature of the restrictions is somewhat different in the two cases. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs urged that the fact that the family of the plaintiffs had followed agriculture for 2 or 3 generations was sufficient to raise a presumption that the family was governed by custom. It was further urged that the plaintiffs are Sikhs by religion and kamins. There are only three families of Jhiwars in the village and it was therefore argued that it may be presumed that they are governed by the same custom as the custom of the Jats amongst whom they live. In support of these contentiens the learned Counsel referred to a number of authorities such as Fakir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1), Kasim v. Hashem (2), Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sundhe Khan (3) and Bhola v. Razzak (4), etc. In most of these cases there were concurrent findings of fact by the Courts below and all that they show is that the fact that a family had followed agriculture or lived amongst agricultural tribes for a long time was one of the factors taken into consideration in determining whether the family was governed by custom or personal law. The learned Counsel also referred to Gujar v. Sham Das (5), in which it was laid down that there is a presumption against an unrestricted power of alienating ancestral immovable property in the case of Jats of the Central Punjab. But this presumption was based not merely on the fact that the Jats followed agriculture, but on the evidence obtained in the course of an elaborate inquiry and also certain features of the agricultural village communities of the Central Punjab. In the present instance the Jhiwars do not form a village community and not a single instance has been cited in which they had departed from the rules of Hindu Law.

To hold that a person is governed by agricultural custom solely on the ground that his family has followed agriculture or lived amongst an agricultural tribe for 2 or 3 generations would be to substitute conjecture for proof. There is, at best, a possibility of such a family adopting the rules of custom; but whether it has actually done so or not is a question of fact which must be decided on evidence and not on conjecture. According to the Punjab Laws Act, the initial presumption is that Hindus and Muhammadans are governed by their personal laws and if a custom modifying such laws is alleged, it must be proved. It would not be out of place to draw attention here to a passage from the judgment of Robertson, J., in Daya Ram v. Sohal Singh (6), which explains the precise position in this respect clearly and which was cited with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Hussain Khan v Sona Dero (7):

"In all cases it appears to me under this Act (i. e., the Punjab Laws Act), it lies upon the person asserting that he is ruled in regard to a particular matter by custom, to prove that he is so governed, and not by personal law, and further to prove what the particular custom is. There is no presumption created by the clause in favour of custom; on the contrary, it is only when the custom is established that it is to be the rule of decision. The legislature did not show itself enamoured of custom rather than law nor does it show any tendency to extend the 'principles' of custom to any matter to which a rule of custom is not clearly proved to apply. It is not the spirit of Customary Law, nor any theory of custom or deductions from other customs, which is to be a rule of decision, but only 'any custom applicable to the parties concerned .....';and it therefore, appears to me clear that when either party to a suit sets up 'custom' as a rule of decision, it lies upon him to prove the custom which he seeks to apply; if he fails to do so, cl. (b), s. 5, Punjab Laws Act, applies and the rule of decision must be the personal law of the parties subject to the other provisions of the clause."

In the end I may also mention that it does not seem to be quite correct to say that the plaintiffs' family has been solely dependent on agriculture or that they are ordinary kamins. They own a large area of land. Their grandfather, Kahn Singh, is said to have been a Kardar or Thanedar of Basant Singh and Isar Singh, father of the plaintiffs, is also said to have been a liquor contractor. It was urged that the plaintiffs are Sikhs, but in the absence of any proof of any custom, Sikhs also must be held to be governed by Hindu Law: cf. Bhagwan Koer v. Bose (8). After carefully considering the evidence on the record and the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, I feel no hesitation in agreeing with the conclusion of the learned Judge of the trial Court that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they are governed by custom in the matter of alienation of ancestral property and they must, therefore, be presumed to be governed by Hindu Law.

On merits the plaintiffs have practically no case under Hindu Law. The alienation was effected mostly in lieu of antecedent debts of Isar Singh and as the plaintiffs are the sons of Isar Singh, such debts would constitute valid necessity for the alienation unless it was proved that the debts were illegal or immoral. The oral evidence produced by the plaintiffs to prove that Isar Singh is a drunkard and a man of immoral character is meagre, vague and altogether unconvincing and is contradicted by the defendant's witnesses who give him a good character. It was, moreover, incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove that the debts were incurred for immoral purposes: vide, Ulfat Rai v. Tej Narain (9), and there is no evidence forthcoming to prove any connection between the debt and the alleged immorality. The antecedent debts are mostly supported by previous mortgage-deeds and bahi accounts and there is no good reason to doubt their genuineness. It may be mentioned here that Isar Singh has a large family consisting of some 12 persons and he had to incur expenditure in connection with the marriages of five of his children. Only an item of Rs. 300 is not supported by any bahi account, but this was borrowed long ago.

It is, moreover, supported by the evidence of Shri Ram, and I do not think it would be justifiable to insist on better proof of this comparatively small and an old item. The learned Subordinate Judge has disallowed some of the antecedent mortgage debts on the ground that they were not independent of the mortgage security. He has relied in this respect on Lakhu Mal v. Bishen Das (10), but it was conceded before us that this ruling cannot be considered to be good law in view of a later decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (11). The result is that all the antecedent debts included in the mortgage in dispute must be held to constitute valid necessity. The only other items out of the consideration which require discussion are: (a) Rs. 1,100 left with the mortgagee for sinking a well, and (b) Rs. 700 received in cash before the Sub-Registrar.

No well has yet been sunk, but the amount will be claimed as a charge only if and when the well is sunk. As regards item (b), however, there seems to be no satisfactory evidence as to necessity. The learned Counsel merely urged that it forms only a small portion of the consideration. But even so there is no reason why it should be allowed to burden the land in the absence of any proof as to necessity: cf; Bahadur Singh v. Des Raj (12). On the above findings I would accept the appeal and modifying the decree of the trial Court grant plaintiffs a declaration to the effect that the mortgage in dispute shall not affect their rights in respect of Rs. 700 out of the consideration. The decree will be, however, without prejudice to the rights of the mortgagee to enforce such rights as he may have under the mortgage against Isar Singh himself by sale of the ancestral property including his sons' shares: cf. Bahadur Singh v. Des Raj (12), referred to above.

The plaintiffs have succeeded only to a very small extent. I would, therefore, leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Din Muhammad, J.—I agree.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 451 of 1934

January 17, 1935

POLLOCK, A. J. C.

POTRAM—APPLICANT—ACCUSED

versus

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 162, 428 (1)—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Statement to Police Officer in course of investigation—How used—S. 162, scope of—Statement of co-accused—When to be used against accused—Appellate Court's power to remand case for re-trial with condition to consider evidence already on record.

Section 162, Criminal Procedure Code, provides that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation shall be used for any purpose at the subsequent trial subject to the exception that such statements may be used to contradict witnesses for the prosecution. This section refers only to statements made by witnesses and not to statements by an accused person. Therefore statements made by a co-accused to the Police might be admissible against himself, but they would be inadmissible as against the accused by the ordinary rule that heresay evidence is excluded. This rule may briefly be stated as meaning that any statement made by a person who is alive and has not been called as a witness is inadmissible to prove the truth of that statement. Under s. 30 of the Evidence Act, the Court may take into consideration the confession of a co-accused. Where, however, the co-accused makes no confession but throws the blame entirely on the accused and tries to exculpate himself such statement cannot be taken against the accused. Gola v. Emperor (1), referred to.

The lower Appellate Court has no power to order a re-trial with the condition that the evidence already on record should be taken into consideration. If there is to be a re-trial, the accused is entitled to demand that there shall be a de novo trial. Under s. 428 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, if the Appellate Court thinks that additional evidence is necessary, it may, after recording its reasons, either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate. If it thinks that further evidence is necessary it should proceed under that sub-section.

Cr. R. App. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Raipur, dated November 9, 1934.

Mr. T. J. Kedar, for the Applicant.

Mr. V. Bose, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant Potram, the Naib-Nazir of Mungeli Tahsili, was tried jointly with Bitan, the Farrash of the same Tahsili, for an offence under s. 409, Indian Penal Code. Potram was convicted and Bitan was acquitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Mungeli. Potram appealed to the Sessions Judge, Raipur, who ordered the re-trial of Potram on an amended charge with the direction that "the evidence already on record will be taken into consideration after eschewing the inadmissible portion." Potram has applied for revision of that order, asking this Court to dispose of the appeal itself or to direct the lower Appellate Court to dispose it of on the material before it.

Early on the morning of May 10, 1934, Bitan reported to the Tahsildar that the malkhana had been broken open. The Tahsildar sent for Potram, the Naib Nazir, and asked him to see what property had been stolen. It was found that Rs. 18-2-0 in cash and certain silver ornaments valued at about Rs. 54 had been removed from one of the boxes. That box, which was unlocked, had also contained gold ornaments valued at Rs. 150, which had not been removed. The lock on the malkhana was found smashed into 3 pieces. A report was then made on that morning to the Police, who at once came to the conclusion that the lock could not have been broken while it was on the malkhana door, because that would have attracted the attention of the treasury guard, which was only 24 paces from the malkhana, and also because there was no sign of damage on the door. It has now been conceded before me that this conclusion must be accepted and that, therefore, the lock was opened with a key, taken away, broken elsewhere, and then replaced.

Suspicion fell on Potram and Bitan, and on the following morning, on information given by Bitan, the missing ornaments were recovered from the box of the Shahnavis or sub-treasury accountant in the Court-room of the Naib Tahsildar. This box was opened by a key taken from Potram. The missing cash was not recovered.

Certain evidence, which is legally inadmissible, was taken into consideration by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Lower Courts too frequently ignore the provisions of s. 162, of the Criminal Procedure Code, which provide that no statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation shall be used for any purpose at the subsequent trial subject to the exception that such statements may be used to contradict witnesses for the prosecution. It has been held by this Court in Gola v. Emperor (1), that this section refers only to statements made by witnesses and not to statements by an accused person. Therefore, statements made by Bitan to the Police might be admissible against himself, but they would be inadmissible as against Potram by the ordinary rule that hearsay evidence is excluded. This rule may briefly be stated as meaning that any statement made by a person who is alive and has not been called as a witness is inadmissible to prove the truth of that statement. Under s. 30 of the Evidence Act, the Court may take into consideration the confession of a co-accused, and, if Bitan had made any confession, that could have been taken into consideration against Potram. Bitan, however, made no confession but threw the blame entirely on Potram and tried to exculpate himself.

The learned Sessions Judge was, therefore, correct in holding that the statements made by the constables of the treasury guard to the investigating Head Constable, and the various statements made by Bitan to the Police and in Court were inadmissible against Potram. He has also pointed out correctly that the charge curiously omitted any reference to the cash which was not recovered but mentioned only the ornaments which were recovered. He has not stated whether the legally admissible evidence on record was sufficient to justify Potram's conviction, but I gather, from the fact that he ordered a re-trial, that he was of opinion that it was insufficient. It has been conceded before me that the learned Sessions Judge had no power to order a re-trial with the condition that the evidence already on record should be taken into consideration, and that if there is to be a re-trial, the accused is entitled to demand that there shall be a de novo trial. Under s. 428, (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, if the Appellate Court thinks that additional evidence is necessary, it may, after recording its reasons, either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate. If the learned Sessions Judge thought that further evidence was necessary, he should have proceeded under that sub-section. One of the reasons which apparently influenced him in ordering a re-trial, was a desire that Bitan should be examined as a witness. He has stated:

> "The appellant has certainly a right to demand that the prosecution should have examined Bitan as a witness and given Potram an opportunity to test his veracity by cross-examination."

The appellant does not appear to have demanded anything of the sort but merely to have urged that anything said by Bitan was inadmissible against him. It was open to the prosecution to proceed against the two accused separately, or against Potram alone and to examine Bitan as a witness in the case against Potram, and I see no reason why the prosecution should be allowed, at this stage, to examine as a witness, a man who could not legally have been examined as a witness when the trial took place.

As it has been conceded before me that the lock could not have been broken while on the malkhana, the evidence of the treasury guard becomes unnecessary. Potram's defence was that Bitan had a key that would open the malkhana and that this key was the key that opened the Sub-Registrar's Office. No attempt was made in the lower Courts to examine these keys and locks and to see whether Potram's explanation was a possible explanation. I have examined the broken lock of the malkhana and the key of the Sub-Registrar's Office, and it is possible that this key may have opened this lock, but this lock is too badly damaged for me to express a definite opinion. I think, therefore, that further evidence on this point is required.

The Sessions Judge's order directing a re-trial is set aside and I direct him to dispose of the appeal himself, after taking such additional evidence as may appear to be necessary to clear up the point about the opening of the malkhana lock. The evidence may be taken either by the Sessions Judge himself or by a Magistrate.

D. Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Statement of accused—Applicability of s. 162—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Statement of accused in the nature of a confession—Admissibility of—Conduct of accused, if can be taken into account against him.

Information received from a person accused of an offence is not a statement within the meaning of s. 162, (1), Criminal Procedure Code as he is not a person who, from the information given or otherwise appeared to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case whom the Police were entitled to examine under the provisions of ss. 160 and 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Though s. 162 applies to statements of persons examined as witnesses by the Police in the course of an investigation, it does not apply to the statement of an accused person. Emperor v. Maung Tha Din (1) and Rannun v. Emperor (2), relied on.

Although the statement made by the accused to the Police is not barred under the provisions of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, it would not be admissible under s. 27 of the Evidence Act if it is held to be of the nature of a confession if no material fact was discovered in consequence of the information received. But the conduct of the accused can certainly be taken into account.

Cr. R. P. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahpur, dated December 16, 1933.

Dr. Muhammad Alam, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. N. Bharadwaj, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner, Muhammad, has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment under the provisions of s. 411, Penal Code, for dishonestly receiving a bullock knowing it to be stolen property.

The stolen bullock belonged to one Dhala. He came to know that his bullock was at a particular dera near village, Narulianwala. He therefore reported the matter to the Police who went there. The bullock was recovered from the dera of Ali, the father of Muhammad. Muhammad came there at that time and he told the Police that he had purchased it from Mutalli of village Mela. At the same time he produced a receipt Ex. P. B., in support of his contention. The Magistrate convicted both father and son, but on appeal the learned Sessions Judge acquitted the father Ali as he held that it was Muhammad who had come forward and said that he had purchased it from Mutalli and produced a receipt in support of what he said. This receipt does not cover the bullock in question and Mutalli and another person, named, Pahlwan, gave evidence that it was not sold to the petitioner while another person Jagat Ram deposed that Muhammad, sometime after the receipt had been executed, came to him and asked him to add some words which would include the bullock. This conduct on the part of Muhammad left no doubt in the mind of the learned Sessions Judge that the bullock had been placed at the dera of his father by Muhammad and that it was not proved that his father knew that it was stolen property. He therefore acquitted Ali.

On behalf of the petitioner it was argued that his statement to the Police that he had purchased the bullock from Mutalli of village Mela could not be proved as this statement was barred under the provisions of s. 162 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. In my judgment, however, this section has no application. It was held in Emperor v. Maung Tha Din (1), that information received from a person accused of an offence was not a statement within the meaning of s. 162 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, as he was not a person who, from the information given or otherwise, appeared to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case whom the Police were entitled to examine under the provisions of ss. 160 and 162, Criminal Procedure Code. Similarly, in Rannun v. Emperor (2), it was held that s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, applied to the statements of persons examined as witnesses by the Police in the course of an investigation and not to the statement of an accused person.

Although, however, the statement made by Muhammad to the Police is not barred under the provisions of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, it would not be admissible under s. 27, Evidence Act, if it is held to be of the nature of a confession as to his being in possession of the bullock as no material fact was discovered in consequence of the information received. But in any case, the conduct of the petitioner can certainly be taken into account and the fact that he produced the receipt in question, which was found not to include the bullock and as to which there is evidence that he made an attempt to get it altered, can be taken into account to prove his guilty knowledge. This fact combined with the rest of the relevant evidence is sufficient to establish the petitioner's guilt and I dismiss this petition. He must surrender to his bail bond and serve out his sentence which is not excessive.

Criminal Revision No. 124 of 1934

KUNJALAL GHOSE—ACCUSED—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32 (3), 10—Charge under ss. 420 and 120-B, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Accused inducing Insurance Company to accept proposal by securing false medical report—Statement of doctor—Admissibility of, under ss. 32 (3) and 10.

The accused was charged under ss. 420 and 120-B, Penal Code, for committing fraud on a Insurance Company by inducing the said Company to accept the proposal for insurance on the life of one M securing a false medical report about the said M and by suppressing and misrepresenting facts about him and his family history, to the said Company.

Held, that conceding that the confession of the doctor that the report was made out according to the instructions of the accused was not admissible in evidence under s. 32 (3), Evidence Act, there could be no doubt that the statement was admissible under s. 10 of the Act, seeing that other evidence in the case disclosed reasonable grounds for believing that there was a conspiracy, and that the doctor was a conspirator.

Messrs. S. C. Taluqdar and Ajit K. Dutt, for the Petitioner.

Order.—The petitioner was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate at Chandpur in the District of Tippera, under ss. 420-120-B and s. 418, Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 18 months and to a fine of Rs. 500, in default, to further rigorous imprisonment for six months, under s. 420-120-B. There was a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for 18 months also, under s. 418; but the sentence so passed was to run concurrently with the other sentence passed under s. 420-120-B, Penal Code. The aforesaid conviction and sentence by the learned Magistrate were affirmed on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Dacca, to whose Court the appeal was transferred for hearing and disposal.

The charge against the petitioner was fraud committed on the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, by inducing the said Company to accept the proposal for insurance on the life of one Monorajan Mazumdar, for the sum of Rs. 15,000, securing a false medical report from Dr. Birendra Chandra Mazumdar of Dacca, about the said Monoranjan Mazumdar and by suppressing and misrepresenting facts about him and his family history, to the said Company with the knowledge that the accused was thereby likely to cause wrongful loss to the said Company whose interest in the transaction to which the cheating relates, the accused as an agent of the Company was bound to protect.

In view of the terms of the Rule issued by this Court, the nature of the evidence on the record had to be considered by us, for the purpose of determining whether the findings arrived at by the Court below were sustainable, and the conviction of the petitioner could be upheld.

One of the points raised before us related to the admissibility of a confessional statement made by Dr. Birendra Chandra Mazumdar, and it is necessary in this connection, to refer briefly to the materials on the record, bearing upon the question of admissibility of the statement, which proved the guilt of the petitioner in the matter of his securing a false medical report: a report which was made out by the doctor according to the instructions of the petitioner. It appears from the evidence that Mr. Mitchell (District Manager of the Sun Life Assurance Company), Babu Subarna Bose (Circle Inspector of Police), and Dr. Birendra Chandra Mazumdar went, during the investigation of the case, to Dr. Mazumdar's chamber at Dacca; a note book of the doctor was seized there; while there

Dr. Mazumdar told Mr. Mitchell that the petitioner had supplied necessary materials for his medical report. After this, Dr. Birendra Chandra Mazumdar was arrested and produced before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Dacca. It was contended before us, on the authority of a decision of the Bomaby High Court in the case of Emperor v. Keshav (1), that the confessional statement of the doctor that his report was made out according to the instructions of the petitioner was not admissible inasmuch as its maker had already rendered himself liable to criminal prosecution at the time when it was made. Conceding in favour of the petitioner that the confession of the doctor who died very soon after the statement was made by him, is not admissible in evidence under s. 32 (3), Evidence Act, there can be no doubt that the statement was admissible under s. 10 of the Act seeing that other evidence in the case disclosed reasonable grounds for believing that there was a conspiracy, and that the doctor was a conspirator. General evidence of the existence of a conspiracy of which the doctor was a member, having been given, affording reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons had conspired to commit an offence, evidence as to overt acts of things said or done by any conspirator in reference to a common design, was admissible under the law; and the confessional statement of Dr. Birendra Chandra Mazumdar was therefore admissible under the law, as evidence of the guilt of the petitioner. On that evidence, taking the same along with other evidence in the case, the Courts below have come to the definite conclusion that a false medical certificate was secured by the petitioner; the doctor granting the certificate, having done so, under instructions from the petitioner.

The questions requiring consideration next are whether the petitioner suppressed facts and made false representations to the Insurance Company as an agent, in order to have the insurance effected; whether the insured Monoranjan Mazumdar was a person known to the petitioner to be unfit to be insured. The evidence on this part of the case has been discussed by the Courts below, at length, and in detail. The argument advanced before us in support of this Rule was that the report submitted by the petitioner as a canvasser and an agent, was a bona fide one, on the belief that the life of the insured was that of a healthy man and that inasmuch as the family history of the insured was not required to be given, the fact that some of his relations died of tuberculosis was of no consequence. On this part of the case comment was made on the report furnished by the petitioner to the Insurance Company, and on the evidence of the witness Sures Chandra Chanda examined on the side of the prosecution. The evidence of this witness, who spoke to his having found the petitioner in the joint family dwelling house of the insured Monoranjan Mazumdar, on five or six occasions talking like a friend, has to be taken as a whole, and that evidence along with the report submitted by the petitioner led to the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below that the petitioner was on intimate terms with Monoranjan's family. The recommendation contained in the report was stated to be based on personal inquiry made by the petitioner; and it was further specifically mentioned in the report that the life of Monoranjan was an average life, that the petitioner never heard of Monoranjan's ever being ill. Monoranjan was recommended unqualifiedly by the petitioner for insurance at ordinary rates. On the materials on the record, which have been discussed in detail, by the Courts below, the conclusion was arrived at that the petitioner deliberately misused his knowledge regarding Monoranjan's family history, and his own state of health. The finding on evidence in the case, further was that the petitioner conspired with Monoranjan and Dr. Birendra Chandra Mazumdar, in making misrepresentations to the Sun Life Assurance Company.

On the definite findings arrived at on evidence in the case, which we see no reason to differ from, the conviction of the petitioner must be upheld. The sentence passed on the petitioner is not, in our judgment, severe, regard being had to the nature of the offence committed by him.

The conviction of the petitioner and the sentence passed on him are affirmed. The Rule is discharged. The petitioner must surrender to his bail bond, and serve out the remainder of the sentence passed on him.

DIN MUHAMMAD, J.
KARTAR SINGH—CONVICT—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal trial—Identification — Presence of Police constable—Objectionable nature of procedure — Investigation—Conduct of Police—Administration of criminal justice.

The presence of Police constables in the room where the identification is held is most objectionable.

The administration of criminal justice requires that every act done by the agency responsible for the investigation of crime must be fair, upright and free from taint of any sort. The Police should inspire full confidence in the public and conduct itself in such a regular manner as not to afford any genuine cause of complaint to those with whom it deals. It is then and then alone that justice can be properly dispensed.

Cr. A. from an order of the First Class Magistrate, Ferozepore, dated January 22, 1934.

Mr. J. L. Kapur, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Mahmood, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment. — The appellant, Kartar Singh, along with Dulla and Jogindar Singh was tried by a Magistrate of the First Class, with s. 30 powers at Ferozepore, for an offence under ss. 395 and 397, Penal Code. Dulla was discharged and Jogindar Singh acquitted, but Kartar Singh has been convicted under s. 395 read with s. 397, Penal Code, and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement.

The facts are these: An armed dacoity was committed on the night of November 30, 1932, at khao-pea time in the house of Bhagat Singh of village Buri Mahar in the District of Ferozepore and property worth Rs. 4,000 stolen. After the usual investigation by the Police, two of the alleged dacoits, namely, Kehr Singh and Partap Singh, were captured and sent up under s. 394, Penal Code. They were convicted on the strength of the recoveries made from them and their appeal to the High Court was also rejected on January 24, 1924. Subsequently Dulla and Jogindar Singh were also arrested and placed before a Magistrate for trial. After sometime Kartar Singh, too, offered himself for arrest in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate at Ferozepore on July 17, 1933. At the time of his surrender, he presented an application through a lawyer that he apprehended that the identification proceedings at Fazilka would not be conducted regularly and therefore his identification should take place in the jail at Ferozepore. The Additional District Magistrate allowed this petition and passed an order to the effect that the identification parade be held in the Ferozepore jail. It does not appear that this order was rescinded, but the fact remains that it was not carried out and Kartar Singh was despatched to Fazilka the same evening under the order of the Additional District Magistrate where his identification took place in the judicial lock-up on July 20, 1933. It is admitted by the prosecution that at the time of this identification, two Head Constables of Police were present in the lock-up. At that parade Bhurat P. W. No. 5, Bhagat Singh, P. W. No. 7, his son Jogindar Singh, P. W. No. 6 and Musammat Chawali, P. W. No. 12, identified Kartar Singh as one of the dacoits. The learned Magistrate has relied on this evidence of identification and found him guilty of the offence with which he was charged as stated above. It may be remarked here that nothing incriminating has been recovered from him and the case against him hinges on the evidence of identification alone.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has laid great stress on the fact that the identification evidence cannot be depended upon in this case and is insufficient to support his conviction. He contends that this evidence was procured in a suspicious manner and as the identification took place about eight months after the occurrence, it was not possible for the witnesses to correctly identify the dacoits especially when they had not sufficient opportunity to come in contact with Kartar Singh as he was said to have been stationed outside the house. He has also urged that the statements of the four witnesses mentioned above are discrepant as regards the actual place occupied by the present appellant and consequently no weight can be attached to their testimony. He takes very strong exception to the presence of the two Head Constables of Police in the lock-up at the time of the identification and contends that this circumstance in itself is sufficient to vitiate the whole proceedings.

I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant in the criticisms directed against the prosecution evidence as well as against the procedure observed at the time of the identification and have come to the conclusion that the evidence on the record is insufficient to support the conviction of the appellant. A reference to the statements of the four witnesses relied on by the prosecution lends a great deal of support to the arguments advanced for the appellant. Bhura, P. W. No. 5, admitted that the night was dark and the appellant was standing at the door of the house, being the fifth man. Jogindar Singh, P. W. No. 6 and his father Bhagat Singh, P. W. No. 7, have, on the other hand, stated that out of the dacoits four only entered the house while the fifth remained outside and they could only hear his voice, but could not see him. They have mentioned Kartar Singh as one of those who had entered the house and on this basis they have alleged to identify him. As against this, Musammat Chawali, P. W. No. 12, has stated that when she saw Kartar Singh and was able to identify him, he was standing near the outer door towards the back of the house opening into the lane. It appears to me to be difficult to reconcile these statements. If Kartar Singh was standing outside as stated by Bhura and Musammat Chawali, he could not have been seen by Bhagat Singh and Jogindar Singh as they have themselves averred that they merely heard the voice of the man who was standing at the door and did not see him. Even if these witnesses had an occasion to see the dacoits with the help of the light in the courtyard, I do not consider that a mere fleeting glimpse that they could take in such a moment of confusion and consternation would be so indelibly impressed on their minds or so pertinaciously retained in their memories as to enable them to correctly identify a stranger after the lapse of eight months. Moreover, the presence of the two Head Constables of Police in the room where the identification was held was really most objectionable.

The administration of criminal justice requires that every act done by the agency responsible for the investigation of crime must be fair, upright and free from taint of any sort. The Police should inspire full confidence in the public and conduct itself in such a regular manner as not to afford any genuine cause of complaint to those with whom it deals. It is then and then alone that justice can be properly dispensed. In this case, I am afraid, I am constrained to agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant that it was very easy for the Head Constables to place themselves in such a favourable position in the room where the identification was being held as to facilitate the process of identification by the witnesses; I also do not approve of the action taken by the Police in the matter of conducting identification at Fazilka in spite of the orders of the learned Additional District Magistrate that it should take place at Ferozepore and which he did not cancel at the time of ordering the remand.

In the circumstances mentioned above I am not satisfied that the guilt of the appellant has been clearly brought home to him and giving him the benefit of doubt, I acquit him.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110—S. 110, if applicable to case where Government is party—Berar Land Revenue, Code 1896, s. 41 (1).

The provisions of s. 110 of the Evidence Act are equally applicable in a case to which the Government is a party and s. 41 (1) of the Berar Land Revenue Code is not meant to lay down a rule regarding the burden of proof at variance with the provisions of s. 110 of the Evidence Act, it is open for the defendant to rely on the provisions of s. 41 (1) of the Berar Land Revenue Code in proving his title to the land in dispute by showing, in the first instance, that it formed part of a public road within the last 60 years and it will then be for the plaintiff to show either that his title was founded on a lost grant or that he had acquired a title by adverse possession for over 60 years. Hanmantray v. Secretary of State for India (1), Bhagwansingh v. Secretary of State (2), and Krishna Aiyar v. Secretary of State for India (3), relied on.

S. C. A. against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, in Civil Appeal No. 67 of 1932, dated September 24, 1932, arising out of Civil Suit No. 428 of 1930, in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Jalgaon, dated November 4, 1931.

Mr. R. G. Rau, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Bose, The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was filed by the plaintiff claiming a declaration against the Secretary of State for India in Council that the plot of land marked as A B G W Z L M N and O in the map, filed with the plaint, situate at Mauza Pimpalgaon Kale, belonged to him and was in his possession and claiming an injunction restraining the defendant from demolishing the structure standing on the disputed site. The defendant denied that the plaintiff was the owner of the site in question and alleged that it formed part of a public road. On these pleadings the following issues were framed for trial:

(1) Whether the site in suit is the property of the plaintiff and was in his possession and of his vendor since many generations?

(2) Whether the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title were in possession of the site in suit within 60 years prior to the date of the suit?

Both the Courts below dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff had not discharged the initial burden of proving these issues affirmatively. With regard to the burden of proof the lower Appellate Court observed in para. 2 of its judgment as under:

"A word may be said here about the burden of proof which is the subject of the 3rd ground of appeal. According to s. 41 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, 1928, save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, all lands, public roads, lanes and paths, etc., etc., and all rights therein, which are not the property of persons, are hereby declared to be the property of the Government. Therefore, the presumption being in favour of the Government, any person who disputes that ownership must establish his title and I agree with the lower Court that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff."

The plaintiff has now come up on second appeal and it is argued on his behalf that both the Courts below were wrong in throwing upon the plaintiff the initial burden of establishing his title to the land. The fact that he was in possession for some years was in fact admitted in the present case. It was urged that s. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act applied to the present case and that under the circumstances it was for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff was not the owner of the land in dispute.

In my opinion, this contention is sound. In Second Appeal No. 250-B of 1931, dated July 31, 1934, the facts of which were practically identical with those of the present case, I held following Abasbhai v. Secretary of State for India in Council S. A. No. 171-B. of 1918 (1), that the provisions of s. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act would be equally applicable in a case to which the Government was a party and that s. 41 (1) of the Berar Land Revenue Code was not meant to lay down a rule regarding the burden of proof at variance with the provisions of s. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act. To the same effect are the decisions in Hanmantray v. Secretary of State for India (1), Bhagwansingh v. Secretary of State (2), and Krishna Aiyar v. Secretary of State for India (3).

I had of course made it clear in Chinkaji v. Secretary of State for India in Council S. A. No. 250-B of 1931, dated July 31, 1934 (1), and do make it clear here that it will be open for the defendant in the present case to rely on the provisions of s. 41 of the Berar Land Revenue Code in proving his title to the land in dispute by showing, in the first instance, that it formed part of a public road within last 60 years and it will then be for the plaintiff to show either that his title was founded on a lost grant or that he had acquired a title by adverse possession for over 60 years. As the case was disposed of from a wrong stand-point the decrees of the two Courts below are set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance for a fresh decision, with advertence to the above remarks. It will be open to the parties to supplement their pleadings and adduce further evidence, if they so desire. Costs incurred uptill now in all the three Courts shall follow the ultimate result.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 1 of 1934
April 27, 1934
AHGA HAIDAR, J.
GHULAM MUHAMMAD—CONVICT—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal trial — Sentence — Murder of wife due to her flagrant immorality — Extenuating circumstance, if exists—Confession — Magistrate recording confession, otherwise valid, in his house—Legality of.

Where the accused had undergone protracted sufferings though the obstinacy, viciousness and flagrant immorality of the deceased, his wife, whom he pushed into the river, there is a mitigating circumstance entitling the accused to a lenient sentence.

Where a confession is otherwise valid, the mere fact of its having been recorded at the Magistrate's house does not vitiate it.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated November 17, 1933.

Judgment.—Ghulam Muhammad has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Jhelum under s. 307, Penal Code, and has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. He has appealed to this Court through the jail authorities.

The case is an extremely sad one. The accused is a young soldier aged about 30 years. He has already put in about fourteen years of military service. It appears that the accused is a man of unblemished character and there are no indications on the record to show that he was a man of a violent or vindictive character. At the time when he married his wife Musammat Shah Bano, deceased, there were rumours of her unchastity; but, as the accused and the girl were connected together by family ties, it was thought that she would reform herself. This, however, did not happen and the girl Musammat Shah Bano had immoral relations with several men, one Habib Machhi, P. W. No. 19, being her favourite paramour. She lived now and again with her husband while he was on military duty at several cantonments in India and for the last time she was with him while he was at Delhi. On this occasion he took leave from his regiment and started for home with his wife by the Frontier Mail. This was on April 23, 1933. On this occasion he was accompanied by two soldiers, namely, Nur Husain and Fazal Din, both of whom were accompanied by their wives. There is ample evidence on the record that the accused got down at the Railway Station, Jhelum, with his wife. This was the last occasion when Musammat Shah Bano was seen alive and in the company of the accused. Musammat Saidan, P. W. No. 1, the mother of Musammat Shah Bano, received information that the accused and his wife had travelled with certain persons from Delhi to Jhelum and had got down at the Railway Station, Jhelum. She inquired from the Commanding Officer of the regiment to which the accused belonged and received a reply informing her that the accused had left on April 23, 1933, with his wife. The accused, too, did not meet Musammat Saidan. The lady became suspicious and sent a petition to the Superintendent of Police, Jhelum. Thereupon the Police took up the investigation and finally the accused was arrested. In the meantime the accused had brought a complaint against one Karam Ilahi, under s. 498, Penal Code. This was on May 26, 1933. This complaint was a futile attempt to conceal the real truth. The accused is alleged to have made some sort of confession before two Magistrates, but the Sessions Judge has very properly held those statements to be inadmissible. On June 14, 1933, the accused made a statement before Sheikh Said Zaman Khan, Magistrate. This officer took all the precautions which are required by law in order to make sure that the confession of the accused was voluntary.

In fact he went out of his way to suggest to the accused that if he had killed a faithless wife, after all he had not done anything very heinous and should save his own life. This suggestion was not strictly according to law as it is no part of the duty of a Magistrate to dissuade a man from making a confession, if he is desirous of doing so. It however, shows, that the Magistrate was careful enough to make it certain that the accused may not make a hasty confession through any extraneous influences. The confession was also recorded by the Magistrate at his house which is also against the rules, but this fact alone cannot vitiate it when it is otherwise valid. The confession, in my judgment, was a voluntary statement and made by the accused, It contained the whole history of the unhappy married life of the accused and how he tried hard to reform his erring wife without any success. The woman, apart from being an unfaithful wife, was also a thief. She took away the ornaments and clothes which had been entrusted to her by her husband to her lover, Habib Machhi. On another occasion when she was living with the accused, she abstracted a sum of Rs. 20 from a box with the intention of leaving him and joining her lover in her native village. The life of the accused has been a very miserable one when, according to him, the scandal became the common property of the village and even the children in the streets jeered at him and asked him to take away his wife. The closing portion of the confession gives us an account of the last moments of Musammat Shah Bano in the company of the accused. The couple went to the river Jhelum, to have a bath and when the accused had finished his own ablutions, he persuaded his wife to wash herself in the river. She accordingly entered the water. The accused then followed her and catching hold of her, first immersed her in the water and then pushed her on to a spot where the water was beyond her height. The waters of the Jhelum then closed upon the unfortunate woman.

This was the last scene of the tragedy so far as the present record is concerned. Musammat Shah Bano has not been seen alive since then nor has her dead body been recovered. Before the Sessions Court the accused retracted the confession. The learned Sessions Judge has, however, taken the proper view in accepting this confession as genuine and voluntary. I agree with him. He has rightly convicted the accused not under s. 302, Penal Code, but under s. 307, Penal Code, for attemted murder. Having regard however to the protracted sufferings of the accused through the obstinacy, viciousness and flagrant immorality of the deceased, I would reduce the sentence to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Dangerous Drugs Act (II of 1930), ss. 22, 23, 14 —Constables not authorised to take steps which they had taken —Trial, if vitiated by this irregularity.

Where the constables are not authorized to take the steps which they have taken, under ss. 22, 23, Dangerous Drugs Act, the irregularity does not vitiate the trial. Emperor v. Allah Dad Khan (1), Ali Ahmad Khan v. Emperor (2), Kutroo v. Emperor (3), referred to.

Cr. R. P. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Peshawar, dated August 15, 1934.

Mr. S. Aurangzeb Khan, for the Petitioner.

Sardar Raja Singh, for the Crown.

Order.—Habibulla has been convicted under s. 14, Dangerous Drugs Act, 1930, for being in possession of a small quantity of cocaine on the night between June 26, and 27, 1934, in the Thathi bazaar. He has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 100 fine or three months' further rigorous imprisonment in default.

Head Constable Muhammad Aslam, assisted by F. C. Alimadat and Hussain, was on duty in the Thathi bazaar on the night in question. They noticed Habibulla going to the balakhana of Musammat Amirjan, prostitute, after he had visited the shop of a badmash, who was suspected of trading in cocaine. The party asked the accused to stop, but he ran towards the stairs of the prostitute's house. They pursued him and while he was climbing the stairs, he threw two packets of cocaine one after the other. He was arrested and the cocaine was taken into possession by the Policemen. Later on it was sent to the Chemical Examiner who certified it to be cocaine. Two search witnesses were called. They signed the recovery list prepared on the spot. At the trial the Policemen gave the story given above. The search witnesses did not deny that they had signed the recovery list but one of them Mirgul tried to help the accused by introducing facts which went to his benefit. He said that the accused was drunk and that the packets were in the hands of the Policemen.

The accused pleaded that he was drunk and that he did not recollect as to what had happened. He could not show any reason why the Policemen should charge him wrongly. He produced two defence witnesses to prove that he was a man of good character. On his conviction by the City Magistrate, Peshawar, the accused appealed to the Sessions Court, where he did not succeed. He came up on revision. His Counsel invited my attention to ss. 22 and 23, Dangerous Drugs Act. A comparison of the two sections clearly shows that the Head Constable and the Constables were not authorized to enter the house of Musammat Amirjan and to detain and search the accused without a warrant. He urged that the irregularity vitiated the trial. The case was, therefore, taken to a full hearing.

The learned Crown Counsel has admitted that it was not proved on the record that the constables were authorized to take the steps which they had taken, but he pleaded that the irregularity did not vitiate the trial. He quoted three rulings of the Allahabad High Court, e. g. Emperor v. Allah Dad (1), Ali Ahmed Khan v. Emperor (2) and Kutroo v. Emperor (3). The case quoted by the learned Crown Counsel support the proposition advanced by him. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has not been able to show any authority to the contrary. The point on which the case was taken to a full hearing therefore fails. On facts I concur with the two Courts below that it is proved beyond doubt that the accused was in possession of a small quantity of cocaine. There is no reason why the Policemen should take up a case against him. The conviction is, therefore, maintained. As regards the sentence the evil habit of eating cocaine and frequenting brothels must be eradicated, and I think the accused richly deserves what he has received. The petition is dismissed.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 812 of 1932

BHAGWAT SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

KUMAR KAMAKHAYA NARAIN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 47—Suit for possession of village covered by lease—Second suit for ejectment—Third suit—Prayer for demolition of bhandar in village—Relief, if to be obtained in executing Court—Separate suit, if maintainable—Same cause of action—Son of defendant joined in suit—Whether makes seperate suit maintainable—Point not taken in second suit—Res judicata, if operates.

The plaintiff brought a suit in 1920 for possession of a village which was the subject-matter of a thica lease and a judgment was obtained by the plaintiff and the decree for delivery of possession was put into execution. Again a suit was brought by the plaintiff of the former action for ejectment of some of the defendants from the bakasht land and a decree was again obtained. A third suit was filed by the plaintiff in respect of a plot of land in the same village on which a bhandar stood claiming that in spite of the delivery of possession through the Court he had not obtained actual possession of the land or part of the land which was the subject-matter of the lease:

Held, that it being not denied that the building was erected during the course of the lease, if the plaintiff had any right to have the building demolished before he got possession of the land at the hands of the defendant, then quite clearly he could make that claim in the former suit and that it was a cause of action or part of a cause of action which the plaintiff might have included in the first suit, and not having included it, he could not bring a separate suit with regard to it. As he had got a decree for possession of the property, any grievance he might have with regard to that matter must be made in the executing Court and not by way of a separate uit.

Held, also that the fact that another person had been joined to the third suit, a person who was not a party to the former actions, would not justify the suit unless it could be shown that the plaintiff had a separate cause of action against that person in which case the other defendant should not have been joined in the subsequent action. The fact of joining the son of the original trespasser alleging no particular cause of action against him is no answer to the point that any grievance that the plaintiff may have must be ventilated in the executing Court and not by way of a separate action.

Held, further that the mere fact that the point was not taken in the second suit did not give license to the plaintiff to continue to bring actions one after the other with regard to the property which was clearly a part of the property for which he got delivery of possession in the first suit. Thakur Begeshwari Charan Singh v. Bindheswari Charan Singh (1), not applied.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated March 31, 1932, affirming that of the Munsif of Chatra, dated June 8, 1931.

Mr. Bankim Chandra De, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—I think this appeal succeeds. The defendants are the appellants and they raise the question whether the relief which the plaintiff sought in the action out of which this appeal arises, should have been obtained in the executing Court and not by way of a separate suit.

It is necessary to state very shortly the facts in order to appreciate the question argued before me. In the year 1920 an action was brought by the plaintiff (who is the respondent before me) for possession of a village which was the subject-matter of a thica lease for five years from 1899 to 1904. The contention (it would appear) in that suit was that the defendant, after the expiration of the lease, had held over. A judgment was obtained by the plaintiff and the decree for delivery of possession was put into execution. Again a suit was brought by the plaintiff of the former action for ejectment of some of the defendants from the bakasht land and a decree was again obtained. Now, this third suit has been brought with regard to a plot of land admittedly in the same village, upon which a bhandar stood. The defendant in the trial Court and in the Appellate Court raised unsuccessfully the question raised in this Court, namely, that as the land in the three suits was a part of the village the possession of which was decreed in the first suit, having regard to the claim made by the plaintiff in this action and in the former action (that is to say the second action) any relief which he wished to obtain should have been obtained in the executing Court and not by way of a separate suit.

In so far as the cause of action could be described as the same in this suit and in the first suit (or the second suit), the learned Government Pleader appearing on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent does not question the correctness of the proposition advanced by Mr. De on behalf of the appellants. It must be so as the section itself is explicit on the point. The only question, therefore, in dispute is whether the cause of action is substantially the same. That depends entirely upon what the plaintiff claimed in the suit. As will be seen from the judgment in appeal and from the plaint, the plaintiff's grievance admittedly was that in spite of the delivery of possession through the Court in the first suit the defendant remained in possession. Now, taking those facts simpliciter, there is no doubt that the principle enunciated by s. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies. Now let me repeat myself on this point. The plaintiff claimed that in spite of the delivery of possession through the Court he had not obtained actual possession of the land or part of the land which was the subject-matter of the lease of 1899. Section 47 would presumably apply to this state of facts. In this Court the appellants meet the point by two answers, in the Courts below by one only. The answer which was given to the point in the Court below, and which is common to one of the arguments advanced in this Court, was that the claim in the suit out of which this appeal arises included a claim for the demolition of the building on the plot of land and, therefore, it was a different cause of action. The second answer is that there was another party to this section who was not a party to the former suit : this party was defendant No. 2 the son of defendant No. 1. The learned Judge in the Court below, as I have stated accepted the answer to the first point made before him on behalf of the appellants. In my judgment, it is impossible to support his judgment on that ground. It was not impossible to claim the demolition of the bhandar in the first action as must be obvious. It is not denied that the building was erected during the course of the lease ; and, therefore, if the plaintiff had any right to have the building demolished before he got possession of the land at the hands of the defendant, then quite clearly he could make that claim in the former suit. It is suggested by the learned Government Pleader as a further answer to the point made by Mr. De in this connection that if he had sought relief as to this matter in the executing Court, the executing Court would have met him by saying that "no such decree for the demolition of the building has been made." But in my judgment, that clearly discloses that it was a cause of action or part of a cause of action which the plaintiff might have included in the first suit, and, not having included it, he cannot bring a separate suit with regard to it.

But there is a further answer to the point, and that is that an action for demolition of the building can be brought on the assumption that the plaintiff has not got possession of the property and for this reason. If he has not got possession of the property, then the claim for demolition of the building obviously includes in this action a claim for possession of the property ; and, as he has got a decree for possession of the property, any grievances he may have with regard to that matter (as is admitted) must be made in the executing Court and not by way of a separate suit. Any addition of a claim for demolition of the building to a cause of action for possession of the property does not remove from the path of the plaintiff the answer that any claim for possession now must be made in the executing Court, which granted him the decree for possession and not by way of a separate suit.

The second answer given by the learned Government Pleader was that there was another party to this action. The fact that another person has been joined to this action, a person who was not a party to the former actions, does not meet the point made against the plaintiff by the defendant-appellant, unless it can be shown that the plaintiff has a separate cause of action against the person. And if he has got a separate cause of action against that person, quite clearly he should not have joined the first defendant to this action. But the third answer to it is that the cause of action alleged by the plaintiff is in that the defendant No. 2 has committed a separate trespass upon the land, but that in spite of delivery of possession by the Court in the first suit the plaintiff in fact has not got possession. In my judgment, quite clearly the fact of joining the son of the original trespasser alleging no particular cause of action against him is no answer to the point that any grievance that the plaintiff may have must be ventilated in the executing Court and not by way of a separate action.

There is only one other point which it is necessary to consider and that is one made by the Court during the course of the argument. It was suggested to Mr. De that this question of whether the relief which the plaintiff claimed should be got at the hands of the executing Court and not way of a separate suit might have been raised in the second action, and that not being done, it must be considered as res judicata. The authority relied upon by Mr. De for that matter against that point is the decision in Thakur Bageshwari Charan Singh v. Bindheswari Charan Singh (1). It does not seem to me, however, to meet the point. The real answer to the point seems to me to be this. The mere fact that the point was not taken in the second suit does not give license to the plaintiff to continue to bring actions one after the other with regard to the property which was clearly a part of the property for which he got delivery of possession in the first suit, that is to say, suit of February 1920.

As I have stated, in my opinion, the appeal succeeds and should be allowed with costs throughout.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 486—Counterfeiting trade-mark—Offence, when committed—Test in such cases.

A person who employs a label which in general resembles the label used by another manufacturer, is guilty of counterfeiting a trade-mark under s. 486 of the Penal Code, irrespective of the circumstance that the registered trade-mark of the one is quite different from the trade-mark of the other. The test is not, whether a literate purchaser would be deceived if he had the two marks side by side, but whether an ordinary unwary purchaser would be deceived. Emperor v. Ganpat Sitaram (1) and Herbert Whitworth, Ltd. v. Jamnadas Nem Chand Mehta (2), followed.

Cr. R. P. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated August 8, 1933.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Jhanda Singh and Muhammad Alam, for the Oppoiste Party.

Order.—The two petitioners Faqir Chand and Dwarka Das have been sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 50 each under the provisions of s. 486, Penal Code, for selling goods marked with a counterfeit trade-mark.

The Courts below have dealt with the subject exhaustively and the question is one of fact. The complaint was brought by the firm Nihal Chand-Ram Lal of Kasur. The name of the petitioners' firm is "The Industrial Trading Company of Kasur." One of the petitioners used to be a servant of the complainant firm and the other petitioner used to be a servant of the complainant in the connected criminal revision No. 1695 of 1933. Hairdyes used to come principally from Germany but owing to the war they ceased to do so and Indian firms commenced their manufacture. The get-up of the cartons in which the small bottles are placed is probably more or less the same as the get-up used by the German firms, but the firms which started manufacturing these dyes employed in addition figures in order to distinguish their manufactures. The complainant firm in this case has been manufacturing hairdyes since 1924 and it introduced an hairdye styled "Horse Brand Shining Black Hairdye" to the market in 1927. In addition to these words there is the figure of a horse. The firm claimed that it had a wide sale for this particular dye and this is supported by evidence. The complaint is that, about the middle of 1932, the petitioners commenced to turn out a hairdye styling it the "Arabic Horse Shining Black Hairdye." The design on it is also a horse but there is a rider on the horse and the colours are not the same. The complainant firm's case was that the resemblance was such as to mislead the public and the two Courts below have come to the conclusion that it would. The complainant has admitted that he cannot claim protection for the general get-up and has stated that he will be content if the design of the horse is changed. For example, it is in evidence that there is a hairdye in the market the get-up of the carton of which is very much the same but in the case of it the figure is a "bear."

The law on the subject has been frequently laid down. In Emperor v. Ganpat Sitaram (1) it was held by a Division Bench that a person who employs a label which in general resembles the label used by another manufacturer is guilty of counterfeiting a trade-mark under s. 486, Penal Code; irrespective of the circumstance that the registered trade-mark of the one is quite different from the trade-mark of the other. Again in Herbert Whitworth, Ltd. v. Jamnadas Nem Chand Mehta (2), another Division Bench held that no trader has a right to use a trade-mark so nearly resembling that of another trader as to be calculated to mislead incautions purchasers. The use of such a trade-mark may be restricted by injunction, although no purchaser has actually been misled, for the very life of a trade-mark depends upon the promptitude with which it is vindicated. The Judge has to make up his mind as to whether on the facts before him he thinks it probable that purchasers would be deceived by the similarity of the marks and general get-up of the two sets of goods and it is not a matter for witnesses to say. The Calcutta High Court has taken the same view in Aswini Kumar Pal v. Emperor (3), where it was said that the test is not, whether a literate purchaser would be deceived if he had the two marks side by side but whether an ordinary unwary purchaser would be deceived. It was observed in that judgment that no one could possibly mistake the two sets, if he were on the alert and knew the original well, but that was not the proper test: it must be considered from the point of view of the ordinary unwary purchaser.

In the present case a person asking for "Ghora marka hairdye" might easily be given the brand of the petitioners though it is written on it that it is "Arbi Ghora marka hairdye." The similarity of the get-up would help in this deception and that can be taken into consideration even although the complainant firm cannot claim a trade-mark in the general get-up. It is open to the petitioners to change the designation from a horse to something else and that is all that the complainant firm desires.

In my judgment the case was properly decided and I dismiss this criminal revision.

Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (Madras Act I of 1900), s. 6—Landlord's right to set off rent against value of improvements due to sub-lessee.

Where property has been sub-leased by the lessee and the sub-lessee has made improvements, the landlord is entitled, in a suit for eviction, to set off any sum due to him for rent in respect of the holding against the sum found due to the sub-lessee by way of compensation for value of improvements, even though nothing is due to the lessee from the sub-lessee in respect of rent.

In a suit by a landlord for eviction, the landlord is entitled to set off any money due to him for rent in respect of the tenancy against sums due by way of compensation for value of improvements to a sub-lessee to whom the lessee sub-leased the properties.

S. C. A. against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ottapalan in Appeal Suit No. 11 of 1927, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Walluvanad in Original Suit No. 180 of 1924.

Mr. S. Venkatachala Sastri, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. R. Sesha Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Beasley, C. J.—The appellants here were defendants Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8 and 12 to 26 in the suit. Defendants Nos. 3 to 26 are members of a tarwad to whom the first defendant sub-leased the suit lands. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit lands.

The point for consideration is one which arises out of s. 6 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (I of 1900). The appellants, being sub-tenants and the plaintiff having succeeded in his suit for ejectment, claimed compensation for improvements under s. 5 of the same Act. The question here is whether the first respondent, the plaintiff in the suit, is entitled to set off any money due to him for rent in respect of the tenancy against the sum found due to the tenants for compensation. It is contended for the appellants that they are the sub-tenants of the first defendant and have paid rent to him and that there is, therefore, nothing due in respect of rent from them to the first respondent. In the lower Appellate Court it was held that on a construction of s. 6 the appellants' contention must fail and accordingly the landlord's (first respondent's) claim for a set off in respect of rent due to him, there being admittedly rent due to him from the first defendant, must be allowed. In our view, the lower Appellate Court was right. Section 6 (1) provides that in an ejectment suit against a tenant—and in s. 3 (1) of the Act "tenant" is defined to include a sub-lessee and the appellants are, therefore, tenants within the meaning of s. 6 (1)—if the plaintiff succeeds, as he did here, the defendant, which obviously means the tenant against whom an order of ejectment is made, can put forward a claim for compensation for improvements and that when this has been established and the amount of the compensation is ascertained, a decree must then be passed declaring the amount so found due and ordering that on payment by the plaintiff into Court of that amount the defendant is to put the plaintiff in possession of the land with the improvements thereon. There is no reason for saying that defendant does not mean defendants also. Sub-s. (2) provides for a set off by the landlord of "any sum of money due by the defendant to the plaintiff for rent or otherwise in respect of the tenancy". What gives rise to the set off, therefore, is the compensation awarded to the defendant. If no compensation is awarded, there is no right of set off. The appellants either come within the provisions of s. 6 or they do not. It seems to us clear that, if they do come within the provisions, as they manifestly do, they come within the provisions of the section for all purposes and that it is immaterial whether the rent due to the plaintiff is due to him by his immediate lessee or by sub-lessees. The fact that the sub-lessee has paid his rent to the lessee is a matter to be settled between them and is not one which, in our view, can alter the right of the landlord to his set off in respect of unpaid rent. In our opinion, therefore, the lower Appellate Court's decision upon this point must be affirmed and this second appeal dismissed with costs.

With regard to the first respondent's Memorandum of Objections with regard to the lower Appellate Court's order for costs, we agree with the reasons given by the lower Appellate Court for ordering that both parties to the appeal are to bear their own costs in the trial Court except in regard to commission batta which is to be shared in equal moieties. The Memorandum of Objections is also dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Auction-purchaser, if a necessary party to suit under O. XXI, r. 63.

The auction-purchaser is a necessary party to a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, and if there is no suit in which he was a party until more than a year after the dismissal of objection to attachment, the order dismissing the objection is conclusive in favour of the auction-purchaser. Chuni Lal v. Abdul Ali (1), referred to.

C. Rev. P. from an order of the Second Additional Judge, Peshawar, dated October 13, 1933.

Mr. Hukam Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Beliram, R. B. for the Respondents.

Order.—Musammat Jiwani, a widow, sued her son Haji Muhammad and others who claimed to be mortgagees under him, for possession of a house in Peshawar City, alleging that it was her ancestral property which she had inherited from her father, and that her son had mortgaged it during her prolonged absence from Peshawar and without her knowledge. The plaint accompanied by a petition to sue in forma pauperis was presented in December 1929 and the mortgage had been effected in December 1920. The petition to sue in forma pauperis was at first dismissed, but after revision was ultimately allowed on April 11, 1931. Between December 1929 and April 1931, one Ramjidas had obtained a money decree against Haji Muhammad and had attached the house in suit in execution thereof and it had been purchased in Court sale by Ghulam Haidar, the sale taking place in April 1930 and being confirmed two months later.

In February 1932, Haji Said Ahmad Ali applied for substitution as plaintiff on the ground that Musammat Jiwani had died and that he was her successor under a will. In January 1933 Ghulam Haidar, the auction-purchaser, was added as a defendant in view of the auction sale in his favour. The suit was dismissed in the trial Court, but the decision was reversed in appeal and Haji Said Ahmad Ali was granted a decree for possession of the house. Ghulam Haidar now comes up in revision. It appears that when the house was attached in execution of the decree of Ramjidas, Musammat Jiwani entered an objection which was dismissed on February 24, 1930. Counsel for the petitioner urges that she was then bound to bring a declaratory suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, and that as she failed to do so within the period of limitation (one year), the order dismissing her objection is conclusive in favour of the auction-purchaser.

In answer to this contention it has been urged on behalf of the respondent that Ghulam Haidar was brought upon the record in accordance with the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, and that his substitution as a party did not initiate a new proceeding and the suit was merely continued by him: Chuni Lal v. Abdul Ali (1). It is further urged that the suit contemplated by O. XXI, r. 63, may be one in which consequential relief is claimed as well as a declaration, and that, therefore, a suit for possession is one which meets the requirements of that rule. It is urged that where such a suit was pending at the time Musammat Jiwani's objection was dismissed, it was unnecessary to bring another suit within a year. This argument on behalf of the respondents might be accepted had the auction-purchaser been a party to the suit, but he was not a party to the suit prior to the order dismissing the objection and he was not made a party thereto within a year of that order. There can be no doubt that the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, and there having been no suit in which he was a party until more than a year after the dismissal of Musammat Jiwani's objection the contention of learned Counsel for the petitioner must succeed.

As a last resort Counsel for the respondent urges that this contention has only been raised in revision, but though it is not mentioned in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, yet that of the trial Court distinctly shows that it was raised though it was not made a basis for decision. I must grant this petition and I hereby set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiff-respondent's suit with costs throughout.

Cantonments Act (II of 1924), s. 187—Officer ordinarily authorized to communicate sanction writing to applicant and conveying sanction—Applicant is entitled to act on it.

Where the petitioner makes an application to the Cantonment Authority for sanction and a person ordinarily authorized to communicate the sanction, writes and conveys sanction on an official form of the Cantonment Board, the petitioner is entitled to act on such sanction, it being not his business to enquire if the sanction conveyed by him had been granted by the Board.

Cr. R. P. from an order of the District Magistrate, Rawalpindi, dated November 24, 1933.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. A. R. Khosla and Sardar Mahtab Singh, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner, Gopi Chand, made an application to the Cantonment Authority of Rawalpindi for sanction to make permanent a temporary platform in front of his three houses and with the application which purported to be made under s. 187, Cantonments Act, he submitted a plan. It seems that the platform was originally an encroachment on the street and in the plan which accompanied the application the measurements of the old platform were mentioned and it was not proposed to extend the new platform beyond these measurements. The Cantonment Overseer inspected the spot on receipt of the application by the Cantonment Authority and reported that there was no existing platform and therefore the application was for the construction of a new platform which constituted an encroachment on Cantonment land. A reply was consequently sent to the petitioner to apply for the lease of the land according to the rules to which his attention was invited.

The matter subsequently went before the Executive Officer of the Cantonment, and it appears that he inspected the spot accompanied by the Cantonment Engineer and Overseer, and noted that the proposal of the petitioner was merely to rebuild an existing platform and also that a platform already existed. Subsequently, a letter in writing, Ex. P. F., was sent to the petitioner, on April 7, 1931, which is as follows:

"Reference your application for contruction of platform in front of houses Nos. 1105 to 1107 B. I. Bazar. Platform may be built on existing kacha platform, but if extension is required, application and lease will be required."

This letter is signed by Major Marshall, Executive Officer. On receipt of this reply the petitioner constructed the platform, but in the meantime the other officials of the Cantonment objected to the construction on the ground that it constituted a new encroachment on cantonment land. It was not the ground of objection, and it is not the case of the Cantonment Authority before me, that the petitioner constructed the platform in contravention of the plan submitted by him and the order conveyed to him by the Executive Officer on April 7, 1931. The case on the other hand was and is that in fact no platform previously existed on this land and an entirely new encroachment was made by the petitioner on Cantonment land by the construction of the platform. The attention of the Executive Officer was invited to this matter and he wrote back on April 10, as follows:

"There was obviously an old platform in this place. No extension had been permitted. The G. L. R. should be corrected (that is to say the General Land Register)."

Two years ater this when the Executive Officer had left the Cantonment a notice was served, under s. 187, on the petitioner requiring him to demolish the platform as having been constructed without the sanction of the Cantonment Authority and on his failure to comply with this notice he was prosecuted and fined Rs. 100. He appealed to the District Magistrate, but without success. He has consequently come up to this Court on revision.

I am now informed that subsequently to the dismissal of the appeal by the District Magistrate, the Cantonment Authority has permitted the petitioner to retain the platform and apparently some document is proposed to be executed or has been executed to this effect. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the notice of the Cantonment Authority or rather the prosecution of the petitioner is illegal as a prosecution can be started only within six months of the commission of the offence, but in the present case the prosecution was launched within six months of the notice issued by the Cantonment Authority and there is no force in the contention of the learned Counsel that the offence was committed more than two years previous to the institution of the present proceedings. The prosecution in this case is not for the alleged original encroachment, but for the disobedience of the notice.

The petition, however, must succeed on the ground that the petitioner constructed the platform after receipt of sanction of the Cantonment Authority by means of the letter dated April 7, 1931, from the Executive Officer of the Cantonment. The Executive Officer by virtue of s. 13, Cantonment Act, is the Secretary of the Cantonment Board, and it is admitted before me that all orders of the Cantonment Authority are communicated under his signature, and this would normally be the case. It is, however, contended on behalf of the Cantonment Authority that there was no resolution of such authority sanctioning the construction of the platform in this case. That however was entirely a matter for the Executive Officer to see and the petitioner had no concern with it. It was not his business to enquire from the Executive Officer whether the sanction conveyed by him had been granted by the Cantonment Authority. He was entitled to assume that the Executive Officer was acting in accordance with the authority conferred on him by the Cantonment Board, Counsel further contends that ordinarily a resolution of the Cantonment Board is communicated to the applicants in such cases. It might be the ordinary practice, but no provision of the law has been cited which requires that sanction of the Cantonment Authority in such cases should be communicated to the applicants in the form of a resolution. If a person who is ordinarily authorized to communicate the sanction of the Cantonment Authority, writes and conveys sanction to an applicant to the Cantonment Authority and on an official form of the Cantonment

Board, as in this case, the applicant is entitled to act on such sanction.

I accept this petition and setting aside the conviction of the petitioner direct that the fine, if paid by him, be refunded.

CHAND SINGH—CONVICT—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 300, 302—Accused armed with deadly weapon thrushing it into the chest of deceased causing instantaneous death—Intention to murder, inference of.

If a man, who is armed with a deadly weapon like a sela, thrusts that weapon into the chest of his victim and causes instantaneous death, he can have only one intention, namely, intention to murder.

Cr. A. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, dated November 27, 1933.

Mr. R. P. Khosla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—Chand Singh has been convicted of an offence under s. 302, Penal Code, and has been sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty of law. He has appealed to this Court through Counsel and the record of the case is also before us under the provisions of s. 374, Criminal Procedure Code. There is a pedigree table at p. 25 of the printed record in the judgment of the Sessions Judge, I have slightly amplified it. This pedigree table, with the additions which I have made, is sub-joined for facility of reference*.

One Phuman Singh, P. W. No. 12, had mortgaged with possession 5½ ghumaons of land with Hardit Singh and Nikka Singh for a sum of Rs. 910. Shortly before the occurrence, Phuman Singh transferred the equity of redemption to Kahan Singh for Rs. 1,200. Hardit Singh and Nikka Singh, who had been in possession of the mortgaged land and had been enjoying its produce for a long series of years, were not pleased with the transaction since it would inevitably result in their being dispossessed by the purchaser of the equity of redemption on payment of the money due to them. For this reason the friends and partisans of Nikka Singh and Hardit Singh came to look upon Kahan Singh and his family as their enemies. On the day of the occurrence, according to the evidence for the prosecution, there was a sort of preliminary skirmish in which five persons belonging to the party of Nikka Singh and Hardit Singh abused and threatened Jagat Singh. No further injury was done and the incident closed for the time being. It happened that Musammat Santi, the daughter of Gurdit Singh, was to be married in the afternoon of the day on which the earlier incident took place. It is somewhat difficult to say exactly what was the interval between the two affairs, but speaking generally they could not have been separated from each other by any long interval. The case for the prosecution is that after the marriage ceremony had come to end, five persons, including the appellant, Chand Singh, went to the house of Hardit Singh, and after having armed themselves with sundry weapons returned to the scene of the occurrence. Chand Singh had a sela and so had Pala Singh, absconder. With the other three we are not concerned. Chand Singh gave a blow to Jagat Singh which hit him on his left forearm. Thereupon Sewa Singh, who was related to Jagat Singh by marriage, intervened and stood forward to protect Jagat Singh. He received one blow from Pala Singh and two blows from Chand Singh. One of these blows penetrated the heart with the result that Sewa Singh died almost instantaneously. It may be noted that the other two blows penetrated the lungs.

Sajjan Singh went to Munshi Singh, P. W. No. 11, who is the lambardar of the village, and reported the matter to him. Munshi Singh came to the scene of the occurrence and saw the dead body. Sajjan Singh then went to the Police Station to lodge the first information report. In this report, curiously enough, when giving the names of the five assailants of the deceased, Sewa Singh described one of them as the son of Harnam Singh and did not give his proper name. Chand Singh accused is one of the three sons of Harnam Singh. There are however at least five eye-witnesses of the occurrence and one of them is Sajjan Singh. All these witnesses are unanimous in stating that Chand Singh inflicted the fatal blow upon the deceased Sewa Singh. Pala Singh is an absconder and we are not concerned with him. It has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the circumstances that Sajjan Singh did not mention Chand Singh by name, in the first information report is such as to cast a great deal of suspicion upon the story for the prosecution. It is true that Sajjan Singh in some mysterious manner could not give the name of Chand Singh while the first information report was being taken down by the Police Officer, but it may be noted here that he mentioned the name of Chand Singh to Munshi Singh when he went to inform him of the occurrence. The evidence of the remaining eye-witnesses of the occurrence, is, in my judgment, overwhelming and nothing has been brought out in cross-examination to throw any doubt upon their veracity. I do not see any reason to suppose that all these witnesses had conspired together to shield the actual assailant of Sewa Singh in order to implicate an innocent man. The evidence of Jagat Singh is very important. There cannot be any manner of doubt, having regard to the injury which he received, that he was present at the time of the occurrence. He is quite definite in his evidence that it was Chand Singh who gave a blow to him and inflicted two blows upon Sewa Singh who tried to protect himself from the hands of his assailants.

The learned Counsel Mr. Ram Parshad Khosla, who appeared in this Court for the appellant, argued that there was no intention on the part of Chand Singh, applicant, to commit the murder. The circumstances of the present case however amply prove such an intention. If a man, who is armed with a deadly weapon like a sela, thrusts that weapon into the chest of his victim and causes instantaneous death, he can have only one intention, namely, intention to murder. This argument, therefore, having regard to the nature of the assault, is not convincing. In my judgment the case for the prosecution, having regard to the evidence on the record, is fully proved and the Sessions Judge has arrived at the right conclusion. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal and affirm the conviction and sentence which has been passed upon the appellant and direct that the latter be carried out according to law.

Addison, J.—I agree.

Criminal trial—Dying declaration, when sufficient to support conviction—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 34—Whether applies where there is sudden fight between parties.

A dying declaration alone is sufficient to found a conviction if, after applying the accepted tests, it is held to be true and genuine. It is not necessary that it should be corroborated otherwise. [p. 278, col. 1.]

Where there is a sudden fight between the parties s. 34, Penal Code, does not apply to the case.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Derajat Division, dated November 5, 1934.

Mr. Abdul Wahab Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Raja Singh, for the Crown.

Judgment.—On September 9, 1934, at 11-15 A. M. one Badshah Mir made a report at the Frontier Constabulary Post Torwari that Azam Khan, Moin Khan, Dostali Khan and Masti Khan of Darsmand had stabbed Majan of the same village to death. The reporter stated that the deceased was his turbur and asked that a chigha party should be taken out to arrest the accused. The information was telephoned to the Doaba Police Station and a First Information Report was registered there at 11-30 A. M. Half an hour before the report was recorded, Masti Khan accused also appeared at the station and gave his own version of the affair.

The Sub-Inspector proceeded to the spot. He reached there at 1-30 A. M. The first thing he did was to take down the dying declaration of deceased Majan who is also known as Muhammad Jan. In this statement the deceased said that he was coming back after having ploughed his land, when on the way near Ghundi, he saw Moin, Azam Khan, Dostali and Masti in ambush. Masti ordered the others to catch him and thereupon all four attacked him. Azam Khan caught hold of him and the other three stabbed him with daggers. Majan alleged that he also dealt them stone blows. He stated that he had seen Gul, Ibtibar Shah and Badshah Mir of his village in the vicinity. They came to him on seeing the occurrence, but arrived after the accused had left. As regards the motive, he alleged that 13-14 years ago he had murdered Majagul, cousin of the four accused and was wounded himself also. Azam Khan and Masti Khan had taken part in the fracas. They were all sent up to the Sessions Court, where Muhammad Jan was acquitted and Azam sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

The Sub-Inspector arrested Masti Khan at the Police Station when he received the information relayed from Torwari Post. He arrested Azam the same evening and Moin the next morning in the village. Dostali absconded. Masti (45), Azam (60) and Moin (35) were therefore challaned and committed under s. 302-34, Penal Code, to the Sessions Court. Proceedings under s. 512, Criminal Procedure Code, were taken against Dostali. At the trial the medical evidence disclosed that Majan had received three stab wounds in the abdomen, one incised wound on the left middle finger, one incised wound in the interspace of ring and middle fingers, and one incised wound in front of right little finger. He died on September 11, 1934, at 2 A. M. The peritoneum, and small and large intestines were injured and so was the stomach. Liver was cut, the injuries resulted in death. Masti Khan was also examined. He was found to have a contused wound on the left temporal region of the head, size 1-1/3″ by 1/3″ and scalp deep.

Gul, Badshah Mir, Ihtibar Shah and Nurulla appeared as eye-witnesses to prove that the accused lay in wait for the deceased and wounded him. Gul and Badshah Mir are brothers and are collaterals of the accused and the deceased. The witnesses and the deceased are descended from Turbaz, while the accused are the descendants of his brother Muhammad Khan. Ihtibar Shah cultivates the land of Yakub Khan, a cousin of Sarwar Khan. He has been appearing for Sarwar Khan and his brother Sardar as a witness in cases. Sarwar Khan appeared as a witness and admitted that he was a cousin of Muhammad Jan the deceased. Nurulla is the son of Muhammad Jan. It is important to note that Badshah Mir admits that the fight was in progress when he arrived on the scene. The accused were striking the deceased at the time. On the other hand, Gul and Ihtibar Shah, his companions, state that they saw the three accused now before the Court and Dostali coming out of a clump of trees and attacking the deceased. Roshan Din proved the first report made at Torwari and Shah Sarwar, Sub-Inspector, proved the dying declaration of the deceased. Muhammad Ayaz Khan, Naib Tahsildar, recorded a second dying declaration which he proved at the trial. It is practically to the same effect as the first.

Masti Khan, accused, stated that the cattle of the deceased had damaged his crop, that he was taking them to the pound, that Usman and his father Muhammad Jan resisted him in doing so, and that Muhammad Jan gave him a hatchet blow on the head. Muhammad Jan had also a dagger and Usman had a knife. Dostali, the brother of Masti Khan, was trying to avoid Majan and in doing so defended himself with a sickle which he possessed. Accused has stated that he became senseless and on coming to senses, went to the Police Station and lodged a first information report. He said that Akram and Nasimgul were his defence witnesses. Azam Khan pleaded an alibi and said that he was an old man and could not have held the deceased, while the other three accused were stabbing him, as described in the dying declaration. Moin Khan also pleaded an alibi. Akram was produced in defence. He supported the story given by Masti Khan. Curiously, Majan was quite fit when the witness went to him and said that he did not want his assistance. The witness did not make a statement to the Police. The wife of Ayaz Khan is the sister of Masti Khan, and Ayaz Khan is a distant cousin of the witness. Atlas, the next witness for the defence, is the brother of Akram. He admits that Said Akbar is his maternal uncle and the sister of Said Akbar is the mother of Masti and Moin Khan. He also did not make a statement to the Police. Nasimgul was not produced. Other witnesses were produced to prove the alibis of the remaining accused.

The first assessor was of opinion that there was a sudden fight, the cause of which was not clear. He was ready to believe that perhaps the cause given by Masti Khan was true. He held the view that in the sudden quarrel Masti and Moin had stabbed the deceased and were guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Azam was not guilty in his opinion. The second assessor held Masti and Moin guilty of murder and the fourth agreed with him. The third assessor was of the view that the absconder alone was responsible for the offence and that the accused before the Court were innocent.

The learned Sessions Judge rejected the evidence of Gul, Ihtibar Shah and Badshah Mir on the ground that in the first dying declaration the deceased had said that they reached him after the accused had left for the tribal territory. Nurulla he rejected because he was not referred to in the dying declaration at all. He observed that the dying declaration itself should not be accepted as correct unless and until it is corroborated by some other evidence with regard to each accused. He found that the wound on the head of Masti Khan and his admission that he was present and had a quarrel with the deceased were sufficient corroboration of the dying declaration so far as that particular accused was concerned. With respect to the other accused, he did not consider the motive and the dying declaration enough to justify a conviction. He therefore acquitted Azam and Moin, convicted Masti Khan under ss. 302-34, Penal Code, and sentenced him to death. Masti Khan has appealed and the sentence of death is before us for confirmation.

On going through the dying declaration recorded by the Sub-Inspector, we find that the learned trial Judge has misinformed himself about its contents. The deceased is quite explicit that Badshah Mir, Gul and Ihtibar Shah came to his side on seeing the occurrence. His allegation that they reached him after the accused had left for the hills does not necessarily imply that they did not see the attack while they were coming to his rescue. We are, therefore of opinion, that the evidence of Gul, Ihtibar Shah and Badshah Mir has been rejected for an incorrect reason. So far as Nurulla is concerned, we have got an indication that perhaps he was also present on the spot. In the report which was made at Torwari, Badshah Mir said that Majan son of Nurulla was stabbed by the accused. Majan is in fact the son of Chauntar. It is obvious that Nurulla's name was mentioned at the Post, but was not taken down in connection with what was stated about him. On the other hand the fact remains that the deceased did not mention in the first dying declaration that Nurulla was his companion. We are of the opinion, therefore, that at least Ihtibar Shah, Badshah Mir and Gul did arrive on the scene when the deceased was being attacked.

We may also refer to the remarks of the learned trial Judge with regard to the dying declaration. We do not agree with him that a conviction cannot be based on a dying declaration alone, and that it is necessary to find some corroboration for it in order to do so. A dying declaration has been held by this Court to be sufficient on which to found a conviction if, after applying the accepted tests, it is held to be true and genuine. It is not necessary that like an approver's statement, it should be corroborated otherwise, and the learned trial Judge was, therefore, wrong in applying the principles governing confessions and statements of approvers to the statement of the dying man who describes the way in which he has come by his wounds.

Turning to the case in hand, we are of opinion that the motive given by the deceased for the attack on him does not appear to be correct. The murder with which Muhammad Jan, the deceased was charged, happened in 1915. It is incredible that the party of the accused should be inactive for a period of 19 years and suddenly take it into their heads to avenge their relation. It is not denied by Gul that Khaita Gul and Khialgul, the first cousins of the person who were killed in the fight and for whose murder Muhammad Jan was charged, are still alive and that some other relatives of the same individual nearer to him than Masti Khan and Azam Khan are also living in the same village. It is, therefore, unlikely that the latter should take up the cudgels on their behalf. On the whole, therefore, we are inclined to agree with the first assessor that something must have happened at the moment which resulted in a sudden fight. We may note in this connection that the evidence also does not help much in tracing the cause which led to the tragic quarrel. Badshah Mir arrived on the scene when the deceased was being attacked, and we are inclined to think that Ihtibar Shah and Gul are exaggerating when they say that they saw the accused in ambush.

Having found a possibility that there was a sudden fight between the parties, it needs no argument to show that s. 34, Penal Code, does not apply to the case. The medical evidence is clear that only one man had caused the injuries on the deceased and we have now to find out as to who amongst the persons charged is responsible for them. Masti Khan was undoubtedly present. He has a wound on his head, which he says was caused with a hatchet. The deceased definitely stated in his dying declaration that he had thrown stones at his assailants, and we are inclined to think that the injury was caused by a stone. But this does not necessarily imply that he stabbed the deceased. We have it in the prosecution evidence that the culprits went towards the tribal territory. And yet before the news of the offence was relayed from Torwari to Doaba Police Station, which is five miles from the spot, Masti Khan had already appeared at that place and pleaded his innocence.

As regards the other two accused, we know that the Sub-Inspector arrested them in the village, Azam on the same day and Moin the next morning. These two accused had no wounds on their persons and they have pleaded alibis for which they have produced evidence. Azam is an old man of 60 and it was said in the dying declaration that he only held the deceased while the others attacked him, a role which is popularly given to persons who are included falsely. It follows from the discussion, therefore, that these three individuals did not go to the tribal territory and their subsequent conduct is such as to raise a doubt with regard to their culpability. It is not likely that they would have behaved in this manner, if in fact they had previously attacked the deceased and done him to death. The benefit of this doubt must go to them. The acquittal of Azam and Moin is, therefore, justified on these grounds, and Masti Khan's appeal is accepted and his conviction and sentence are set aside. He should be set at liberty at once.

Bengal Land (Redemption and Foreclosure) Regulation (XVII of 1806), ss. 7, 8—Notice under s. 8—Requirements of.

If a notice under s. 8 of the Bengal Land (Redemption and Foreclosure) Regulation contains a reference to s. 7 of the Regulation, or enumerates the various methods described in it for avoiding foreclosure, the notice will be valid. The unnecessary adoption of an incomplete description of the mode of redemption allowed by s. 7 cannot affect that validity of the notice. Tara Chand v. Chiman (1) and Zora v. Chandu (2), dissented from, Wasawa Singh v. Rura (5) and Gobind Mal v. Ram Chand (6), relied on.

L. P. A. against judgment of Dalip Singh, J., dated May 27, 1929.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

Coldstream, J.—The suit out of which this Letters Patent Appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiffs against the defendants to redeem a mortgage by way of conditional sale effected by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest in 1889. The suit was contested by the defendant who represented the original mortgagee on the ground that notice of forecolsure had been duly issued in 1896 under Regulation XVII of 1806, and the mortgage had not been redeemed within the years allowed by the Regulation. The plaintiffs met this plea with the objections that the petition for foreclosure under the Regulation had been presented by only one of the mortgagees and not by all and that the previous demand required by the Regulation had not been proved. No objection regarding the form of notice was taken. These objections were overruled by the trial Judge who dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge who agreed with the trial Court regarding the objections mentioned above. The plaintiffs, however, raised a third objection namely that the notice served upon them under s. 8 of the Regulation Act of 1806 had not mentioned that the mortgagor was at liberty to redeem the mortgage by tendering the amount due to the mortgagee. Although the notice had stated that the mortgagor could avoid foreclosure by redeeming the mortgage in the manner described in s. 7 of the Regulation, the learned District Judge found force in the plaintiff's contention and in view of the judgments of Chevis, J. in Tara Chand v. Chiman (1), and Zora v. Chandu (2), he accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the trial Court under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, to determine the amount due upon the mortgage.

The defendants appealed to this Court and the appeal came before a Judge in Chambers who dismissed it remarking that the point in dispute was covered by the two decisions cited and that though he might himself have come to a different conclusion he was not prepared to hold that these decisions were wrong. Against this judgment, the defendants have preferred the present appeal and on their behalf it is contended by Mr. Shamair Chand that the two rulings upon which reliance was placed are contrary to the weight of judicial authority. He has referred to us Fakira v. Piyare Lal (3), where it was held by Harris, J. that a notice was not defective because it did not state the amount of interest due. The notice in that case did not specify the manner in which foreclosure might be avoided but did make a reference to s. 7 of the Regulation and this reference was considered to be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 8. He has also referred us to Sardari v. Chiranji Lal (4), in which Maude, J., remarked that:

"no doubt the Courts have been very strict in requiring that the provisions of the Regulation shall be strictly complied with but I am not aware of any decision to the effect that the actual wording of the Regulation must be reproduced in the notice verbatim."

It is not clear whether the notice in that case did or did not refer to s. 7 of the Regulation. In Wasawa Singh v. Rura (5), it was observed by a Division Bench of the Chief Court that:

"it would be sufficient to reproduce the actual words of s. 8 of the Regulation or it would probably be sufficient to set out the full purport of the section,"

In Gobind Mal v. Ram Chand (6), Harrison and Agha Haidar, JJ., after a review of the authorities noticed that the rulings went to show that the mortgagee has the option either of giving the actual contents of s. 8 and specifying the three methods in which foreclosure may be avoided, or of quoting the actual section and referring the mortgagor to its contents. These authorities appear clearly to establish the proposition that if the notice either contains a reference to s. 7 of the Regulation or enumerates the various methods described in it for avoiding foreclosure the notice will be valid. In reply to Mr. Shamair Chand's arguments, however, Mr. S. L. Puri while conceding the correctness of this proposition still contends that the judgments by Chevis, J., which has not been expressly dissented from are correct and asks us to hold that the present notice is vitiated by the fact that after referring to s. 7 it also proceeds to enumerate the methods of redemption for avoiding foreclosure open to the mortgagor described in that section but enumerates them incompletely. He has further drawn our attention to numerous rulings to the effect that the technicalities of the Regulation whose provisions regarding procedure are imperative and intended to protect the mortgagor against fraud, must be very strictly observed. This proposition cannot, of course, be disputed. The question here, however, is whether the present notice is in strict conformity with the requirements of s. 8, and I do not think it necessary to refer to the judgment quoted by Mr. Puri. Nor need I refer to the authorities to which he has drawn our attention which lay down that notices not properly signed by the Judge or not bearing the seal of the Court are defective. The section itself requires the notice to be sealed and signed.

In my view the requirements of the law were fully complied with by the reference to s. 7 in the notice. That such reference is all that is necessary has been frequently decided and the unnecessary addition of the incomplete description of the mode of redemption allowed by s. 7 cannot affect the validity of the notice. I can think of no principle of law which justifies any other view. Certainly there can be no question here of good faith of the notice for not only is there a reference in the body of it to s. 7, but it contains an additional note requesting the mortgagee or himself to refer for information and guidance to that section.

I would accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the judgment of the Appellate Court below and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the suit. Having regard to all the circumstances, I would allow the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

C. A. against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, dated September 21, 1931, and made in C. R. O. P. No. 37 of 1929.

Mr. V. Krishnan, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

Varadachariar, J.—This is an appeal by the claimant who is not satisfied with the amount awarded to him by the learned District Judge as compensation for a piece of land and building acquired from him, in Poonamallee. The learned District Judge has incidentally dealt with the question whether or not there was a contract between the claimant and the District Board of Chingleput, whereby the price was fixed at Rs. 10,500. This question was introduced into the discussion of the amount of compensation payable, because of the reliance placed by the claimant on the decision of the Privy Council in Fort Press Company, Limited v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay (1). But as the learned Judge himself points out, the action there was between private parties themselves and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee make it clear that their decision will only be binding as between the parties and will not affect the jurisdiction of the Collector to adopt such course as he may think proper under the Act. From the statement of facts in that case it is worth noting that there the action was for a declaration that if the Collector awarded more than the sum agreed to between the parties, the excess would belong to the plaintiffs and if he awarded less, the plaintiffs were bound to pay the full agreed sum. From the provisions of s. 23 of the Act it is fairly clear that the Land Acquisition Officer and the Court dealing with the matter on a reference from him have only to decide the market value of the property, subject to the considerations mentioned in that and the following sections. Neither the Land Acquisition Officer nor the Court has got the power to enforce the contract as such in the absence of the contracting parties. The District Board of Chingleput is no party to these proceedings, whatever their ultimate interest in the acquisition may be. In these circumstances, we think it proper to say that the question of concluded contract as between the claimant and the District Board should not have been decided in these proceedings at all and we, therefore, leave that question open.

Restricting ourselves, therefore, to the question of the fixing of the compensation in accordance with the terms of the Act, we have not been shown any reason for not accepting the decision of the learned Judge. He has allowed proper amounts on the several heads of claim, and in view of the fact referred to by him, namely, that the original valuation by the District Board Engineer proceeded upon a misapprehension that the claimant had an absolute title whereas in fact he had only a leasehold title, we do not think the learned Judge erred in adopting a lower value. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

The decree of the lower Court has directed the claimant to pay Rs. 168-5-11 to the respondent for his costs on the amount disallowed. We do not think this direction is justified. Under s. 27 of the Act, the claimant should not be called upon to pay the Collector's costs unless the Court is of opinion that his claim was extravagant or the claimant was negligent in putting his case before the Collector. The fact that we are not disposed to deal with the question of concluded contract cannot justify the assumption that his claim was unfounded. The fact that there was correspondence in which Rs. 10,500 was mentioned is not denied, though whether it will amount to a concluded contract or not is another matter. In this view we direct the omission of so much of the lower Court's decree as directs the claimant to pay the respondent his costs on the amount disallowed.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887, s. 116—Question regarding ownership of garden and kotha —If a question of title

The question whether the garden and the kothas in the garden are the joint property of two brothers or the sole property of one of them, is a question of title within the meaning of s. 116, Punjab Land Revenue Act. Devi Dayal v. Ahmad Khan (1), distinguished.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated March 15, 1930.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Appellant.

Sodhi Charan Das, for the Respondent.

Skemp, J.—The sole question in this second appeal is whether the suit is cognizable by a Civil or by a Revenue Court. The parties are two brothers whose father died in 1927. In 1928 the defendant applied for partition. The only dispute between the brothers was about a garden (baghicha) and kothas in the garden. One brother claimed that he alone had planted the baghicha and built kothas therein at his own expense. The other brother claimed that this was done during the lifetime of their father and that he was entitled to a half share. The Revenue Officer went into the matter and held that the garden was planted and the kothas built by one of the brothers Ghazanfar Ali many years ago and that since then he had been in exclusive possession. He, therefore, held that in partition the defendant's possession should not be disturbed.

The plaintiff then came to a Civil Court and in para. 1 of the plaint he pleaded that his father had planted the baghicha and built the houses. At the end of the plaint he said that this property was not the sole property of the defendant. The defendant repeated his claim that he had planted the garden and built the houses at his own expense. Section 116, Revenue Act, specifies two kinds of disputes between the parties: (a) question as to title, and (b) questions as to the property to be divided, or the mode of making the partition.

It seems to me that the question in this case is one of title as to who owned the garden and the kothas therein. Admittedly the site under garden is common property, but defendant's claim is that he made it at his own expense. The plaintiff's claim is that it was jointly inherited by the brothers from their father. This then is a question of title. When this matter came before him, the Revenue Officer might have directed the parties to get the question determined by a competent Court or he might have himself proceeded to determine the question as if he were such a Court. He did not adopt this course and it is the plaintiff who by his own motion has come to the Civil Courts. The lower Courts professed to follow Devi Dayal v. Ahmad Khan (1), on which the respondent's Counsel also relies. There a question was referred to a Division Bench whether a certain suit was a "land suit," and before the Division Bench the question was raised whether the suit was cognizable by a Civil or a Revenue Court. It was finally held by the Single Judge dealing with the matter that it was cognizable by a Revenue Court. In that case, however, the plaintiff sued for a declaration that by planting the garden which was in suit, he had become the owner of the land and was entitled to be allotted that land on partition. It is this latter claim which distinguishes that case and makes it possible to hold that it was a question as to the mode of partition and therefore, cognizable by the Revenue Court. There are indeed expressions in that ruling which favour the respondent, but, in my judgment, it is clear that what is in reality in dispute is the plain question whether the garden and houses are joint property or the sole property of the defendant, i. e., a question of title.

I would accordingly accept this appeal and return the suit to the trial Court through the learned District Judge for disposal on the merits in accordance with law. The costs hitherto incurred are to be costs in the cause.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

Musammat BARKAT—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 309—Attempt to commit suicide — Sentence — Discretion of Court— Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562— Release on probation of good conduct—Sentence of imprisonment, if can be imposed.

The law confers upon the Court a very wide discretion in the matter of punishment, and it is not necessary to inflict a sentence of imprisonment upon a person who on account of family discord, destitution, loss of a dear relation, or other cause of a like nature, overcomes the instinct of self-preservation and decides to take his life. In such a case, the unfortunate person deserves indulgence, and should be either released on probation of good conduct or sentenced to a fine if he is not too poor to pay the fine. These observations apply with greater force to the case of a woman who attempts to commit suicide in similar circumstances. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject but the Court must, in each case, consider the motive which has prompted a person to destroy his or her life.

The language of s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code makes it clear that a sentence of imprisonment imposed on a person while he is released on probation of good conduct, is wholly illegal and must, therefore, be quashed.

Cr. R. from an order of the District Magistrate, Campbellpur, dated January 13, 1934.

Facts.—On September 3, 1933, Musammat Barkat, wife of Dina, caste sweeper, of Sadar Bazar, Campbellpur, accompanied by her two minor daughters went to a well known as "Raja Ghulam Muhammad Wala" to fetch water. On reaching the well Musammat Barkat put down the pitcher and jumped into the well. She was seen doing so by Jaffar P. W., who was grazing his cattle nearby. He hastened to the spot, and subsequently hearing the cries of the minor girls several other persons turned up. Musammat Barkat was then rescued from the well and the matter was reported to the Police who challaned the accused Musammat Barkat under s. 309, Penal Code. She confessed her guilt before the trial Court.

The accused on conviction by Sheikh Muhammad Iqbal Khan, Tahsildar, Attock Tahsil, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the Second Class in the Attock District was sentenced by order dated October 7, 1933, under s. 309, Penal Code, to six months' simple imprisonment. The Magistrate further added;

"She shall, however, be immediately released on entering into a bond for Rs. 500 with another surety worth the same amount to appear and receive sentence when called upon during a period of six months and she shall in the meantime keep the peace and be of good behaviour."

The order of the Magistrate is not in conformity with the provisions of s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code and is illegal since he has not only convicted the accused under s. 309, Penal Code but has also passed a sentence of six months' simple imprisonment and he has then added the order of releasing the accused. This view was taken in Karim Bakhsh v. Emperor (1) and Ayyub v. Emperor (2). The accused has executed the requisite bond.

Mr. R. A. Jeremy, for the Respondent.

Order.—On September 3, 1933, Musammat Barkat jumped into a well in order to destroy her life; and she has been rightly convicted under s. 309, Penal Code. The trial Court inflicted upon her a sentence of simple imprisonment for six months, and also released her under s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, on probation of good conduct. The language of s. 562, however, makes it clear that the sentence of imprisonment imposed upon her, while she was released on probation of good conduct was wholly illegal and must, therefore, be quashed.

It appears that the unfortunate woman was driven to commit suicide by family discord or poverty and she should be an object of commiseration and not of punishment. The law confers upon the Court a very wide discretion in the matter of punishment and it is not necessary to inflict a sentence of imprisonment upon a person who on account of family discord, destitution, loss of a dear relation or other cause of a like nature overcomes the instinct of self-preservation and decides to take his life. In such a case the unfortunate person deserves indulgence, and should be either released on probation of good conduct or sentenced to a fine if he is not too poor to pay the fine. These observations apply with greater force to the case of a woman who attempts to commit suicide in similar circumstances. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule on the subject but the Court must in each case consider the motive which has prompted a person to destroy his or her life.

Execution of decree—Decree in benamidar's name —Real owner's right to execute—Right of real owner's creditor to attach decree.

Where a decree has been passed in favour of a person, it is not open to another person to apply for execution of that decree on the ground that he is the real owner of the decree and the nominal decree-holder is only a benamidar for him. Palaniappa Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar (1), followed. Manikkan v. Tatayya (2) and Nil Kantc Ghosal v. Ram Chand Roy (3), distinguished.

But the fact that the real owner could not execute a decree passed in his benamidar's name does not mean that he has no property in the decree. Therefore a person who has obtained a decree against the real owner of another decree is entitled to attach the latter decree even though it stands in the name of the benamidar, and a decree declaring his right attached may be made.

Mr. P. Govinda Menon, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General, Messrs. M. C. Sridharan, V. P. Karunakara Nambiar and C. S. Krishnamurti, for the Respondents.

King, J.—The contesting parties in this appeal are plaintiff and defendant No. 4. Plaintiff filed a suit for money (O. S. No. 1 of 1923, Sub Court, Tellichery) against defendant No. 1 and others and obtained a decree in September, 1924. Defendant No. 4 is the holder of another decree (in O. S. No. 394 of 1921 District Munsif's Court, Kasargod). That suit (O. S. No. 394 of 1921) was originally filed by defendant No. 1 but on August 4, 1921, first defendant assigned his claim against the defendants in that suit to defendant No. 4. Defendant No. 4 was then impleaded as supplemental second plaintiff and on March 11, 1922, a compromise decree was passed in favour of defendant No. 4 alone. Now when plaintiff brought his suit against defendant No. 1 in 1923, he attached this decree in favour of defendant No. 4 before judgment, alleging that defendant No. 4 was really only a benamidar for defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 4 objected to this attachment and the attachment was raised. Plaintiff then in 1923, filed the present suit and obtained a declaration from the District Munsif of Cannanore that he was entitled to attach defendant No. 4's decree in execution of his own decree against defendant No. 1. This declaration was upheld in appeal by the District Judge of North Malabar and defendant No. 4 has now filed this Second Appeal. Both Courts below are agreed on the facts that the transfer from defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 4 was a nominal one and that defendant No. 4 is, therefore, merely a benamidar for defendant No. 1. The only question before us is whether plaintiff's suit was or was not maintainable.

The first ground of attack in appeal is that as the value of defendant No. 4's decree at the date of the institution of plaintiff's suit was more than Rs. 3,000, that suit would not lie in the Court of the District Munsif. The learned District Judge has dealt with that objection in para. 3 of his judgment and has shown that the conditions laid down in s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act have not been satisfied in this case; and his decision on this point has not been seriously challenged before us.

Nor is it seriously disputed that in the narrow meaning of the term plaintiff's suit was undoubtedly maintainable as O. XXI, r. 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, expressly gives him the right to sue.

The real argument in appeal is this. Defendant No. 1 could never have been permitted to execute a decree granted in favour of defendant No. 4. Plaintiff can have no higher rights than defendant No. 1 could have. Plaintiff also, therefore, cannot execute defendant No. 4's decree. If he attaches it his only further course under the Code (see O. XXI, r. 53) is to execute it. But he cannot execute it for the reason just given. Any declaration, therefore, which he may get in this suit is futile, and on this ground the suit ought to have been dismissed without any enquiry into the facts.

We think there can be no doubt but that the first step in this argument is established. It has been held in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar (1), that where a decree has been transferred to any particular person under an instrument in writing, no other person who claims that he is the real owner under the transfer can apply for execution of the decree and the principles underlying that decision apply with added force to the facts of the present case where defendant No. 4 is the original decree-holder himself and defendant No. 1 was a party to the suit in which he obtained the decree. Manikkam v. Tatayya (2), on which the learned Advocate for the respondent seeks to rely, has been definitely dissented from in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Subramania Chettiar (1), and Nilkanta Ghosal v. Ramachand Roy (3), also cited for the respondent is the judgment of another High Court and proceeds upon the assumption that there is no dispute between benamidar and real owner. We, therefore, agree that this decree could not have been executed by defendant.

But at its second step we think the argument breaks down, for the argument amounts to this, that plaintiff is entirely precluded from proceeding in execution against this decree. This can only be so if it be held that defendant No. 1 has no property in the decree. To say that defendant No. 1 cannot be permitted to execute a decree passed nominally in favour of defendant No. 4, and to say that defendant No 1 has no property in that decree are two very different propositions. The property in a decree is not merely the right to execute it much more essentially is it the right to the actual money which is realised by its execution, and if this particular decree were to be executed by defendant No. 4, we do not see how it could possibly be denied on the facts found that defendant No. 1 would be entitled to claim the money realised. It is this money at which, of course, the plaintiff aims, money which is really due to defendant No. 1, money which if realised is defendant No. 1's property held by defendant No. 4 in trust for him, and we see no valid reason why the plaintiff who holds a decree against defendant No. 1 should not have a declaration permitting him to attach a decree whose real owner is his judgment-debtor.

Whether this declaration is or is not a futile one is not a point with which we need now concern ourselves. No doubt if defendant No. 4 had already executed the decree, a declaration permitting its attachment might serve no useful purpose and plaintiff might be driven to alter the form of his prayer or take other proceedings, but we need not assume that difficulties actually exist in this case of whose existence we have not been informed. For the reasons given, we think that the decisions of the two Courts below were right, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs of respondent No. 5. Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 336 of 1928 is dismissed. No costs.

Practice—Suit against some only of the legal representatives of deceased debtor—Maintainability—Decree, if binding on other legal representatives not impleaded—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), s. 52.

There is no law that all the legal representatives of a deceased person must be impleaded. It is sufficient that the plaintiff sues those persons whom he considers to be the legal representatives after enquiry. If such persons are sued, the suit is a good one and the decree will be effective to the extent of the property of the deceased which has reached their hands and a suit of this nature cannot be defeated by reason of the fact that two other sons have not been impleaded though the sons who are not impleaded will not be bound by the decree.

C. R. P. from an order of the Sub-Judge, Montgomery, dated November 24, 1932.

Mr. Anant Ram Khosla, for the Petitioner.

Order.—One Dost Muhammad is alleged to have struck a balance for Rs. 300 in favour of the plaintiff Ali Muhammad and thereafter borrowed Rs. 20. As he died without re-paying these sums, the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of Rs. 320 against seven sons of Dost Muhammad. He asked that a decree might be given for the amount due to the extent of the estate of their father in their hands. The trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree. On appeal the Senior Subordinate Judge only decided a preliminary point, namely, that the suit was incompetent without two other sons of Dost Muhammad being impleaded as defendants. On this account he accepted the appeal, directed that they should be brought on the record and sent the case back to the trial Court to be decided in accordance with law and to determine whether the suit was or was not barred by limitation by reason of the addition of the two other sons. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred this revision petition.

There is no law that all the legal representatives of a deceased person must be impleaded. It is sufficient that the plaintiff sues those persons whom he considers to be the legal representatives after enquiry. If such persons are sued the suit is a good one and the decree will be effective to the extent of the property of the deceased which has reached their hands, and a suit of this nature cannot be defeated by reason of the fact that two other sons have not been impleaded though the sons who are not impleaded will not be bound by the decree.

For the reasons given, I accept this petition, set aside the appellate order of the Senior Subordinate Judge and remand the appeal to him to be decided on the merits. Costs in this Court will abide the event; other costs will be in the discretion of the Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Principles of—Applicability of, to execution proceedings—Constructive res judicata.

Although s. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not in terms apply to execution proceedings, yet the general principles underlying the rules of res judicata are applicable to execution proceedings. The applicability of the rule is not limited to matters, which were directly and substantially in issue and were heard and expressly decided in former execution proceedings, but the principle of "constructive res judicata", as embodied in Expl. IV to s. 11, also applies to such proceedings.

[Case-law discussed]

L. P. A. from an order of Harrison, J., dated October 15, 1932.

Mr. Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—The learned Judge in Chambers dismissed the judgment-debtor's appeal on the ground that the objection now raised by him against the execution of the decree might and ought to have been raised when the decree-holder had previously applied for execution and that his failure to do so debarred him from raising it at this stage. I have no doubt that the decision of the learned Judge is correct.

It is true that s 11, Civil Procedure Code, does not in terms apply to execution proceedings but it has long been settled that the general principles underlying the rule of res judicata are applicable to execution proceedings: see Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (1) and Lachhmi v. Bhulli (2). It has also been held that the applicability of the rule is not limited to matters which were directly and substantially in issue and were heard and expressly decided in former execution proceedings but the principle of "constructive res judicata," as embodied in Expln. IV to s. 11 also applies to such proceedings. Therefore it is not open to a judgment-debtor to object to execution on a plea which could have been raised in former execution proceedings but was not so raised: see Ved Kuar v. Balkishan Das (3), Dip Parkash v. Dwarka Prashad (4), Rajitagiripathy v. Bhavani Sankaram (5), Gadigappa Chanabasappa v. Shidappa Gurushidappa (6), and Daw Ohn Bwin v. U Bu (7). The matter is really concluded by the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mungal Pershad Dichit v. Girja Kant Lahiri (8), and Raja of Ramnad v. Velusawmi Tevar (9). In the latter case their Lordships clearly laid down that:

and as this had not been done, it was not competent for the "Subordinate Judge to Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Conviction and sentence for offence under s. 307 still in force—Subsequent trial and conviction under s. 302, if barred—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403 (3)—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 26—Does not act as a bar to trial or conviction but merely as bar to duplicate punishment.

An accused was tried and convicted on July 22, 1933, of attempted murder of one G and sentenced to imprisonment under s. 307, Penal Code. G died on the July 25. The accused was re-tried under the provisions of s. 403, cl. (3), Criminal Procedure Code, and sentenced to death under s. 302, Penal Code :

Held, that the previous conviction was no bar to subsequent trial and conviction. Crown v. Sarbiland (1), followed.

Section 26, General Clauses Act, does not act as a bar to trial or conviction but merely as a bar to duplicated punishment. Where the second trial results in a sentence of imprisonment or transportation, the provisions of s. 26, General Clauses Act, can be complied with merely by the direction that such imprisonment or transportation shall run concurrently with that imposed in the previous case ; in the case of a death sentence there can be no question of a concurrent sentence, for the sentence itself automatically cancels the previous sentence of imprisonment.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Derajat, dated January 30, 1934.

Mian Ziauddin, for the Appellant.

Kazi Mir Ahmad Khan, K. S., for the Crown.

Judgment.—Arsala, aged 25, and Isa Khan, aged 23, of Shanwa Gudikhel, have been convicted and sentenced to death under s. 302-34, Penal Code, for having murdered Ghulam Muhammad, a boy of 11 years of age who was the half brother of Arsala's father. The sentences are before us for confirmation and the two convicts have instituted separate appeals against their convictions in which we have heard Counsel to-day. Ghulam Muhammad survived for a considerable period after the wounds which ultimately led to his death had been inflicted and the appellants were tried jointly and convicted on July 22, 1933, of attempted murder and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment each under s. 307, Penal Code. Thereafter the boy died on July 25, and after judicial inquiry and commitment, the present trial was held under the provisions of s. 403, cl. (3), Criminal Procedure Code. Learned Counsel for the appellants raises the preliminary objection that the second trial and in particular the sentences awarded, were illegal. He bases this argument upon cl. (5), s. 403, Criminal Procedure Code, which reads : "Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of s. 26, General Clauses Act". That section provides :

"Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence."

Clause (3), s. 403, Criminal Procedure Code, is as follows :

"A person convicted of any offence constituted by any act causing consequences which, together with such act, constituted a different offence from that of which he was convicted, may be afterwards tried for such last-mentioned offence, if the consequences had not happened, or were not known to the Court to have happened, at the time when he was convicted."

Counsel urges that whilst the sentence for attempted murder was still in force, there could be no subsequent conviction and sentence for murder. He suggests that it was necessary that the previous conviction and sentence should have been set aside in revision before the present trial was commenced. The passages quoted can in no way be construed to debar the trial and conviction. The only question is whether the punishment awarded as a result of the conviction could be awarded without setting aside that awarded in the prior conviction. (The trial Court of course had no power to set aside the previous conviction or punishment.) The course suggested as correct by Counsel was suggested but not followed in Crown v. Sarbiland (1). In that case a man had been convicted under s. 324, Penal Code, and sentenced to imprisonment. Subsequent to the conviction the wounded man died and the District Magistrate reported the case recommending that the previous conviction be quashed as a preparatory measure to the institution of a trial for murder. The reference was

"It was not necessary to make this reference, and I do not propose to pass the orders suggested. A trial for causing hurt, which clearly had occurred and a trial for causing death which has occurred in consequence of the injuries caused, but which has taken place after the trial and conviction for hurt, is not a trial on the same facts. The death, which has occurred since, is a new fact of crucial importance. But the Criminal Procedure Code, specifically provides for cases of this kind. Under s. 403 (3) this very contingency is mentioned and illustration (c) is almost exactly on all fours with the present case, 'hurt' being substituted for 'grievous hurt'. It is, therefore, open to the District Magistrate to order the re-opening of the case. And if the Magistrate, before whom it goes, considers that there is ground for a committal under s. 302 or s. 304, the previous convictions for simple hurt is no bar to such commitment and subsequent trial; and should the trial result in a conviction, the convict can be punished under s 304, or s 302, or whatever section may be appropriate in which the death of the deceased forms part of the offence."

The present case is precisely similar in essentials and we have no reason to differ from the views expressed by the learned Judge of the Punjab Chief Court. Counsel, however, urges that s. 26, General Clauses Act, refers to an act or omission constituting an offence, and urges that the consequences of the act or omission do not affect the provisions of that section. He appears to think that the two appellants were punished in the first instance and have again been sentenced for the mere act of firing irrespective of its consequences; he overlooks the concluding words of the section which forbid punishment twice for the same "offence;" offence includes both the physical act and its consequences; in the present case no offence of murder had been committed at the time the two convicts were first tried and convicted.

Again s. 26, does not act as a bar to trial or conviction but merely as a bar to duplicated punishment. We are of opinion that in cases of similar nature where the second trial results in a sentence of imprisonment or transportation, the provisions of s. 26 can be complied with merely by the direction that such imprisonment or transportation shall run concurrently with that imposed in the previous case; in the case of a death sentence, there can be no question of a concurrent sentence, for the sentence itself automatically cancels the previous sentence of imprisonment. It is true that the law discussed would operate as a bar to any punishment being inflicted in the present case to take effect after expiry of the punishment in the previous case; further than this we cannot accept Counsel's argument, and as there can be no suggestion that the death sentence is to be delayed, we must overrule it and record a finding that there was no irregularity in the trial, convictions or sentences. (The learned Judges considered the merits of the case and confirmed the sentence of death passed on Arsala and acquitted Isa.)

Deed—Construction—Intention—Charge—Mortgage—Clog or equity of redemption—Agreement between parties creating subsequent charges—Necessity of.

Whether a certain document did or did not create a charge on certain mortgaged property for the amount of the debt, depends on the intention of the parties which must be gathered from a reading of the document itself. Where a bond provides that the mortgage deed in respect of the land executed by Sant Singh in favour of the said creditors is a separate bond, that this bond has been executed separately and the amount of the bond will be paid before mortgage deed, the bond does not create a charge. Aditya Prasad v Ratan Lal (2), relied on.

The weight of authority is against recognizing any clog on the equity of redemption in the absence of a clear agreement between the parties creating a subsequent charge on the mortgaged property.

Messrs. J. L. Kapur and J. N. Aggarwal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nand Lal, Pran Nath, Mohammad Din Jan and Tirath Ram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The lower Court has granted the plaintiffs, who claimed as mortgagees under a mortgage deed of February 1, 1924, a preliminary decree for possession of 216 kanals 11 marlas of land situated in village Munawan, Tahsil Kasur, by redemption on payment of Rs. 5,907-8-0. Against this decree Hakim Singh, Ghula Singh, Kapur Singh and Suba Singh, the previous mortgagees of the land in suit, have appealed. The material facts are that on November 7, 1911, Sant Singh, father of Arur Singh, mortgaged the land in suit to the defendants-appellants for Rs. 9,000. On January 13, 1912, Arur Singh, the son, challenged this mortgage and the Additional District Judge of Lahore on February 22, 1915, granted him a declaration that the mortgage was valid against him to the extent of Rs. 5,907-8-0 only. On February 26, 1923, Sant Singh borrowed from the same defendants-appellants Rs. 6,800 and executed a bond, Ex. D-1, which is alleged to create a fresh charge on the mortgaged property and the exact interpretation of which is a question for consideration in this appeal. It has been found by the lower Court, and has not been contested in appeal, that on February 1, 1924, Sant Singh and Arur Singh mortgaged 92 kanals of the land in suit with the plaintiffs-respondents for Rs. 11,000 with a stipulation that the plaintiffs were to pay Rs. 9,000 to the defendants-appellants, but that if Sant Singh should pre-decease his son, Rs. 5,907-8-0 were to be paid to the defendants and the balance to Arur Singh. Shortly afterwards, Sant Singh died; and on November 5, 1928, the plaintiffs mortgagees claiming under the mortgage dated February 1, 1924, instituted this suit to redeem the whole land on payment of Rs. 5,907-8-0. Arur Singh, having been originally impleaded as a defendant, was on his own application made a co-plaintiff with the mortgagees.

On November 12, 1928, after the institution of this suit, Arur Singh executed in favour of the defendants-respondents a second bond for Rs. 942 which is exhibited as D-2. The suit was contested by the original mortgagees on two main pleas : (1) that Arur Singh had relinquished his rights under the declaratory decree of February 22, 1915, by the execution of the two bonds, D-1 and Ex. D-2 and (2) that these two bonds of February 26, 1923 Ex D-1 and of November 12, 1928, Ex. D-2, created fresh charges on the land which, it is contended, could not be redeemed without paying off these additional charges. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge found against the defendants on both these points, which have been re-agitated in appeal.

The first and most important point for our consideration is the question whether the bonds, Exs. D-1 and D-2, create fresh charges on the land in suit so as to clog the equity of redemption claimed by the plaintiffs-respondents. The second bond dated November 12, 1928, Ex. D-2 which was executed after institution of the suit and under appeal is printed at p. 29 of the printed paper book and requires no discussion. There is no mention therein of any additional charge on the mortgaged land. The only reference to any mortgage is in a post script in which Arur Singh states that :

"I have mortgaged this land to the creditors. I will pay the money and redeem the land."

The bond however, contains no reference to any particular land and the identity of the land referred to in the post script is a matter of speculation. In any case, there is no covenant that the consideration for the bond was to form an additional charge on the land referred to in the post script whatever it is and whereever it may be situated. The bond does, not, therefore, assist the defendants-appellants' case. Turning now to the earlier bond, Ex. D-1, dated February 26, 1923, which is printed on p. 37 of the paper book, the translation of the material paragraph which is alleged to create a charge on the land in suit is as follows :

"The mortgage deed in respect of the land executed by Sant Singh in favour of the said creditors is a separate bond This bond has been executed separately and the amount of the bond will be paid before mortgage deed".

In the lower Court, Counsel for the defendants relied on Hardayal Lal v. Ganga Koeri (1) which the lower Court distinguished on the ground that the documents in the Allahabad case contained a clear redemption clause, whereas there is no mention of redemption in the bond, Ex. D-1, the material portion of which the lower Court held to be a mere personal covenant regulating the time of repayment. Counsel for the appellants has mainly relied on a Privy Council ruling cited as Aditya Prasad v. Ratan Lal (2) which has been followed in Jagannath Kunwar v. Jaipal (3). In construing the document in question in Aditya Prasad v. Ratan Lal (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council decided that the question whether a certain document did or did not create a charge on certain mortgaged property, for the amount of the debt, depended on the intention of the parties which must be gathered from a reading of the document itself. In that case, the deed provided :

"I should first pay up this debt including principal and interest and thereafter I can redeem the mortgaged village, having paid up mortgage money. Without payment of this debt I cannot redeem this mortgage".

Their Lordships held in agreement with the Chief Court that the parties intended that the original village should remain in possession of the mortgagees until the second debt was paid off and intended, therefore, that the property should be a security for the debt. Similarly, in Jagannath Kunwar v. Jaipal (3), it is apparent that the document then in suit forbade redemption of the mortgage until the subsequent loan was paid off. It was held that an agreement that the mortgagor should pay the amount due on the subsequently executed bond before he redeems the prior mortgage, was an agreement to create a charge on the property previously mortgaged. Clearly, neither of these rulings is in point in the present case. Neither the bond, Exs. D-1 nor D-2 contains any agreement forbidding redemption of the mortgage until the bond has been paid off. As already stated, the bond, Ex. D-2, does not help the defendants' case at all, while the bond, Ex. D-1, merely recites the fact that a separate mortgage deed has been executed in favour of the creditor and that the amount of this bond shall be paid before the mortgage-deed. There is no clause in any way affecting the equity of redemption or creating a charge on the property previously mortgaged. The weight of authority is against recognizing any clog on the equity of redemption in the absence of a clear agreement between the parties creating a subsequent charge on the mortgaged property In our view, there is nothing in either of these bonds which can be held to restrain or interfere in any way with the plaintiffs' equity of redemption.

The plea that Arur Singh had relinquished the rights obtained by him under the decree of February 22, 1915, is based on the same passage in the bond, Ex. D-1, which has already been quoted. As pointed out by the trial Court, the relinquishment of such a right must be expressed in clear and unambiguous language before it can be held proved. The stipulation in the bond Ex. D-1, on which the defendants relied is not a covenant by Arur Singh but a mere statement of fact on behalf of Sant Singh to the effect that he has executed a separate mortgage deed. Whatever may be the effect of the statement of fact on Sant Singh, it does not in the least affect Arur Singh and the amount of money, viz, Rs. 5,907-8-0, which has still to be paid by him before redemption. Nor is there anything in the second bond Ex. D-2, which was executed after the institution of the present suit indicating relinquishment of his rights by Arur Singh. We agree with the trial Court in holding that the relinquishment is not proved. For these reasons, we confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 1, cl. (2)—Application to refer dispute to arbitration—Whether should be in writing.

Application to refer a dispute to arbitration need not be in writing as the expression "application shall be in writing" in para 1, cl. (2) of the second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure is merely directory and not mandatory. Mirza Mohamad Hasan Beg v. Mirza Shakir Beg (1), Mahabir v. Manohar Singh (2) and Waliullah v. Bhaggan (3), followed

F. C. A. against an order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Unao, dated September 29, 1932.

Mr. D. K. Seth, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. N. Tandon, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These are two cross-appeals from a judgment of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Unao in a suit for partition brought by Jagannath Singh and Sardar Singh.

At the hearing of this appeal the learned Counsel of both parties and the parties themselves expressed a desire that all the points involved in these appeal be referred to the arbitration of Mr. Ghulam Hasan Butt, an Advocate of this Court. Accordingly the statements of the Counsel of the parties were recorded and the case was referred to the arbitration of Mr. Ghulam Hasan. The arbitrator filed his award on September 21, 1934. The result of his award is to confirm the judgment and decree of the trial Court.

The defendants-appellants have filed objections to the award and they have raised two pleas in their objections. In the first place it is contended on their behalf that there was no valid reference to arbitration as required by the Code of Civil Procedure inasmuch as no application in writing was made by the parties to refer the dispute to arbitration (see para. 1, sub-s. 2 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure). In our opinion there is no force in this contention. In Mirza Mohamad Hasan Beg v. Mirza Shakir Beg (1) Mr. Justice Saiyid Wazir Hasan held that the expression "application shall be in writing" in para. 1, cl. (2) of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure was merely directory and not mandatory.

Again in Mahabir v. Manohar Singh (2) Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal held that where the pleaders of both the parties to a pending suit stated that they agreed to a reference to arbitration, and the statements were recorded and an order of reference was accordingly made by the Court, though not upon a written application, the award based upon the reference was valid.

Similarly in Waliullah v. Bhaggan (3) a learned Judge of this Court held that an award could not be set aside merely because the reference to arbitration was not made in writing.

In Sir Dinshah Mulla's commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure (10th Edition, 1934, at page 1260) we find the learned commentator making the following observations on the phrase that the "application shall be in writing."

"The provision requiring the application to be in writing is directory only, and not imperative hence an award is not invalid merely because the application for the order of reference was not made in writing, (see Shama Sundaram v. Abdul Latif (4) and Abdul Hamid v. Riaz-ud-din (5). In a recent case before the Judicial Committee where the agreement was in writing but it was not signed by one of the parties, it was held that para. 1 of this Sehedule did not require that the writing should of necessity be signed, (see Umed Singh v. Sobhag Mal (6)"

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that there is no force in the first ground taken in the objections of the defendants that there was no valid reference to arbitration as required by the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the second place it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the award is vague and indefinite. In our opinion the award is very clear and precise and is expressed in very terse language. There is nothing unclear and indefinite about it. The plaintiffs were granted a decree for partition of one share out of two and a half shares in the properties mentioned in lists 1 and 3 and in the properties entered at Nos. 5, 6, 8, 9 and 10 of list 2, attached to the plaint in the suit filed by the plaintiffs against the defendants. Obviously the balance of the properties entered in these lists would necessarily go to the defendants.

There is, therefore, no force in these objections and we accordingly dismiss them, confirm the award, and decree these two appeals in terms of the award, which will form part of the decrees of this Court.

THE MALABAR DISTRICT BOARD—RESPONDENT

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), s. 225 (3)—Suit for improper cancellation by President of contract with Board—Whether a suit 'in respect of an act done in pursuance of the Act'—Special rule of limitation, whether applies.

Where, during the absence of the President of a District Board, the Vice President accepted a tender made by the plaintiff for a lease of the right to buy tolls, and the President, finding that there was a higher tender, cancelled the acceptance of the plaintiff's tender and the plaintiff filed a suit against the Board for damages for improper cancellation of the contract:

Held, that the suit was one 'in respect of an act done or purporting to be done by the President in pursuance of the Act', within the meaning of s. 225 (3) of the Madras Local Boards Act and was time-barred as it was not instituted within 6 months of the accrual of the cause of action. The distinction between actions on contract and actions independent of contract which has been drawn in this connection, though convenient as a working rule, does not accurately represent the basis of the applicability of the rule. The real test is whether what is complained of is some act done in pursuance of the statute Brodford Corporation v. Myers (5), and other cases referred to.

C. A. against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, dated March 30, 1929, and passed in O. S. No. 3 of 1928.

Messrs. P. S. Narayanaswamy Iyer and C. S. Swaminathan, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Govinda Menon, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—We have heard arguments, on this appeal, only on the question raised by Issue No. 2, namely whether the suit is barred under s. 225 (3) of the Madras Local Boards Act, as it has admittedly been instituted more than six months after the accrual of the alleged cause of action. As we agree with the lower Court in its conclusion on this point, it is unnecessary to deal with the other issues arising in this case.

The plaintiff filed this suit, claiming damages from the District Board of South Malabar, on the ground that by order dated March 31, 1925, the President improperly cancelled a contract with the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff had been given the lease, for one year, of the tolls in certain places in the Malabar District. The material facts are, that pursuant to an invitation of tenders, the plaintiff made a tender on March 23, 1925, which was accepted by the Vice-President, during the President's absence, on March 24. The President seems to have left directions that the papers relating to the lease of tolls should be placed before him and he was, therefore, apparently of opinion that the acceptance by the Vice-President was not authorised. He also seems to have found that there was another contractor who offered a much larger amount in respect of the same toll gates. He naturally accepted the tender of the other man and as a necessary result cancelled the acceptance of the plaintiff's tender. Both these subjects are embodied in one order of the President (See Exs. III and V). The question for consideration under Issue No. 2 is whether or not the action is in respect of "any act done or purporting to be done in pursuance of execution or intended execution of the Act."

On behalf of the appellant, Mr. Narayanaswami Ayyar has contended that several cases have held that this provision does not apply to cases arising out of breach of contract but is limited to liabilities arising out of the execution of or the omission to execute statutory duties of such bodies. Reference may, in this connection, be made to Mayandi v. Mc Quhae (1), The President, District Board, Malabar v. Kantikannan (2), Ranchordas Moorarji v. Municipal Commissioners for the City of Bombay (3), Municipal Council of Kumbakonam v. Veerapérumal Padayachi (4) and Brodford Corporation v. Myers (5). This distinction between actions on contracts and actions independent of contracts may be convenient enough as a working rule, but we do not think it can be said to represent accurately the basis of the applicability of the rule. This was realised by Jenkins, C. J. even in the 25 Bomba case [Ranchordas Moorarji v Municipal Commissioners for the City of Bombay (3)] and is emphasised by Lord Shaw in 1915 in Brodford Corporation v. Myers (5). The real test is whether what is complained of is some act done in pursuance of the statute. In cases where there is no dispute as to the existence of a contract, all further rights and liabilities between the parties are governed by the ordinary law relating to contracts, and it is true enough, in such case, to say that the rights and liabilities of the parties in respect of the contract are matters of ordinary law and not matters governed by the statute. But where, as in the present case, we find that the cancellation of the acceptance of the plaintiff's offer is the necessary result of what the President thought, in accordance with the terms of the Act as he interpreted them, his duty to accept, viz., the highest tender and he did this on the footing that the Vice President's acceptance of the plaintiff's tender is not a compliance with the Act,—we cannot say that the question does not relate to an act done under the statute. The right to levy tolls is a special privilege conferred by the statute upon local bodies and under the terms of s. 106 (1), Local Boards Act, authorised either to manage the collection of the tolls themselves or through their own agency or to lease them out. In either case what the President as representing the Board does in connection with the leasing out of the right to levy tolls is undoubtedly an act done in execution of his powers or duties under the Act.

The discussion in Brodford Corporation v. Myers (5) is itself sufficient to show the difficulties in the way of attempting anything like an exhaustive definition or clear-cut differentiation of the cases falling under the section and of cases not falling under the section. Lord Buckmaster, L. C., for instance, emphasises the distinction between an incidental power to trade and a direct duty to trade, even in cases where a statutory body is authorised to trade and the Lord Chancellor was of opinion that anything falling under the second head will be governed by the provisions of the Act. Both Lord Haldane and Lord Shaw emphasise the impossibility of framing anything like a general test. The question must depend upon the circumstances of each case, and for the reasons already given we hold that the present case is within the terms of s. 225 (1) of the Local Boards Act. In Municipal Council, Kumbakonam v. Veeraperumal Padayachi (4), Mr. Justice Napier takes care to point out that in the case then before the Court, the contract was not of such a character as must necessarily arise out of statutory powers given to the local body. The same cannot be said of the contract here. In Bhag Chand Dagdusa Gujrathi v. Secretary of State for India (6) the Privy Council, in dealing with a similar provision, s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, pointed out that if a particular action falls within the language of the statute, it is not for the Court to canvass the policy or even the expediency of interfering with a person's right of action, by such a restrictive provision. In the view that the present action is clearly within the terms of s. 225 Cls. (i) and (iii) of the Local Boards Act, the suit must fail on the ground that it has been instituted more than six months after the accrual of the alleged cause of action. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1, Sch. II, Art. 17—Cross-objections—Court-fee on, how to be paid—Principle to be followed.

The court-fee on cross-objections should be paid ad valorem according to the value of the subject-matter in dispute under Art 1, Sch. I of the Court Fees Act and not on the same principle as laid down for the case of appeals in Art. 17 of the Second Schedule. Raja Harnam Singh v. Rani Bahu Rani (1), followed, Surendra Singh v. Gambhir Singh (2), not followed

F. C. A. against the order of the Sub-Judge of Bara Banki, dated September 9, 1935.

Messrs. Ghulam Hasan and Iftikhar Husain, for the Applicant.

Judgment—The office has raised an objection regarding deficiency of court-fee.

The suit was for a mere declaration that a mortgage deed executed by the plaintiff in favour of Chaudhri Mohammad Ghayas-ud-Din Ashraf and Abu Saeed was void and not binding upon him. According to the plaintiff's contention he was a minor at the time when the deed was executed.

The trial Court decreed that the mortgage deed was void and not binding on the plaintiff and declared that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 could recover Rs. 11,500 as principal sum from the plaintiff's property and that parties would bear their own costs.

The plaintiff filed an appeal in this Court in respect of his liability to pay Rs. 11,500 and Chaudhri Mohammad Ghayas-ud-Din Ashraf who was defendant No. 2 in the Court below filed a cross-objection against the decree of that Court declaring that the mortgage was not binding upon the plaintiff. The cross-objector also claimed Rs. 750 as costs which should have been awarded in his favour.

The office has reported that the cross-objection should be valued for the purpose of court-fee, at Rs. 11,500 and that ad valorem court-fee should be paid on this sum under Art. 1 of the First Schedule of the Court Fee Act, a further ad valorem court-fee should be paid on the interest, Rs. 4,140 which has been claimed, and a further ad valorem court-fee should be paid upon the amount of costs which according to the lower Court's decree amounted to Rs. 1,077.

For the cross-objector it has been contended that as the court fee payable upon the plaint and upon the memorandum of appeal in the suit was governed by Art. 17 of the Second Schedule, as the suit was for a mere declaration where no consequential relief is prayed, therefore, the court-fee payable on the cross-objection should be governed by the same provision of the court-Fees Act.

It certainly does seem anomalous that the cross-objector could have filed an appeal claiming precisely the same reliefs as he claims in his cross-objection upon a court-fee of Rs. 15 under Art. 17, Sch. II, where as if he files a cross-objection he should pay an ad valorem court-fee on the value of the subject-matter in dispute. The anomaly has frequently been noticed in judicial decisions. Unfortunately for the cross-objector there is no special provision in the Court Fees Act governing the court-fee payable upon a cross-objection excepting only Art. 1 of Sch. I. There is no reference to cross-objections in Art. 17 of the Second Schedule. This certainly does give rise to anomalies as pointed out in previous judicial decisions but we think that we are bound to follow a very clear ruling of a Bench of this Court in Raja Harnam Singh v. Rani Bahu Rani (1). In that case it was held that the court-fee on cross-objections should be paid ad valorem according to the value of the subject-matter in dispute under Art. 1, Sch. I of the Court Fees Act and not on the same principle as laid down for the case of appeals in Art. 17 of the Second Schedule. We think that we are bound to follow this ruling unless we see good reason to differ from it.

The learned Advocate for the cross-objector has relied upon a recent decision by a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Surendra Singh v. Gambhir Singh (2). That ruling is certainly in his favour but it is contrary to the general trend of judicial authority and it is a decision by a single Judge. There are many rulings which take the same view as the ruling of this Court which we have already cited. On this point therefore we find that the cross-objector must pay court-fee ad valorem on the value of the subject-matter in dispute.

The question then arises as to what is the value of the subject-matter in dispute. The interest of the cross-objector in the principal mortgage money was only Rs. 6,700; he is not interested in the rest of the mortgage money which is due to Abu Saeed who has not thought fit to file a cross-objection. The principal of the mortgage, therefore, in respect of which the cross-objector has filed his cross-objection is Rs. 6,700.

In addition to this, interest is claimed but the learned Advocate states that simple interest will only be claimed at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. It is open to him to reduce the contractual amount of interest if he so wishes. The office must, therefore, calculate the amount of interest on Rs. 6,700 at the rate of 6 per cent per annum simple interest from May 4, 1929, to April 30, 1932. The court-fee will be ad valorem on this sum also.

As regards costs, the cross-objector has claimed Rs. 750 under this head and has already paid an ad valorem court-fee on this amount, so no further deficiency can be claimed on this score.

The court-fee will be paid ad valorem on the total sum calculated as ordered above. One month will be allowed for making good the deficiency.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Firm in the names of father and son—Presumption that father is member of the firm—Onus of proving the contrary.

The presumption, in case of a firm which is in the names of father and son, is that the father is a member of that firm and the burden of proving that he is not, lies on the person who asserts it.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated November 15, 1930.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

Skemp, J. The firm Kalu Singh-Sundar Singh sued the firm Buta Mal-Devi Dial for a sum due on accounts. Buta Mal and Devi Dial were father and son. Buta Mal died during the suit and a decree was granted by the trial Judge against Devi Dial and the other sons of Buta Mal named Ram Lal and Bir Bal as his legal representatives. The decree was personal against Devi Dial, and his two brothers were held liable to the extent of the property of their father.

Ram Lal and Bir Bal appealed and the learned District Judge found that Buta Mal was not a partner in the firm styled Buta Mal-Devi Dial. He, therefore, accepted the appeal of Ram Lal and Bir Bal and maintained the decree against Devi Dial alone.

The plaintiffs have appealed through Dr. Nand Lal. The question of law agitated is whether the learned District Judge was not in error in the presumption he made from the name of the firm. He said:

"The mere fact the firm bears Buta Mal's name is no proof that Buta Mal himself had anything to do with it. Sons often introduce the name of their father out of respect in starting a business of their own, and there is no presumption whatsoever that the persons in whose name the firm is styled are actually partners in the business. I am unable to see that there is any good evidence of Buta Mal having taken any prominent share in the business of this firm."

It seems to me that the learned District Judge misdirected himself. If there was a firm Buta Mal-Devi Dial father and son, the initial presumption is that Buta Mal was a member of the firm and it was for Buta Mal or his representatives to disprove that presumption. The point whether or not he took a prominent share in the firm's business is irrelevant. A sleeping partner need take no active share at all.

The question, was there any firm of the name of Buta Mal Devi Dial and was Buta Mal a partner in that firm and liable for the debt in question, formed the first issue before the trial Court. The learned trial Judge gave good reasons for answering this issue in the affirmative. In particular he relied on the admission of Devi Dial made before issues that it was at the request of the plaintiffs that he had opened the accounts in the name of Buta Mal-Devi Dial. Formerly they had been in the name of a firm Devi Dial-Kundan Lal, Kundan Lal being the son of Devi Dial. In other words, the credit of Buta Mal was pledged at the plaintiffs' request. There is sufficient evidence that Buta Mal was aware of this. The District Judge has found as fact that Buta Mal used to visit the shop, and also that Buta Mal used to take goods from plaintiffs' shop.

Mr. Shamair Chand for the respondents urged that there was no firm Buta Mal-Devi Dial; but this was not clearly pleaded and the point was not taken in the grounds of appeal to the learned District Judge. In fact from the judgment of the District Judge it would appear that before him it was assumed that there used to be a firm called Buta Mal-Devi Dial.

I would accept this appeal and restore the decree of the trial Judge, which was not only against Devi Dial, but against Ram Lal and Bir Bal to the extent of their father's property in their hands. The respondents are to pay the appellants' costs throughout.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

S. C. A. against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, dated July 17, 1933, upholding that of the Munsif of Bilgram, dated December 10, 1932.

Meesrs. Hyder Husain and P. N. Chaudhry, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ghulam Hasan and Syed Husain, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs appeal against an appellate judgment and decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, upholding the judgment and decree of the Court of the Munsif of Bilgram.

The facts out of which this appeal arises are briefly as follows:—

One Wazir Ali was owner of the entire mahal Garbi, in village Lalpur-Mirzapur, in the District of Hardoi, On June 5, 1896, Wazir Ali executed a deed of gift, (Ex. 2), in respect of the plots in suit, having an area of 21 bighas 18 biswas 16 biswasnsis, to his daughter-in-law Musammat Zohra Begam, the wife of his only son Abbas Husain. Wazir Ali died sometime later and was succeeded by his son Abbas Husain, who got possession of the entire estate, including mahal Garbi. On January 20, 1902, Abbas Husain sold mahal Garbi (see the sale deed Ex. C-12), to Musammat Hayat Fatima, and on January 25, 1902, Musammat Hayat Fatima and Zohra Begam each executed an agreement in favour of the other, the effect of which was that the possession of Zohra Begam over the plots in suit was maintained and Hayat Fatima continued to be made liable to pay the Government Revenue in respect thereof. The agreement executed by Zohra Begam is Ex. 5, and that executed by Hayat Fatima is Ex. 6. The agreements also laid down that Zohra Begam would be liable for payment of the enhanced portion of the revenue in proportion to her share in the event of there being a revision of settlement and consequent enhancement of the land revenue payable in respect of the village. On April 20, 1927, Zohra Begam executed a deed of gift (Ex. 7), in respect of the plots in suit in favour of her son the plaintiff Syed Manzoor Husain. Musammat Hayat Fatima died sometime later, and her heirs are the four defendants, Syed Dawar Ali her son, Musammat Ruqaiya Begam, wife of another son, Syed Yawar Ali another son, and Musammat Ajaz Fatima her daughter. On March 16, 1931; the under-proprietary rent in respect of the plots in suit was fixed by the Revenue Court at the instance of Hayat Fatima's son at Rs. 23 which rent Syed Manzoor Husain was liable to pay. This rent was fixed by the Assistant Settlement Officer upon a compromise arrived at by the parties.

The present suit was filed by Syed Manzoor Husain on June 20, 1932, for a declaration that the defendants are bound to pay Rs. 23 the under-proprietary rent fixed in respect of the plots in suit. Upon the pleadings of the parties the Munsif framed the following issues :—

1. a. Has land revenue been assessed on the plots in dispute ?

1. b. If not, has the plaintiff got any cause of action :

2. Has this Court any jurisdiction to try this suit ?

3. Is the suit barred by res judicata ?

4. Whether the defendants are liable to pay the rent or revenue assessed on the plots in suit in accordance with the agreement between the parties ?

5. Is the agreement between the vendee Musammat Hayat Fatima and the donee Zohra Begam valid as being without consideration ?

6. a. Was there any compromise between the parties as alleged in para. 14 of the written statement ?

6. b. If so, is the plaintiff estopped by the compromise from disputing his liability under the compromise ?

7. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled ?

The finding of the trial Court on issue No. 1 a. was in the negative. The finding on issue No. 1 b. was that the plaintiff had got no cause of action. Issue No. 2 was decided in favour of the plaintiff. The finding on issue No. 3 was in the negative. The finding on issue No. 4 was in the negative and against the plaintiff. The finding on issue No. 5 was that the agreement was not void as being without consideration. The finding on issue No. 6 was that the plaintiff was estopped from disputing his liability under the compromise entered into by him for payment of under-proprietary rent in respect of the plots in suit. The learned Munsif accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that there was no reason to vary the decree of the lower Court and accordingly dismissed the appeal with costs.

Dissatisfied with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff has filed this Second Appeal.

We have heard the learned Counsel of both parties, and, in our opinion, the finding on issue No. 6 relating to the plea of estoppel must be given against the plaintiff, and that makes an end to his case. Exhibit C-1, which is the order of the Assistant Settlement Officer, clearly proves that parties had entered into a compromise before him, and that order has been passed upon that very same compromise. As pointed out by the learned Munsif, the fact that a compromise was entered into whereby the under-proprietary rent of the holding in dispute was fixed at Rs. 23 a year can hardly be questioned by any party. The defendants filed Ex. C-11 which is a copy of the power of attorney executed by the plaintiff in favour of his general agent, Abbas Husain, his own father. The original file of the Settlement Court proceedings had been summoned in the trial Court, and this matter was made so clear that in the lower Appellate Court that it was not challenged by plaintiff. On this point the learned Subordinate Judge writes as follows :—

"Before me the factum of the compromise and the existence of authority in favour of Abbas for that compromise has been conceded, and the grounds relating thereto not pressed, but it has been urged that even in spite of the said compromise this suit is maintainable."

In our opinion, the plaintiff is estopped from denying his liability to pay the under-proprietary rent in respect of the land, in suit. Section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act lays down that "when one person has by his declaration, act, or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceedings between him and such person or his representative to deny the truth of that thing."

The plaintiff Syed Manzoor Husain, through his father and general agent, deliberately accepted before the Assistant Settlement Officer the liability to pay the under-proprietary rent of the holding in suit. He cannot, therefore, now resile from that position, and seek for a declaration to the effect that the defendants are liable to pay Rs. 23 as under-proprietary rent when his own liability for the payment of that sum was admitted before the Assistant Settlement Officer by him through his general agent. The plaintiff as well as the lower Appellate Court has caused no small confusion in this matter by treating the under-proprietary rent which was fixed by the Assistant Settlement Officer in respect of the land in suit as land revenue. This under-proprietary rent was fixed by the Assistant Settlement Officer under s. 79 of the Land Revenue Act, and the provisions of s. 107 of the Oudh Rent Act relating to remission of muafi or rent free grants have no applicability whatsoever to the present case. But apart from this confusion of thought the matter is very clear and admits of no dispute and that is that the plaintiff having accepted the liability to pay the under-proprietary rent in the presence of the Assistant Settlement Officer and after entering into a compromise with the defendants cannot now turn round and saddle the defendants with the payment of the under-proprietary rent. The defendant Yawar Ali is the lambardar of the village, and as such, he cannot be made liable for the payment of the under-proprietary rent dues from the plaintiff.

In our opinion the finding of the learned Munsif on issue No. 6 must be upheld and the plaintiff must be held to be estopped from disputing his liability to pay the under-proprietary rent in terms of the compromise entered into by his father as a general agent.

We need not, therefore, discuss the other questions raised in this appeal. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Suit No. 1009 of 1933

CUNLIFFE, J.

MOUSELL & Co., LTD.—PLAINTIFF

GHANSHYAMDAS JAMNADAS—DEFENDANT

Legal practitioner—Premature threat from Bench—Pleader's duty to protest then and there and apply for transfer—Compromise—Pleader settling case on such threat—Compromise to be set aside—Practice—Suitors should feel that Court does not decide as to veracity of witnesses before they are seen in witness box.

It is the duty of members of the Bar, if their clients are threatened prematurely from the Bench not to adopt an attitude which may be described as pusillanimous, but protest then and there that they resent such observations; and after consulting with their Attorney instructing them it may become necessary for them to apply for a transfer of the case to the list of another Judge

Where soon after the premature threatening of his clients by the Bench, the Pleader consented to settle the case :

Held, that the Counsel was intimidated and was not free to consider the whole aspect of the settlement from an unbiased point of view, and that the Court had an inherent power to set aside this settlement.

It is of cardinal importance that suitors in Courts of justice should enter and leave the Courts with a feeling that whatever may be the upshot of actions which are commenced and fought out, the Court at any rate does not make up its mind as to the truth or untruth of their witnesses before the witnesses have been seen in the witness box. [p. 299, col. 2.]

Mr. B. C. Ghose, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. P. N. Sen, for the Defendant.

Order.—This is a somewhat embarrassing petition which arises out of a suit for the sale between the parties of a consignment of imported saris. In actual fact there was a cross action on the part of the defendants who were to take delivery of the goods, but at the hearing of, what I may call the main action, after the plaintiffs had called their evidence, the learned Judge presiding over the trial thought fit to make certain observations. They concerned the defendant and consisted, broadly, of a threat to sanction the defendant's prosecution for perjury if he gave evidence along certain lines. There are various descriptions of what happened during this incident. In the petition which is before me, which asks for the setting aside of the decree and for a new trial, this is how the incident was described:

Paragraph 9.—"That after the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiffs were cross-examined by my Counsel, the learned Judge without giving your petitioners an opportunity to state their case, threatened to send your petitioners to jail, as soon as your petitioners would step into the witness box, whereupon your petitioner's Counsel, Mr. P. N. Sen consented to a decree being passed for the full amount of the claim and costs."

In the affidavit which supports that petition what occurred is referred to as follows:

"With reference to the statements contained in para. 4 of the plaintiff's affidavit, I repeat that the learned Judge did not give me any opportunity to place my case; whilst the cross-examination of the plaintiff was going on, the learned Judge threatened to send the deponent to jail as soon as he got me into the witness box. As a matter of fact the learned Judge told Counsel for the deponent that his Lordship would himself be able to give sanction to prosecute under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and asked the assistance of the Registrar of this Court to have the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code ready."

Then the respondent's version of what occurred is in the affidavit of Mr. Fritz Grellsamer. He says this:

"After the cross-examination of myself and a broker witness, Counsel for the plaintiff Company closed their case and thereupon Mr. P. N Sen called a witness from the customs office to prove certain letters which were being proved when the Judge asked Mr. Sen as to whether he intended to call his client into the box. Mr. Sen said that he did upon which the learned Judge asked whether his client was going to deny the agreement spoken to by myself and the broker witness on behalf of the plaintiff to which Mr. Sen said that that was so Thereupon the learned Judge said that if on hearing the evidence given by Mr. Sen's client his Lordship came to the conclusion that he was not speaking the truth, his Lordship would not hesitate to take proceedings for the sanction of the prosecution of the witness. After that Mr. Sen was asked to proceed with the case and he did so to some extent."

It is not disputed that Mr. Sen did settle the case on behalf of his client. In my opinion the offer for settlement came from Mr. Sen and not from the other side. The description of the settlement is by no means accurately set out in the petitioner's affidavit. It was a partial not a full settlement; and although the petitioner now denies that he gave any authority to Mr. Sen to take this course or that his Attorney did either, in my view, both the Attorney and petitioner acquiesced in what Mr. Sen was doing. It is of course exceedingly difficult, on affidavit evidence only untested by cross-examination, to come to an exact conclusion as to what actually took place. In the circumstances described I think it will be safer in considering what the learned Judge said and the effect of his words upon Counsel for the defendants, the petitioners here, if I rely solely on the version given by the plaintiffs-respondents. These seems to be an honest affidavit. There is no attempt to deny that the outburst from the learned Judge did in fact take place nor is there a denial that the negotiation for settlement followed very closely upon the outburst in question.

It is argued on behalf of the petitioners that this settlement was no settlement in that the settlement was brought about without proper freedom on the part of the Counsel for the petitioners. Reference has been made to a well known English case and an equally well known case in this province which deals with the scope and limit of the authority of Counsel to settle cases in Court when there is some dispute about what occurred as the instructions given to them by their professional or lay clients but these cases do not seem to me to have an exact bearing upon the problem before me. The question is, should this settlement be set aside because, to use the words of a very learned Judge of this Court, (the late Sir Ashutosh Mukerjee) the consent here could not be deemed to be free and fair and might well be regarded as a constrained and involuntary acquiescence in the mode of trial which the Court had decided to adopt? I shall refer to that case again in a moment; but I mention it here because the language which the late learned Judge used in deciding that case is in my opinion singularly apposite to this case. Of course it is exceedingly unfortunate, and I said so during the hearing, that Mr. Sen himself is instructed to appear before me to-day to argue in support of this petition. It is quite obvious why it is undesirable that Counsel in such circumstances should appear once more, because it was hardly possible for Mr. Sen to put his client's case before the Court without giving evidence himself, and this he proceeded to do. I believe that in truth and in fact he was intimidated into taking the settlement course by what the learned Judge said—intimidated in the sense that he was apprehensive on behalf of his client; and I cannot help observing, and I do not wish to be harsh in any way, that such an avowal is not in the ordinary course of things quite creditable to a member of the Bar.

The circumstances here were, however, very peculiar. There was little time to make up his mind. Counsel was appearing for a person who was, I think, without much education and without perhaps an exact appreciation of what was going on. It cannot, however, be too strenuously insisted on in similar circumstances that it is the duty of members of the Bar, if their clients are threatened prematurely from the Bench, not to adopt an attitude which may be described as pusillanimous, but protest then and there that they resent such observations; and possibly after consulting with their Attorney instructing them, it may become necessary for them to apply for a transfer of the case to the list of another Judge. In my opinion the settlement here was not a free settlement.

The only decision which has been cited to me that has any bearing on the particular facts of this case is that of Radha Kissen v. Luchmichand Jhawar (1). That was a case which was tried by the late Chief Justice of this Court sitting as a puisne Judge on the Original Side of this Court. It was a suit under s. 14, Arbitration Act, and when Counsel was arguing before the learned Judge, the head-note sets out that he held that the suit did not lie and declined to entertain the hearing of the application except on the basis that he treated both the trial and the application as a petition under the Act. Under the mistaken impression that Counsel on both sides had consented to this view, he proceeded to hear the matter on affidavits and then dismissed both the action and the motion with costs. Dealing with that aspect of the case the late Sir Ashutosh Mukerjee on appeal said:

"Even if the minute book has shown the factum of consent, it could not be treated as consent freely given by Counsel in the exercise of his discretion as an Advocate invested with a general control over the the conduct of the case of his client. The learned Judge states in his judgment that the consent (which he thought was given) was accorded only when he intimated that he would otherwise decline to entertain the motion. If Counsel had consented after the expression of such determination by the Court, the consent could not be deemed free and fair and might well be regarded a constrained and involuntary acquiescence in a mode of trial which the Court had decided to adopt."

(1) 56 Ind. Cas. 541; A.I.R. 1920 Cal. 150, 34 Cr. L J. 283; 24 C.W.N 454.

Now although this case, so far as the facts are concerned, is in no way analogous to that case, it does seem to me that this settlement would never have been proposed had the learned Judge not made the observations that he did. It was brought about in my opinion by a form of judicial coercion. Counsel for the defendants was not prepared to take the risk of putting his client into the box to support his pleaded case. The learned Judge without seeing his client had said that if he, the defendant, gave evidence to support his written statement he was prepared to go to the length of recommending the prosecution of the defendant for perjury. If I think that Counsel was intimidated and was not free to consider the whole aspect of the settlement from what I may call an unbiased point of view, I apprehend that I have an inherent power to set aside this settlement. I propose to do so. It is unfortunate that this application was not made to the learned Judge himself before he laid down his office, but it is of cardinal importance that suitors in Courts of Justice should enter and leave the Courts with a feeling that whatever may be the upshot of actions which are commenced and fought out, the Court at any rate does not make up its mind as to the truth or untruth of their witnesses before the witnesses have been seen in the witness box.

I consider that the setting aside of this decree based on the settlement is in the public interest, the highest interest which can be considered in a Court of Justice. I shall make no order as to costs in favour of the petitioner here. The respondents will have the costs of this petition in any event. I am not concerned with the question of costs already incurred which I think will be better dealt with by the Judge who tries the case at the new trial.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 189 of 1933
February 27, 1935
KING, C. J.

SHAMBHU DUTT AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
RAM BAKHSH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 97, 116, 120—Suit for refund of money wrongly paid—Money paid to redeem mortgage—Suit for foreclosure by person having mortgagee interest—Payment held to be wrongly made—Decree for foreclosure—Suit for refund—Article applicable—Limitation, when begins to run.

The plaintiffs who were the representatives in interest of the mortgagors advanced Rs 400 to defendants who succeeded to a share of the mortgagee rights, in order to redeem the mortgage. The money was received and defendants executed a deed of re-conveyance of the mortgaged property in consideration of the payment of the mortgage money made to them. L who had acquired an interest in the mortgagees' interest sued for foreclosure. The plaintiffs pleaded that they had already paid Rs. 400 to defendants and had redeemed the mortgage. This plea was not accepted and it was held that the payment had been wrongly made to the defendants. The decree for foreclosure was passed on September 27, 1928, and in consequence of this decree the plaintiffs had to pay a sum of Rs. 471-11-3 to L on February 22, 1929, for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage Plaintiffs filed a suit for recovering the sum of Rs 400 with interest, which had been wrongly paid to defendants :

Held, that Art. 97, Limitation Act applied and the period of three years ran from September 27, 1928, which was the date of the foreclosure decree. As soon as it had been decided by the foreclosure decree that the defendants wrongly received the money it would have been open to the plaintiffs to institute a suit to recover the money wrongly paid even before they had been compelled to make a second payment of the money to L. Article 116 did not apply as the suit was not framed as a suit for compensation for the breach of any covenant Nor did Art. 120 apply to the case. Ma Hnit v. Gatina Bibi (1) and Hanuman Kamat v Hanuman Mandur. (2), referred to. [p. 301, col 2; p. 302, col. 1.]

S. C. A. against the judgment and decree passed by the Additional Sub-Judge, Fyzabad dated March 22, 1933, upholding the decree passed by the Munsif, Akbarpur, dated July 22, 1932.

Mr. B. P. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. N. Chaudhri, for the Respondents.

Judgment. This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for refund of a sum of money which was wrongly paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation and raised a question as to the Article of the Limitation Act which was applicable to a suit of this nature.

The facts of the case have been set forth in the judgment of the Court below and need not be repeated in full. The plaintiffs were representatives-in-interest of the mortgagors who had made a mortgage on July 23, 1914, in favour of Ram Adhin and Harpal. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the son and the brother of Ram Adhin who succeeded to a share of his mortgagee rights. On February 7, 1925, the plaintiffs paid Rs. 400 to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage. The money was received and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed a deed of reconveyance of the mortgaged property in consideration of the payment of the mortgage money made to them. Lalta Prasad who had acquired an interest in the mortgagees' interests both of Harpal's share and of the share which passed to Ramanand, the brother of Ram Adhin brought a suit for foreclosure on the basis of the mortgage. The plaintiffs pleaded that they had already paid Rs 400, to the defendants and had redeemed the mortgage. This plea was not accepted and it was held that the payment had been wrongly made to the defendants. The decree for foreclosure was passed on September 27, 1928, and in consequence of this decree the plaintiffs had to pay a sum of Rs. 471-11-3 to Lalta Prasad on February 22, 1929, for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage. This suit was instituted on February 19, 1932, for recovering the sum of Rs. 400, together with interest, amounting to Rs. 543, in all, which had been wrongly paid to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on February 7, 1925.

The only plea which need be considered for the purpose of this second appeal is the plea of limitation. The trial Court held that the suit was governed by Art. 116, and the time began to run from September 27, 1928, when the decree for foreclosure was passed and it was held that payment had wrongly been made to the defendants. On this view the suit was held to be within time.

The lower Appellate Court held that neither Art. 116 nor Art. 97, were applicable to this suit and limitation was governed by Art. 120, and the time began to run from the date when the plaintiffs had to make the second payment, namely, the February 22, 1929. On this view also the suit was held to be within time.

It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that the proper Article applicable to the suit is Art. 97, and that the period should begin to run from September 27, 1928.

Article 97 applies to a suit for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails and the period prescribed is three years from the date of the failure. The appellant's contention is that when the money was paid to the defendants on February 7, 1925, the defendants executed a deed of reconveyance and re-delivered possession of the property, and, therefore, there was consideration at that time. But when it was held in the foreclosure decree that the defendants had no right to receive the mortgage money and payment had wrongly been made to them, then the consideration failed and it was open to the plaintiffs to institute a suit for refund of the money which had wrongly been paid to the defendants. As the foreclosure decree was passed more than three years before the date of the institution of the present suit, it should be held that the suit is barred by limitation. The lower Appellate Court held that Art. 97, was not applicable because the plaintiffs retained possession of the mortgaged property even after the foreclosure decree had been passed and, therefore, it could not be held that there was failure of consideration from the date of the foreclosure decree. It has been argued that the question of retaining possession is immaterial as the foreclosure decree gave the plaintiffs a cause of action for suing for a refund of the money wrongly paid to the defendants although the plaintiffs had not been dispossessed. In my opinion this contention is correct.

It has been argued for the respondents that Art. 116, is the proper Article to apply. Article 116, applies to a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered and provides a period of 6 years from the time when the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought upon a similar contract not registered. The argument is that Ex. 4, is a registered deed of reconveyance by the appellants to the respondents and that contains an implied covenant of title and peaceful possession and when it was discovered on the decision of the suit for foreclosure that the appellants had no title to receive the money and to permit redemption of the mortgage then it should be held that there was a breach of the covenant and that the period should run from the date of the second payment, namely, February 22, 1929. On this view the suit would certainly be within time. I am unable to agree with the contention that Art. 116, is the proper Article to be applied to this suit. This suit was not framed as a suit for compensation for the breach of any covenant. It was a suit for the refund of money wrongly paid to the defendants. It might have been possible to frame the suit as one for compensation for the breach of an implied covenant in the registered deed of reconveyance but the suit was not framed on these lines and must, I think, be treated as a suit for the refund.

The appellants rely upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ma Hnit v. Gatima Bibi (1). In that case the appellant and her husband advanced Rs. 10,000 to the first respondent, a Muhammadan woman who purported to be acting as guardian for her nephew, a minor. She, as guardian, executed in favour of the lenders a mortgage upon two oil wells, professedly belonging to the minor, for the sum advanced and interest. In 1913 the oil wells were sold under a decree on that mortgage, but in 1918, a decree, made at the suit for the minor, set aside the sale and the mortgage, on the ground that the first respondent was not his guardian and had no authority. In 1919 the appellant brought a suit against the first respondent, the plaint submitting that as the money could not be recovered from the minor, the first respondent was liable, and stating that the cause of action arose at the date of the decree in 1918. It was held that Art. 97 applied to the suit and that the period of three years did not begin to run until the date of the decree setting aside the mortgage, and consequently the suit was not barred. The facts of that case are no doubt different from those of the case before me but it appears that the same principles are applicable. The suit was held to be a suit governed by Art. 97, on the ground that the existing consideration failed on the date of the decree setting aside the mortgage. It was not pleaded that the suit should be treated as a suit for compensation for breach of a contract although it might have been argued that the mortgagor gave an implied covenant of title.

In the present case I think it should be held that consideration failed from the date of the foreclosure decree when it was decided between the parties that the defendants were not entitled to receive the money. It has been argued that no suit for a refund would lie unless and until the plaintiffs had made their second payment to Lalta Prasad. I do not think this view is correct. As soon as it had been decided by the foreclosure decree that the defendants wrongly received the money, I think it would have been open to the plaintiffs to institute a suit to recover the money wrongly paid even before they had been compelled to make a second payment of the money to Lalta Prasad. Another decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council has also been referred to on behalf of the appellants, namely, the case of Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (2). That was a case in which a member of a joint family had sold some joint family property. The co-parceners objected to the alienation and the purchaser was unable to obtain possession. It was held that the purchaser was entitled to recover the purchase money as soon as he found himself unable to obtain possession. The suit was treated as being governed by Art. 97. Here again the suit to recover the purchase money was treated as a suit for a refund for money paid upon the existing consideration which subsequently failed and not as a suit for compensation for breach of contract upon any implied covenant of title.

I think that the appellants' contention is correct and that Art. 97 is applicable and the period of three years should run from September 27, 1928, which is the date of the foreclosure decree. On this view the suit was barred by limitation. I accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. As regards costs I think that in equity the plaintiffs should not be required to pay costs throughout as they certainly had a good and valid claim but for the bar of limitation. I, therefore, allow the costs of this appeal to the defendants but the parties shall bear their own costs in the Courts below.

Vendor and purchaser—Purchaser agreeing to pay vendor's creditor—Creditor's right to sue purchaser —Privity of contract.

Where a purchaser of mortgaged property agreed with his vendor to pay off the mortgage out of the sale price which was reserved with him for this purpose and he, (the purchaser) wrote to the mortgagee that he will pay the mortgage amount and requested him not to press the mortgagor.

Held, that the purchaser made himself personally liable to pay the mortgage amount and the mortgagee pas entitled to recover the amount personally from the purchaser. Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (1), distinguished Siva Subramania Mudaliar v. Gnanasamananda Pandara Sannadhi (2), followed.

A. against the decree of the District Court of East Godavari at Rajahmundry, in O. S. No. 31 of 1927.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and G. Chandrasekhara Sastri, for the Respondent.

Stone, J.—Second defendant is the appellant in this case. He is the purchaser of property that was mortgaged to the plaintiff from the mortgagor, and it was arranged at the time of the purchase that part of the purchase price, viz., Rs. 2,900 should be retained in the hands of the 2nd defendant to pay to the mortgagee to discharge the mortgage amount then owing by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. In pursuance of that arrangement, the 2nd defendant, having this money which was due to the vendor in his hands, wrote on July 10, 1923, to the mortgagee saying that the property had been sold to him and a portion of the sale amount paid to the vendor, and as for the balance

"It is arranged as between us (i. e. the vendor and the vendee) that I should pay you the same towards your mortgage debt and obtain the return of the mortgage bond with payment endorsement noted thereon. Accordingly, I should have already brought your money, but delay occurred on account of some transactions and urgent business here. So, I shall within the end of this month, bring to Rajahmundry, the amount of principal and interest due under the said bond, pay you the money, and obtain back the said mortgage bond, from you. I have, therefore, informed you of the fact. In the meanwhile you need not ask (the mortgagor) Veerabadhraswami Garu for repayment."

Following upon that there are a number of letters wherein the 2nd defendant seeks to excuse his failure to carry out that promise and bring the money and pay to the mortgagee. On those facts the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the 2nd defendant has rendered himself personally liable to pay to the mortgagee that sum of money, viz., Rs. 2,900. In our opinion the learned Judge is right in so doing. Mr. Bowstead in his work on Agency, 8th Edition, page 457, says:

"Where an agent is authorised to pay money on behalf of his principal to a third person, the authority becomes irrevocable as soon as the agent enters into a contract, or otherwise become bound to pay or hold such money to or to the use of such third person".

It is true that the Privy Council in Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (1) regarded it as clear that where the action is brought by a mortgagee to enforce against a purchaser of the mortgaged property an undertaking that he entered into with his vendor, the mortgagee has no right to avail himself of that undertaking because he was no party to it. The purchaser in that case entered into no contract with him and the purchaser is not personally bound to pay the mortgage debt. But here the facts are different from the facts in that case because here it is not merely a question of the mortgagee seeking to make the purchaser liable under the contract between him and the mortgagor but it is a case where the mortgagee has been communicated with or has been told by the purchaser that he holds certain moneys for the mortgagee and has been asked not to press the mortgagor for payment of that amount. On these facts the purchaser occupies a different position to what he would have occupied had he not communicated the undertaking to the mortgagee. This is much nearer the case in Siva Subramania Mudaliar v. Gnanasamananda Pandara Sannadhi (2) where according to the head note it was held that a person who directs another to pay money to a third person is entitled to countermand that order before that person has entered into direct relations with the third person and agreed to pay it to him; but where the agent is directed or authorised by his principal to pay to a third person money existing or accruing in his hands to the use of the principal; and he expressly or impliedly contracts with such third person to pay to him, or to receive or hold the money on his behalf or for his use, he is personally liable to pay such third person, or to receive or hold the money on his behalf. In these circumstances we think, therefore, that on this part of the case the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

There remains the question of compound interest. The learned Judge has allowed interest at 12 per cent. compound interest That is in accordance with the terms of the contract, and although it may be that the interest could be regarded as penal, still some interest must be given and the quantum of that interest is a matter within the discretion of the Court; the Court in its discretion has considered that the contract rate is a proper rate of interest in this case. We see no reason to interfere with that discretion.

S. C. A. against the order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Unao, dated April 18, 1933.

Mr. P. N. Chaudhri, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration to the effect that certain property gifted by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 under a deed of gift dated April 23, 1926, is liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree in favour of the plaintiff against defendant No. 1.

On the April 21, 1926, defendant No. 1 Musammat Ahmadi executed a promissory note for Rs. 400 in favour of Musammat Sundar and on the next day, namely, April 22, 1926, she executed a second promissory note in favour of Musammat Sundar for Rs. 500. On April 23, 1926, that is only one day after the execution of the second promissory note Musammat Ahmadi gifted her entire property movable and immovable to Musammat Saida defendant No. 2.

The promissory notes in suit were transferred by Musammat Sundar to the plaintiff who brought a suit upon the basis of them and obtained a decree against Musammnt Ahmadi on March 29, 1930. The plaintiff sought to execute his decree by attachment and sale of the property gifted by Musammat Ahmadi to Musammat Saida. Musammat Saida raised objections which were upheld by the executing Court. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit claiming a declaration to the effect mentioned above.

The trial Court dismissed the suit mainly upon the view that terms in the deed of gift to the effect that the donee should be liable for the payment of all the debts of the donor were void as being contrary to the rules of Muhammadan Law. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the plaintiff's appeal mainly on the ground that the terms in the deed of gift imposing the liability upon the donee of paying the donors debt was void for uncertainty, as there was no specification of the amount of the debts due from the donor.

The plaintiff comes to this Court in second appeal.

The plaintiffs contention is that the donee Musammat Saida is a universal donee and under s. 128 of the Transfer of Property Act, the donee is personally liable for all the debts due by the donor at the time of the gift to the extent of the property comprised therein.

It appears to be correct that the donee must be held to be an universal donee. This appears from the terms of the deed of gift and from the declaration made by the donor at the time of registration. Apart from the law laid down in s. 128 of the Transfer of Property Act the deed of gift itself contains a specific provision that all the debts which are due from the donors personally or which are charged upon the gifted property are to be paid by the donee. The donee in fact was expressly made liable for paying off all the debts of the donors and all the incumbrances upon the property.

In the present case we are not concerned with any incumbrances, but it is admitted that Musammat Ahmadi, the donor, was indebted to the extent of the loans borrowed on the basis of the pro-notes in favour of Musammat Sundar at the time when she executed the deed of gift. It appears clear, therefore, that both under s. 128 and also under the express condition of the deed of gift, the donee was personally liable, to the extent of the gifted property, for payment of the sums due on the basis of these two pro-notes. We think that the fact that all the debts due from the donors were not specified in the deed of gift is immaterial. It is proved and admitted that the donor was indebted to the extent of the loans advanced on the basis of the pro-notes and to that extent at least the donee must be liable.

The trial Court took the view that the conditions in the deed of gift making the donee liable for the payment of the donors debt were void as being contrary to rules of Muhammadan Law. This view does not appear to be correct. The case of Abid Husain v. Ram Nidh (1) has been cited by the learned Advocate for the appellant. In that case it was held that where a Muhammadan by a deed of gift transfers the whole of his property, movable and immovable, in favour of his son and makes the son liable to pay all the debts due from him, the son is an universal donee within the meaning of s. 128 of the Transfer of Property Act, and as such, liable to satisfy all the debts of his father inasmuch as the provisions of s. 128 of the Transfer of Property Act are not in contravention of any rule of Muhammadan Law. In our view the conditions in the deed of gift making the universal donee liable to satisfy the debts of the donors are not void either for uncertainty or for being contrary to any rule of Muhammadan Law.

In our opinion, therefore, the plaintiff's claim must be decreed as the defendant No. 2 is an universal donee and is liable for the satisfaction of debts which are proved to have been due from the donors at the time when the deed of gift was executed. The donee's liability is of course confined to the extent of the property comprised in the deed of gift.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 30, 114 Illus. (b)—Approver—Recovery of ordinary clothes with no special marks of identification—Whether sufficient corroboration—Ornament which can be identified recovered—Corroboration, if sufficient.

The recovery of ordinary clothes which do not have any special marks capable of definite identification does not afford sufficient corroboration to the testimony of the approver and the accused should not be convicted on such meagre corroboration. But the recovery of an ornament which can be identified is sufficient corroboration.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated November 3, 1933.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy-ud-din, for the Appellant.

Mr. Asa Ram Aggarwal, for the Crown.

Judgment.—On the night of February 22, 1933, a dacoity was committed at the house of Musammat Daropdi, at Ambala, in which jewellery and clothes were stolen. The matter was reported to the Police, but for a considerable time the culprits could not be traced. Later on, suspicion fell on a man named Zahurulhaq and he made some disclosures. He was tendered a pardon in May 1933, and became an approver witness. Six persons were then sent up for trial for an offence under s. 395, Penal Code. They were Kartara, Kartar Singh, Ali Mohammad, Rahmat Ullah, Din Muhammad alias Dina and Ibrahim. Of these Rahmat Ullah, Dina and Ibrahim have been given the benefit of doubt and acquitted; while Kartara, Ali Muhammad and Kartar Singh have been convicted and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200 each. In default of payment of fine each one of them is to undergo rigorous imprisonment of one year more. The convicts have submitted three separate appeals. Kartara's appeal No. 1523 of 1933, has been argued before me by M. Ghulam Mohyuddin. The appeal of Ali Muhammad, which was filed by Mr. Man Singh, has been argued by Mr. M. D. Jan, while that of Kartar Singh which was filed by Mr. Man Singh, has been argued by Mr. Chona. This judgment will dispose of all the three connected appeals.

The story of the prosecution is that some time before this occurrence, Dina and Ibrahim had occasion to visit the house of Musammat Daropdi and came to know that she was a rich woman. They told Zahurulhaq that her house could be robbed with advantage. Zahurulhaq consulted Ali Muhammad, who showed readiness to join and offered to bring Kartara. Kartara also agreed when he came and advised the others to wait till dark nights set in. He promised to bring Kartar Singh with him. The offenders then came together and went to the house of Musammat Daropdi. On reaching the house of Musammat Daropdi, Kartara and Kartar Singh concealed themselves in the latrine of a mosque, which is about 50 or 60 feet from the house, while Zahurulhaq took Ali Mohammad towards the house and lifted him to his shoulders so that he got on to the roof a neighbouring house and went in and unchained the door of the house, to allow Kartara and Kartar Singh to enter it. Zahurulhaq and Rahmat Ullah kept watching outside the house, while Ali Mohammad, Kartara and Kartar Singh began to remove things from inside and came out with a bundle of clothes, ornaments and cash. The things were shown to the approver but were taken away by Kartara and Kartar Singh to Jandli, where they were to be distributed among them on the night following. The approver gives this story in Court and gives details of the articles which fell to the share of each of them. It is also in evidence that the approver produced some articles which he had received, and they were identified by Musammat Daropdi and other witnesses who knew her belongings.

Musammat Daropdi gives an account of the dacoity. She states that she awoke to ease herself and went out into the courtyard when she saw a fellow with a red turban coming up. She was going to chain the door of her room from inside but was prevented by him from doing so and she was told not to make any noise. Another fellow with a white turban followed the red turbaned man and one of them pressed her throat, while the other gagged her mouth. A third man took hold of her lantern. She and her two sons were taken into the inner room and she was asked to disclose where her property was. One of the men broke the almirah in the wall, while the other began to dig the ground and thus succeeded in taking away her belongings. Her son, Om Parkash, corroborates her story and says that his mother was injured by the dacoits and they were all threatened. The medical examination of Musammat Daropdi showed some scratches on her cheeks and two contusions on her chest. A witness named Barkat Ullah was also produced to support the prosecution, but he is said to have been one of the persons, who had actually joined in the conspiracy which led to dacoity, and no weight has therefore been attached by the trial Court to his statement. The Court has believed the statement of the approver, Zahurulhaq, to be substantially true, but as a matter of precaution has not acted on it in the case of the three men who have been acquitted, because no recoveries of any part of the stolen property had been made from them and therefore the corroboration of the statement of the approver was lacking in their case. The Court below has convicted all the men from whom some property, which had been subsequently identified to be a part of the stolen property, has been recovered. The main argument of the Counsel representing each of the appellants is that the recoveries relied upon in the case are of articles which are very common and were not capable of a definite identification and that therefore the cases of the appellants cannot be really distinguished from those of their companions who have been acquitted. I will, therefore, examine the case of each appellant from this point of view.

The articles produced by Kartara, appellant, were as follows: (1) Silk sua (P-4), 2. Dopatta (P-11) 3. Striped shirt, P-9, 4. Handkerchief P-10, (5) Saree (P-7) 6. Dopatta (P-8) 7. Saree (P. 5) 8. Black Ghagra (P-6) and 9. Patri (P. 3).

These articles were produced by him before the Sub-Inspector. Subsequently on a search of his house a Dhoti (P-17) was recovered. There is no doubt that these articles are of a very common nature and in the case of all the articles but one, namely, the patri, P-3, no special marks of identification have been mentioned, except that persons who have been using those articles deposed that they were theirs and some tailors or cloth merchants have supported them. The patri (P-3) is of silver, and is an ornament worn on the feet, near the ankles. The goldsmith, who made this patri states that he made it for the complainant and that it has a design like a web, which he recognises as his own. The learned Counsel of Kartara argues that this property was claimed by his client as his own. I find that this argument was based on a remark to that effect made by the trial Court but it is shown by a reference to the statement made by Kartara before the Committing Magistrate and the subsequent statement made at his trial, that Kartara did not lay claim to the property. I see no reason, therefore to disbelieve the identification, of so many articles by the party of the prosecution, but I attach particular importance to the identification of the patri, as a part of the stolen property. The passing of a pair of patris to Kartara and Kartar Singh was mentioned by the approver and therefore the recovery of this article, among others, from the possession of Kartara, is a valuable corroboration of the testimony of the approver. I think this is sufficient to justify the conviction of Kartara.

The following articles have been recovered from the possession of Ali Muhammad: Patris (P-1 and P 2), (proved by the testimony of (P. W's. Nos. 16, 17, 22), Dhotis (P-12 and P-13) proved by the testimony of P. W. Nos. 5, 16 and 17. He claimed all these articles to be his own property and in connection with the partis (P. 1 and P-2), he produced a goldsmith as his defence witness to rebut the statement of the goldsmith who had been produced on behalf of the prosecution to prove that the patris recovered from him belonged to Musammat Daropdi. The trial Court, after weighing the evidence produced on this point on both sides, has come to the conclusion that the articles recovered from Ali Muhammad belonged to the family of Musammat Daropdi and I see no sufficient reason to differ from that conclusion regarding the patris P-1 and P-2, as I am not impressed very much by the evidence of Abdullah, D. W. No. 13. I think in the case of Ali Muhammad the story put forward by the approver is corroborated. It may be added that according to the evidence of Sham Bihari Lal, Naib Tahsildar P. W. No. 14, Ali Muhammad showed him the spots in and near the house of Musammat Daropdi with which according to the approver he was concerned. His Counsel explains that as the approver was in the hands of the Police a considerable time before Ali Muhammad pointed out any of the spots, the presumption is that the Police had come to know about those spots through the approver and therefore no significance attaches to the pointing of the same by Ali Muhammad. There is force in this plea and therefore this piece of evidence may be excluded from consideration, but on the same principle as has been applied by me to the case of Kartara, I see no reason to distinguish the case of Ali Muhammad from that of Kartara, as two patris (P-1 and P-2) have been found with him. I donot attach much importance to the identification of the dhotis which have no peculiar mark on them. Thus his conviction also is quite correct.

Coming to the case of Kartar Singh, the only articles recovered from him are: Salwar (P-14), Shirt (P-15), Kurta Malmal (P-16).

Though Kartar Singh had got a number of gold ornaments as well as a pair of silver patris, according to the approver, none of those articles have been traced. He may possibly have disposed of them or got rid of them by the time he was arrested, but the fact remains that the corroboration of the approver's story sought in his case rests on the recovery of three ordinary clothes, which do not appear to me to have any special marks capable of definite identification. I do not think therefore that it can be safe to convict him of this offence on that meagre corroboration. I give him, therefore, the benefit of doubt and acquit him, because I do not see much to distinguish his case from that of the three others who have been acquitted by the trial Court. I see no reason to interfere in any way with the sentences passed against Kartara and Ali Muhammad and their appeals are dismissed while the appeal of Kartar Singh is accepted.

Fatal Accidents Act (XIII of 1855)—Fatal accident—Suit by heirs—Assessment of damages—Guiding principles,

Although the Fatal Accidents Act, 1855, gives a right of action to the legal representatives of a person killed by an accident, only such damages can be awarded as can be shown to have been suffered financially by those bringing the suit. Sentimental damages cannot be awarded nor can damages be awarded merely for the loss of a son, daughter, wife, or husband, unless actual financial damages have been suffered or there was at the time of the accident a prospective pecuniary advantage which was lost by reason of the fatal injury caused to the person in respect of whose death the suit is filed.

Where a boy aged 12 years who was earning Rs. 6 a month was killed by an accident and in a suit for damages filed by his old mother, Rs. 600 were awarded as damages by the trial Judge:

Held, that the award was not excessive. Taff Vale Railway v. Jenkins (1), referred to.

C. A. against the decree of the Court of the City Civil Judge, Madras, in Original Suit No. 686 of 1929.

Beasley, C. J.—The suit under appeal was one brought by the respondent who was the mother of a boy named Ponnusami aged about 12 who was in the employment of one of the bailiffs of this Court, Mr. Boyton. On April 27, 1928, at about noon this boy was knocked down and killed by a motor omnibus of which the appellant was the owner. The omnibus was coming from Saidapet down the Mount Road in the direction of George Town. This accident happened opposite to the building of Messrs. Fiat & Co., motor dealers. The boy appears to have been killed instantaneously and it was alleged by the respondent who filed the suit that the accident was the result of negligent driving of the driver of the motor omnibus. If that allegation was proved, then clearly the appellant would be liable to pay damages being responsible for the negligent act of his driver. Rupees 2,000 damages were claimed. The learned trial Judge found that the appellant's servant had driven the omnibus negligently and that as a result of that negligent driving the boy Ponnusami was killed. Finding in favour of the respondent on the question of liability, he assessed the damages at Rs. 600. On the question of negligence which is of course a pure question of fact only one eye-witness was called and that was a man named Matcher, a sergeant, who was at the time employed as door keeper by Messrs. Fiat & Co. and was standing by the door or at any rate in such a position as enabled him to see what happened. His evidence is that the accident happened on the right hand side of the middle of the road, that is to say, on the motor bus's wrong side of it, that the bus was going along at about 30 miles per hour and that originally in the middle of the road it suddenly swerved to its wrong side and having done so knocked over the little boy, by means of its front wheels and ran over him and killed him. He also says that the bus driver did not sound the horn. There are no other eye-witnesses. A witness was called for the defence, however, and that was a Sub-Inspector of the City Police, Hopkins, who apparently was investigating the matter and who was present at the inquest. He says that at the inquest the witness Matcher who was also a witness at the inquest said that it was not the bus driver's fault. His evidence upon this point, in my opinion, should not be accepted and the learned trial Judge rightly rejected it. It is rather peculiar that he should have remembered the answers given by this one witness and none of the answers given by any of the other witnesses. In my opinion the evidence of Matcher is to be accepted. That establishes that not only was the omnibus travelling at a fast rate and the driver did not sound the horn as obviously he ought to have done travelling at that speed, but that the omnibus also swerved to its wrong side. The motor bus driver has not been called to explain how it was that he failed to blow the horn or state that he did do so or deny that he went on to his wrong side and why it was that he did not see the little boy in front of the car in sufficient time to pull up and avert the accident. In my opinion, the negligence was clearly proved.

Then the question of damages arises. I observe that the learned trial Judge has not addressed himself to the basis upon which damages in such cases as this have to be awarded. This was a fatal accident and obviously the suit has been brought under the Fatal Accidents Act (XIII of 1855) which, as in England, enables the legal representatives of deceased persons to maintain actions in respect of fatal injuries caused to those whom they legally represent thus making an exception to the rule of actio personalis moritur cum persona; but although a right of action is given to the legal representatives, widow, husbands, fathers and children, there is a recognised basis for the assessment of damages. Only such damages can be awarded as can be shown to have been actually suffered financially by those who bring the suit—sentimental damages, cannot be awarded nor can damages be awarded merely for the loss of a son, daughter, a wife or a husband unless actual financial damages have been suffered or as was decided in an English case where there was at the time of the accident a prospective pecuniary advantage to those who afterwards bring the suit which prospective pecuniary advantage is lost by reason of the fatal injury caused to the person in respect of whose death the suit is filed. In most cases the damages which are recoverable are the amount of money which has been expended for the medical and funeral expenses and where plaintiffs are able to show that they were wholly or partially dependent upon the earnings of the deceased person, damages on that basis. On the latter basis previously to 1912 there were no reported cases where suitors had recovered damages in respect of fatal injuries unless they had been able to show that the deceased person was actually earning an income some or all of which was devoted to the maintenance or help or support of the suitor. But in the case of Taff Vale Railway v. Jenkins (1) a considerable advance was made. There the facts were that a girl aged sixteen was living with her parents and used to go from the place where her parents lived to another place by train. In the latter place she was apprenticed to a firm of drapers and dressmakers and was learning the business of dress making. She was unfortunately killed in a railway accident in the train when either going to or coming back from the place of her work, and a suit was brought by her father for himself and her mother under Lord Campbell's Act (Fatal Accidents Act) for damages for the loss of the girl. There was evidence that she was an unusually intelligent girl, and though she was still an apprentice, she was shortly to emerge from her apprenticeship; and there was evidence that she had prospects of beginning before long to earn a remuneration which might quickly have become substantial. There was further evidence that she came to her parents' house at night and that from time to time she gave them some assistance in the house; and in the view of Viscount Haldane, L. C., there was certainly material on which the jury might think that she might have given some assistance in the shop which her mother kept which was a greengrocer's shop and the father was beginning to fail somewhat in health; he was at all events, not os robust as in his younger days, and the jury might reasonably have taken the view that the amount of assistance which she would have given at home to the parents would have been considerable and also that she might have carried on her own business as a dressmaker and earned some money. Their Lordships refused to speculate with regard to the damages holding that that was the function of the jury and upheld the jury's assessment of the damages at £75. The present case of course is a stronger case because there is evidence that this little boy was actually earning some money. Rupees 6 a month is what his mother, the rsepondent here, states he was receiving. He was 12 years of age and although there is no evidence that he contributed any part of that very small monthly sum towards the support of his mother that is probably absent because it did not strike anybody that such evidence as that is of considerable importance in a case like this—it is not wrong to think that the learned trial Judge might reasonably have supposed that he was in the habit of contributing either the whole of that amount or some portion of it towards the support of his mother who was unemployed.

Then again, being 12 years of age and earning that amount of money at that age, it is reasonable to suppose that his wages would have increased as he became older. It is of course impossible to say for how many years he would have remained single and assisted his mother nor how long his mother who was aged sixty at the time of the trial would live. The learned trial Judge has awarded Rs. 600 damages, and in my view, the damages awarded were not excessive. Rupees 6 a month is Rs. 72 a year and as I have before stated those wages would be likely to increase later on. For these reasons, I am of opinion, that not only was the negligent allegation fully made out but that the damages awarded, namely Rs. 600, were quite reasonable.

Therefore, this appeal must be dismissed, and, as there is no appearance for the respondent, without costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree.

Section 213, Succession Act, does not apply to wills made by Hindus of the Punjab and relating to immovable property situate in the Punjab. The legatee can therefore claim rights under the will without probate.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated April 9, 1930.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Parkash Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The dispute in this second appeal relates to the occupancy rights of one Mohin Singh, who was sentenced to death on a charge of murder. Before the sentence was carried out he made a will in jail bequeathing the occupancy rights in dispute in favour of the appellants. The respondents, however, who are also distant relations of Mohin Singh, or claimed to be so, took possession of the occupancy rights. The learned District Judge has held that the will was executed by Mohin Singh and that if it be given effect to, the appellants would be entitled to succeed; but he was of opinion that s. 213, Succession Act, precluded him from giving effect to the will and consequently, setting aside the decree of the trial Court in favour of the appellants, has dismissed the suit. On this appeal the only question raised is whether under s. 213, Succession Act, it was necessary for the appellants to take out probate of the will or letters of administration with the will attached before establishing their right as legatees under the will. Now s. 213 provides that :

" No right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction in British India has granted probate of the will under which the right is claimed, or has granted letters of administration with the will or with a copy of an authenticated copy of the will annexed."

In cl. (2) of this section, however, it is provided that it shall not apply in the case of wills made by Muhammadans, and shall only apply in the case of wills made by any Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain where such wills are of the classes mentioned in cls. (a) and (b), s. 57. Clause (a), s. 57, relates to wills and codicils made by any Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or

Jain, on or after the first day of September, 1870, within the territories which at the said date were subject to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal or within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Judicature at Madras and Bombay. The will in question was made in Gurdaspur and relates to property which is situated in Gurdaspur. It is obvious, therefore, that it is not covered by cl. (a), s. 57. Clause (b) of that section concerns wills and codicils made by persons belonging to the abovementioned religions made outside the territories and limits mentioned in cl. (a), but so far as they relate to immovable property situate within those territories or limits. Therefore, this second clause will cover wills executed by Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs or Jains which have been executed in the Punjab but relate to immovable property situate within the territories or limits specified in cl. (1). Section 213, therefore, does not apply to wills made by Hindus of the Punjab and relating to immovable property situate in the Punjab. The view of the learned District Judge, therefore, that no right under the will in question could be claimed or established by the plaintiff as a legatee in any Court of Justice, is based on an erroneous interpretation of s. 213, Succession Act, and Mr. Parkash Chandar, Counsel for the respondents had ultimately to concede that this is so.

I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the trial Judge with costs throughout.

Will—Construction—"I give my niece all my personal property and effects", meaning of—Words, if sufficient to constitute her residuary legatee of the personality of deceased—Bequest void under s. 118, Succession Act—Bequest, if would fall into residue—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), ss. 102, 103, 118.

The testatrix, after devising certain immovable property to Bishop F bequeathed also to the Bishop certain personal property of which she was possessed. The will then proceeded; "I give and bequeath to my niece Mrs. B of Insein two plots of land near the A. B. M. School, for her sole use and benefit. I also give to my niece Mrs. B all my personal property and effects";

Held, that the will must be construed as a whole. Prima facie the words "I give all my personal property and effects" were sufficient to constitute Mrs. B a residuary legatee of the personalty of the deceased within s 102, Succession Act, and hence prima facie under s. 103, Mrs. B was entitled to all the personal property belonging to the testatrix at the time of her death of which she had not made any other testamentary disposition which was capable of taking effect. The bequest to Bishop F was void under s. 118 of the Act. The bequest of personality to Bishop F would therefore fall into the residue of which Mrs. B was the legatee.

Held, also that there was nothing to be found within the four corners of the will, to justify the Court in arriving at a conclusion that the testatrix, who gave all her personal property to Mrs. B intended thereby that Mrs. B should only receive a specific legacy of personal property and effects exclusive of the personal property bequeathed to Bishop F, and that in no event should the personality which formed the subject-matter of the legacy to Bishop F fall into the residue. Cambridge v Rous (1), Blight v. Hartnoll (2) and In re Bagot (3), referred to.

F. C. A. from the judgment in Civil Regular No. 481 of 1933.

Mr. Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sutherland, Darwood and S. R. Das, for the Respondents.

Page, C. J.—This Appeal must be allowed. The sole question that falls for determination is what is the true construction of the following words in the will of one Mrs. A. Nicholas: "I also give to my niece Mrs. Bess O'Donoghue all my personal property and effects"?

Now, the will must be construed as a whole, and the testatrix, who died within a few hours of executing her will on March 12, 1933, after devising certain immovable property to Bishop Falliere, Lord Bishop of Mandalay, bequeathed also to Bishop Falliere certain personal property of which she was possessed. The will then proceeds:

"I give and bequeath to my niece Mrs. Bess O'Donoghue of Insein two plots of land near the A.B.M. School, Myingyan, for her sole use and benefit. I also give to my niece Mrs. Bess O'Donoghue all my personal property and effects."

Prima facie the words "I give all my personal property and effects" are sufficient to constitute Mrs. O'Donoghue a residuary legatee of the personalty of the deceased within s. 102, Succession Act. It follows therefore prima facie that under s. 103, Mrs. O'Donoghue is entitled to all the personal property belonging to the testatrix at the time of her death of which she had not made any other testamentary disposition which was capable of taking effect.

Now, all the parties concerned in this will are agreed that the bequest to Bishop Falliere was void under s. 118 of the Act. The bequest of personality to Bishop Falliere will therefore fall into the residue of which Mrs. O'Donoghue is the legatee. On behalf of the respondents, however, it is contended that upon a true construction of the will all that Mrs. O'Donoghue obtained under the bequest of "all my personal property and effects' were the wearing apparel and furniture of the deceased. In my opinion there is no ground or justification for so limiting these words. It is further contended that under the words "all my personal property and effects" Mrs. O'Donoghue did not become a residuary legatee of the personalty, but acquired a specific legacy, namely, of such personal property and effects as were not included in the bequest of personalty to Bishop Falliere. In my opinion, having regard to the settled law for the construction of wills, such a construction is unsustainable. As long ago as 1802 in Cambridge v. Rous (1), at p. 25*, Sir William Grant, M. R. laid down the law upon this subject in terms from which the Courts have never departed. His Lordship observed:

"it has been long settled that a residuary bequest of personal estate, (for it is otherwise as to real) carries, not only everything not disposed of, but everything that in the event turns out not to be disposed of; not in consequence of any direct or expressed intention: for it may be argued in all cases that particular legacies are separated from the residue, and that the testator does not mean that the residuary legatee should take what is given from him; no, for he does not contemplate the case, the residuary legatee is to take only what is left: but that does not prevent the right of the residuary legatee. A presumption arises for the residuary legatee against everyone except the particular legatee. The testator is supposed to give it away from the residuary legatee only for the sake of the particular legatee. In case of lapse of real estate the heir at law takes; but in the case of personal property legat e is preferred eith-r to the next of kin or the executor".

In Blight v. Hartnoll (2), Mrs. Blight by her will bequeathed all her personal property to her sister Christiana Hartnoll with the exception of a certain debt and a leasehold wharf near Woolwich. It appears that Mrs. Blight had settled the wharf upon certain trusts, and in the events that happened, the appointment of the wharf under the settlement was held to be void. The question then arose as to whether the wharf fell into the residue created by the words "all my personal property" in the will. It was held that it did. Fry, J., in the course of his judgment observed:

"I take the rule to be plain that in general the residuary gift carries every lapsed legacy and every legacy which on any ground fails to take effect, but that is subject to this other rule that, if the testator has shown some intention with regard to the excepted property inconsistent with its ever falling again into the residue, effect must be given to that intention."

In In re Bagot (3), at p. 351*, Kekewich, J., stated that:

"One must bear this in mind, that there is a great difference between the view from which one approaches any specific gift and the view from which one approaches a residuary gift for the purposes of construction In order to ascertain what is given, or whether any particular thing is well given, by a specific gift, you must look to see whether that particular item is included The question is, whether it is included or not; but once given a residuary gift large enough in its lanuage to comprehend residue, the question is not what is included, but what is excluded; and you must find words sufficiently large, sufficiently definite, sufficiently distinct, to enable you to say that some item is excluded so that, to use the language of one of the authorities, what, hitherto has purported to be residuary gift, is reduced to the level of a specific gift, and ceases to be a residuary gift"

Lindley, L. J., in giving judgment dismissing the appeal in that case, pointed out that:

"to exclude a particular portion of the personal estate of a testator, not otherwise disposed of by his will from a bequest of his residuary personal estate it is necessary to find an intention not to include that portion even if it is his. If such an intention can be found, effect must of course be given to it, and an intestacy will then necessarily be the consequence."

And A. L. Smith, L. J., added:

"A general residuary gift of personalty in a will sweeps up, and is intended to sweep up, all personal property of which the testator may die possessed which from any cause may happen not to be otherwise effectually disposed of; and, in my judgment, all such property falls into the general residue, unless an intention is apparent in the will that it is not under any circumstances to do so"

Now, applying this rule of construction to the terms of the present will, it is common ground that the words under consideration are wide enough to constitute a residuary gift of the personalty. It follows, therefore, that this residuary gift will not be construed as a specific legacy of the personalty other than that which had been bequeathed to Bishop Falliere, unless upon a true construction of the terms of the will it is clear that it was the intention of the testatrix that the bequest of personalty to Bishop Falliere should not be merely for the benefit of Bishop Falliere, but that the subject-matter of the legacy to Bishop Falliere should be excluded in any event and whether the bequest to Bishop Falliere was valid or not, from the gift of "all my personal property and effects" to Mrs. O'Donoghue. If the Court is not satisfied that such was the intention of the testarix, it will follow that the voic legacy of personalty to Bishop Falliere will fall into the residuary gift to Mrs. O'Donoghue.

There is nothing in my opinion, to be found within the four corners of the will, and I do not take into account for this purpose the oral or documentary evidence adduced at the trial, to justify the Court in arriving at a conclusion that the testatrix, who gave all her personal property to Mrs. O'Donoghue, intended thereby that Mrs. O'Donoghue should only receive a specific legacy of personal property and effects exclusive of the personal property bequeathed to Bishop Falliere, and that in no event should the personalty which formed the subject-matter of the legacy to Bishop Falliere fall into the residue. For these reasons, in my opinion, the appeal must be allowed, the decree from which the appeal is brought set aside, and letters of administration with the will annexed issued to the appellant Mr. O'Donoghue on the usual terms.

As regards costs we think that inasmuch as the respondents both at the trial and on appeal were all in the same interest, one set of costs should suffice, and we award to the respondents as their costs at the trial sixty gold mohurs and ten gold mohurs in the appeal. We award the appellant sixty gold mohurs as her costs of the trial and ten gold mohurs as costs in the appeal. All these costs will come out of the estate.

Bombay Cotton Contracts Act (XIV of 1922)—Bye-laws under—Forward delivery contracts—Parties not members of East India Cotton Association—Contract, if governed by the Act.

The Bombay Cotton Contract Act, and the bye-laws made thereunder do not apply to any contract in cotton of forward delivery entered into in Bombay between parties who are not members of the East India Cotton Association, either expressly or impliedly, and consequently such contracts, even though entered by word of mouth, are valid.

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Mirza.

Messrs. Lalji Gokaldas and B. J. Desai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jamshed Kanga and C. K. Daphtary, for the Respondents.

Rangnekar, J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mirza, J., by which the learned Judge passed a decree against the appellant in a suit brought by the respondents to recover the balance due at the foot of an account in respect of various transactions in cotton, linseed, wheat, etc., subsisting between them. Various defences were taken in the lower Court but they are all now given up, and the only question which is raised on this appeal is whether certain forward transactions in cotton are valid and binding on the defendant and whether he is liable in respect of those transactions to the plaintiffs. The learned Judge held that he was. The issue in respect of these transactions is in these terms:

"Whether defendant is liable in respect of forward transactions in cotton inasmuch as they are not in accordance with the provision of the Bombay Cotton Act."

It is common ground that the plaintiffs and the defendant were not, at all material times, members of the East India Cotton Association and that the plaintiffs acted as pacca adatias for the defendant in respect of these transactions. The contracts in question were verbal. The argument on behalf of the defendant is that even if the parties are not members of the East India Cotton Association all contracts in cotton for forward delivery, if they are to be performed in Bombay must be entered into and carried out in accordance with the provisions of the Bombay Cotton Contracts Act, 1922. The simple question, as far as I can see, which arises in this appeal is whether the Bombay Cotton Contracts Act and the bye-laws made thereunder will govern a forward delivery contract entered into between parties neither of whom is a member of the East India Cotton Association. The same question arose before me when I was sitting on the original side in Shantilal v. Keval Ram, Original Civil Jurisdiction Suit No. 349 of 1929 decided on August 5, 1931. It was then conceded that there was nothing in the language of the Act nor in that of any of the bye-laws which expressly prohibited a contract of this nature between persons neither of whom was a member of the East India Cotton Association. This is also conceded by Mr. Lalji for the appellant in this appeal.

It was argued in that suit that having regard to the provisions in the Act including the preamble and the provisions of s. 2 of the Act and bye-laws 136, 139, 80, 81 and 82, contracts to deal in cotton between persons who are not members of the Association were void. In particular it was emphasised that bye-law 139 required that all contracts as defined under the Act must necessarily pass through the clearing house which must lead to the conclusion that contracts between persons who are not members of the Association were void. The question there was whether the Act took away the power of a person to do business in cotton as he liked and did the Act prohibit cotton contracts between non-members and I held it did not. I also held that there was nothing in the bye-laws which prohibited any such contract. I there traced the history of the East India Cotton Association and considered the scheme of the Act and the various bye-laws and came to the conclusion that the bye-laws did not apply to any contract in cotton of forward delivery between parties who were not members of the East India Cotton Association either expressly or impliedly and that a contract in cotton to be carried out in Bombay between parties neither of whom was a member of the East India Cotton Association was not prohibited either expressly or impliedly. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the reasons which I have set forth in my judgment in that suit. All I need state is that the view I then took was not challenged in appeal from the rest of the judgment and I still adhere to that view.

Mr. Lalji tried to distinguish the nature of the question then raised from that raised by him in this appeal. I am unable to see any distinction and the issue in that case —which the Advocate-General has just read over to us—leaves no doubt on the point and is identical with that which was raised before Mirza, J., in this case. Mr. Lalji says that any contract which is not in accordance with the bye-laws made under the Act by the East India Cotton Association is void. That of course, as far as it goes is correct. Then he says that the bye-laws deal with the formation and performance of the contract. He admits that there is no bye-law which prohibits the formation of a contract of this nature between non-members, but he says that as there are bye-laws relating to the performance of the contract and as all contracts in cotton which are to be carried out in Bombay must be carried out in accordance with these bye-laws it must follow that the Act and the bye-laws govern contracts between non-members. It is difficult to follow this somewhat curious argument, but if I am right in holding that the Act and the bye-laws do not govern contracts between parties neither of whom is a member of the East India Cotton Association; then it is difficult to see how the bye-laws as to peformance only in such a case would apply to such a contract. One has only to look at one or two important bye-laws to ascertain whether the view I am taking is right or not. It is clear from the terms of bye-law No. 80 that it can only apply to the members of the Association. It is equally clear from the terms of bye-law No. 82 that it applies to contracts between a member and a non-member. But there is not a single bye-law which deals with or lays down the procedure both as regards the formation and performance of the contract between parties, both of whom are not members of the East India Cotton Association. One other point is taken by Mr. Lalji that some of the transactions in the suit would be governed by the Bombay Cotton Contracts Act, IV of 1922. In the first place no issue was raised in the trial Court about this, and there is no clear evidence before us as to whether any transactions were entered into after this Act came into force. But as Mr. Lalji finally conceded that even as to any such contracts the argument would be the same the point need not be pursued further. I think, therefore, the learned Judge came to the right conclusion and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Beaumont, C. J.—I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. In my view the matter can be disposed of on a very simple ground. These contracts in suit are verbal contracts for the purchase or sale of cotton in Bombay and the contention of Mr. Lalji for the appellant is that the contracts although made between persons neither of whom are members of the East India Cotton Association are void because it is not expressly provided that they are to be subject to the bye-laws of the Association. Now if the view of my learned brother is right—and I do not dissent from that view—that the bye-laws do not apply to contract between non-members, the appeal necessarily fails. But if that view is wrong and the bye-laws do apply to the contracts in suit then it seems to me that these bye-laws become part of the general law applicable to the contracts and these contracts have to be carried out with due regard to those bye-laws. But it is not necessary to express that provision in the contracts as every contract must be carried out according to the law applicable to it and the omission to mention in it that the same is subject to the bye-laws would not in any way invalidate it. Therefore it seems to me that whether or not the bye-laws apply to contracts between non-members, Mr. Lalji's attack upon the contracts based on the omission of a provision that they are to be carried out in accordance with the bye-laws fails. There is no provision in the Bombay Cotton Contracts Act making such a provision in the contract essential. I think on that ground the appeal fails.

A suit was brought by A who described himself in the plaint as proprietor of the firm A-B. B was then dead and had left a widow but she was not made a party to the suit. The defendants raised no objection as to non-joinder and the issues between the parties were settled on March 12, 1932. The case was fixed for evidence on May 25, 1932. On that date the defendants raised an objection to the effect that A was not competent to sue alone without impleading the widow of B as a party. A thereupon, made a statement to the effect that on the death of B he became the sole owner of the firm A-B. It was held that the interest of B's widow had not passed to A at the time of the institution of the suit and that he was, therefore, not competent to sue in his own name. The suit was, therefore, dismissed. On appeal the District Judge held that the objection as to non-joinder no having been raised before the issues were settled, it should be deemed to have been waived and should not have been allowed to be taken subsequently. The Judge also expressed the opinion that the suit was in substance on behalf of the firm A-B and that the heading of the plaint could be treated merely as a misdescription. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by one Durga Prashad who described himself in the plaint as the proprietor of the firm Durga Parshad Nathu Mal. Nathu Mal was then dead and had left a widow but she was not made a party to the suit. The defendants raised no objection as to non-joinder and the issues between the parties were settled on March 12, 1932. The case was fixed for evidence on May 25, 1932. On that date the defendants raised an objection to the effect that Durga Parshad was not competent to sue alone without impleading the widow of Nathu Mal as a party; Durga Parshad, thereupon, made a statement to the effect that on the death of Nathu Mal he became the sole owner of the firm Durga Parshad Nathu Mal. The following issue was then framed by the trial Court:—

"Was the plaintiff the sole owner of the firm Durga Parshad-Nathu Mal at the time of the institution of the suit and has he therefore a locus standi to sue in his own name?"

It was held that the interest of Nathu Mal's widow had not passed to Durga Parshad at the time of the institution of the suit and that he was, therefore, not competent to sue in his own name. The suit was, therefore, dismissed. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the objection as to non-joinder not having been raised before the issues were settled it should be deemed to have been waived, and should not have been allowed to be taken subsequently. The learned Judge also expressed the opinion that the suit was in substance on behalf of the firm Durga Parshad-Nathu Mal and that the heading of the plaint could be treated merely as a misdescription. The appeal was, therefore, accepted and the case was remanded for a decision on the merits. The defendants have filed a second appeal to this Court.

Now, O. I, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that all objections on the ground of non-joinder or mis-joinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived. It is admitted that in this case the ground of objection had not arisen subsequently because Nathu Mal had died before the institution of the suit. In Kale Khan v. Sewa Ram (1), a Full Bench of the Chief Court held that if the objection as to non-joinder is not made in time the defendant cannot take it afterwards either before or after judgment. The learned Counsel for the Appellants referred to Vyankatesh Oil Mill Co. v. N. V. Velmahomed (2) in support of his contention that the objection was not as to non-joinder but as to the very constitution of the suit. In that case the plaintiff brought a suit in the name of a firm which carried on business outside British India and a preliminary issue, to the effect whether the plaintiff was entitled to sue in the name of the firm, was decided in the negative whereupon he sought to amend the plaint by striking out his name and inserting the names of the individual partners. It was held that the suit was brought by an entity which had no legal existence in the eye of the Indian Law and therefore the amendment could not be treated as an amendment following upon a mere misdescription but must be treated as an application for the substitution as plaintiffs of the individual persons who composed the entity which the law did not recognise. It is clear that this case has no bearing on the present case where the objection was the widow of the Nathu Mal was a necessary party to the suit.

It is also urged that the trial Court having used its discretion and allowed the objection as to non-joinder being raised after the settlement of issues, the Appellate Court should not interfere with that discretion. Reference was made in this connection to Sabhanadri Appa Rao v. Parthasarathi Appa Rao (3), but the facts of that case were peculiar. Such waiver as there was in that case resulted from the guardian of a minor defendant having failed to raise the ground of non-joinder in his first written statement. Subsequently the minor attained majority and the Court allowed him to file a new written statement. It was held that the waiver if any was not for the benefit of the minor and he was not bound by it. It was also remarked that if the minor had not come of age during the pendency of the suit and the suit had ended against him he could, on becoming a major, impeach the judgment on the ground of his guardian's negligence. If the defect was brought to the notice of the Court in proper time it was within its competence to rectify it and put it beyond the power of the party to impugn the judgment later on. The present case clearly falls within the purview of O. I, r. 13, and I am of opinion that the objection which was not raised before the settlement of issues should not have been allowed to be raised subsequently.

This finding is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. I would, however, remark in passing that in view of the clear statement of the plaintiff on June 18, 1932, that he was the sole owner of the firm Durga Parshad-Nathu Mal at the time of the institution of the suit, it cannot be said that the suit was in substance one on behalf of the firm. I am further of opinion that if a suit is not brought in the name of a firm all the partners should be impleaded as laid down in Hari Singh v. Karam Chand-Kanshi Ram (4). I, however, dismiss the appeal on the finding that the objection as to non-joinder must be deemed to have been waived in this case. The respondent's costs will be paid by the appellants.

Order XXI, r. 5 3 (1) (b) (ii), Civil Procedure Code does not mean that when the holder of the decree sought to be executed makes such an application, the attached decree ceases to be an attached decree; it only means that a period is provided by the rule up to which a stay of execution is to be arranged by the Court to which notice is sent to enable the holder of the decree sought to be executed to make application for execution of the attached decree. The rule relates not to the date of cessation of the attachment but only to the manner in which the attachment is to be effected.

W obtained a decree against S. A had a decree against W and in execution of that decree he got attached W's decree against S. Mr. Chiranjiv Lal Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fakir Chand and Chandar Gupta, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—On July 29, 1924, Uma Dat-Hans Raj obtained a decree against Sundar Das-Vir Bhan for Rs. 4,593-12-0 which, after an unsuccessful appeal by the judgment-debtors to the High Court, had grown to Rs. 5,244.

The firm Sewa Ram-Amar Nath had a decree against Uma Dat-Hans Raj and on April 6, 1927, in execution of that decree they got attached Uma Dat-Hans Raj's decree of July 29, 1924, against Sundar Das-Vir Bhan.

On July 19, 1928, the application of Sewa Ram-Amar Nath to execute this attached decree was dismissed in default.

On January 10, 1930, Uma Dat-Hans Raj assigned their decree of July 29, 1924, to Bishen Das for Rs. 1,000.

On September 6, 1930, Sundar Das-Vir Bhan paid Rs. 680 out of Court to Sewa Ram-Amar Nath on account of the decree of July 29, 1924, which Uma Dat-Hans Raj had obtained against Sundar Das-Vir Bhan and which Sewa Ram-Amar Nath had attached in execution of their decree against Uma Dat-Hans Raj.

On April 13, 1931, Bishen Das, the assignee of the decree of July 29, 1924, applied to execute that decree against Sundar Das-Vir Bhan who pleaded that they had satisfied the decree by the payment which they had made out of Court on September 6, 1930, to Sewa Ram-Amar Nath.

The executing Court decided on June 17, 1932, that as the execution application of Sewa Ram Amar-Nath had been dismissed in default on July 19, 1928, prior to the payment which was made on September 6, 1930, out of Court by Sundar Das-Vir Bhan to Sewa Ram-Amar Nath, that payment had been made at a time when the decree of July 29, 1924, was no longer under attachment and that it did not, therefore, constitute a satisfaction of that decree and that it did not preclude Bishen Das as assignee of that decree from proceeding in execution against Sundar Das-Vir Bhan. Against this order, an appeal has been preferred here by Sundar Das-Vir Bhan and has been contested on behalf of Bishen Das.

In my opinion the appeal must succeed for the following reasons :—

The authority of Prem v. Muhammad Hahibullah, 24 Ind. Cas. 795 (1), and Rama Krishna Iyer v. Marigoundan (2), makes it quite clear that the attachment of the decree of July 29, 1924, which was made on April 6, 1927, did not cease on July 29, 1928, when the proceedings in execution of that attached decree were dismissed in default in the Court which had received notice under O. XXI, r. 53, from the Court which had passed the decree in favour of Sewa Ram-Amar Nath against Uma Dat-Hans Raj. There is no reason for not applying to the present case the principles laid down in these authorities to the effect that the attachment still subsisted, having been made by the order of the Court which passed the decree in favour of Sewa Ram-Amar Nath and not by order of the Court which passed the decree of July 29, 1924, and that the dismissal in default by the latter Court of the proceedings pending before it could not, therefore, cause a cessation of the attachment.

It was argued, however, before me on behalf of the respondent Bishan Das that the attachment ceased under O. XXI, r. 53 (1) (b) (ii), Civil Procedure Code, at the time when Sewa Ram-Amar Nath applied to execute the decree of July 29, 1924. This view, however, is not justified by the wording of the said rule which only lays down that the Court which receives notice from another Court should be requested to stay the execution of its decree unless and until the holder of the decree sought to be executed applies to the Court receiving such notice to execute the attached decree. This does not mean that when the holder of the decree sought to be executed makes such an application, the attached decree ceases to be an attached decree: it only means that a period is provided by the rule up to which a stay of execution is to be arranged by the Court to which notice is sent to enable the holder of the decree sought to be executed to make application for execution of the attached decree. In other words, the rule in question related not to the date of cessation of the attachment but only to the manner in which the attachment is to be effected. No such argument as above was put forward in, the two authorities above-mentioned, although, had it been a valid argument, it could have been urged in the circumstances of both these cases.

It was further contended on behalf of the respondent that the payment made by Sundar Das-Vir Bhan out of Court on September 6, 1930, was never certified to the executing Court and that it cannot, therefore, be taken notice of for the purposes of the execution. As against this, it is clear from the record that the judgment-creditor admitted during the proceedings before the Court below that he had received this amount and it does not appear that the limitation of ninety days provided by Art. 174 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to a certification by a decree-holder: see Sri Prakash Singh v. Allahabad Bank, Ltd. (3). In any case, this argument cannot be of any avail to the respondent for the simple reason that if the payment of September 6, 1930, did not have the effect of satisfying the decree of July 29, 1924, then it follows that the attachment of that decree did not cease on that date but continued in force after that date, because under O. XXI, r. 55, Civil Procedure Code, the attachment is deemed to be withdrawn only when the decree has been satisfied through the Court or when satisfaction has been certified to the Court. It would, therefore, follow that if there was satisfaction of the decree on September 6, 1930, there was no withdrawal of the attachment on that date and the attachment must still be subsisting, in which case it is Sewa Ram-Amar Nath who is the representative of Uma Dat-Hans Raj and entitled as such to execute the decree of July 29, 1924, in accordance with the provisions of O. XXI, r. 53 (3) and not the assignee Bishen Das whose assignment dates from January 10, 1930, whereas Sewa Ram-Amar Nath had become representative of Uma Dat-Hans Raj under the aforesaid rule on April 6, 1927.

For the above reasons, I find no force in the contentions which have been made before me on behalf of the respondent Bishen Das. I accept the appeal of Sundar Das-Vir Bhan and setting aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar, dated June 17, 1932. I dismiss the application of Bishen Das against Sundar Das-Vir Bhan and order him to pay their costs in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXV, r. 1—Security for costs—Order on application for security—Revision, whether lies—Order for security against pauper plaintiff—Permissibility.

Where a defendant put in a petition for security for costs at the earliest possible opportunity but the Court, instead of disposing of the petition at once, adjourned the petition along with the case and finally dismissed the petition on the ground that as the suit itself was ready for trial and the defendant had already incurred the costs, no useful purpose could be served by directing the plaintiff, to furnish security for costs:

Held, that the procedure adopted was calculated to defeat the entire object of petitions of this nature and as the Court acted with material irregularity in exercising its jurisdiction, the High Court had power to interfere and set aside the order of the lower Court Ramcoomar Coondoo v. Chunder Onti Mukerji (1), referred to.

There is no absolute rule of law that a pauper plaintiff cannot be asked to furnish security under O. XXV, r. 1, (3). If it is shown that a pauper plaintiff is a puppet in the hands of persons able to find security, it would not be improper to make an order for furnishing security for costs. Seshayyangar v. Jaunilvadin (2), Srinivasa Sastrigal v. Subramania Aiyar (3) *B. Though an order requiring security for costs is entirely a matter of discretion with which the High Court would not interfere in revision, the High Court can interfere where the lower Court has acted with material irregularity in exercising its jurisdiction.

C. R. P. under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevelly, dated July 15, 1933, and made in I. A. No. 1267 of 1932 in O. S. No. 517 of 1932.

Mr. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. N. A. Krishna Iyer, for the Respondent.

Judgment. This is a revision petition against the order of the District Munsif of Tinnevelly on I. A. No. 1267 of 1932 in O. S. No. 517 of 1932 refusing to order the plaintiff in the suit to furnish security for costs. The plaintiff sued for a sum of Rs. 2,569-6-6 alleged to have been deposited by her husband with the defendant under the pass-book dated February 5, 1929. It is alleged that this sum has been gifted to the plaintiff by her husband. The plaintiff was given leave to sue in forma pauperis. The plaint appears to have been filed on October 29, 1932, and issues were framed on November 3, 1932, and on that very day the petitioner (defendant) put in an application under O. XXV, r. 1 (3), Civil Procedure Code, for furnishing security. It was returned on November 4, 1932, and represented on November 5, 1932. I append below the B. Diary with regard to this, which is important. It will be seen that the case was adjourned on several dates and that on February 2, 1933, the Court called for the judgment in O. S. No. 11 of 1930 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Tuticorin and the judgment and decree in A. S. No. 17 of 1931 filed against that judgment. The petition was then adjourned to February 17, 1933. On February 17, 1933, it was adjournd to March 8, 1933, and on that day it was adjourned with the suit to April 7, 1933. On April 7, 1933, the suit was adjourned to June 13, 1933, and on that day, it was adjourned to June 24, 1933, as both sides were not ready. On June 24, 1933, it was adjourned to July 15, 1933, and on that day the District Munsif passed the following order :

"The suit itself is ready for trial, defendant has already incurred the costs No useful purpose could be served by directing plaintiff to furnish security for costs at this stage Petition dismissed. No costs."

It will be seen that the defendant put in this petition for security at the earliest possible opportunity and he has been diligent throughout in his prosecution. But the Court adopted an entirely wrong procedure after March 8, 1933, in adjourning the petition with the suit and this went on until July 15, 1933, the date of the order when it proceeded to dismiss the petition on the ground that the suit itself was ready for trial that the defendant had already incurred the costs, and that no useful purpose could be served by directing plaintiff to furnish security at that stage. This procedure was really calculated to defeat the whole object of the petition and the reason which the District Munsif gave for dismissing it, if correct, is due to the situation which was entirely of the Court's making. In Ramcoomar Coondoo v. Chunder Onti Mukerji (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed :

"It is ordinary practice, if the plaintiff is suing for another, to require security for costs, and to stay the proceedings until it is given."

Although the District Munsif had sufficient material from which he could have formed a judgment as to the merits of the petition, he did not in fact dispose of the petition on merits at all. He dismissed it, as I observed above, on account of the alleged situation which, if correct, was entirely the Court's own making. There is no absolute rule that a pauper plaintiff cannot be asked to furnish security under O. XXV, r. 1 (3). In Seshayyangar v. Jainulavadin (2) (a decision of the Bench) it was laid down

"If it were shown that the paupers were mere creatures in the hands of persons well able to find security, the order would not be improper."

Pandia Thevar (5). It is necessary, therefore, in considering whether this petition should have been allowed, to look at the circumstances under which the suit was filed. The defendant in the present suit had brought a suit against the plaintiff's husband to recover a sum of Rs. 1,575 odd. The defendant's husband in that case said that he had on the very day of the alleged deposit in the present case, namely, February 5, 1929, paid a sum of Rs. 1,000 to the defendant out of a sum which he had realised in the execution of two decrees. He also produced a receipt for this sum. It was found that the receipt was not genuine, and the fund out of which the alleged payment was made non-existent. This finding was confirmed on appeal. Admittedly, the suit sum said to have been deposited that day from the same fund has been made over as a gift by the plaintiff's husband to the plaintiff and the allegation in the petition praying for security is that she is a mere puppet in the hands of her husband and that as the husband does not wish to pay the Government stamp duty nor to be mulcted with costs in case he fails, he has put forward the plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis. These facts are fully set out in the petition asking for security. The plaintiff in her counter-affidavit admitted that she had no property of any kind and that she had no means of furnishing security. As regards the specific facts set out in the petition about O. S. No. 11 of 1930 and A. S. No. 17 of 1931, the plaintiff simply says that the facts contained in paras. 5 to 8 are not true; she does not specifically challenge any particular fact therein stated. In my opinion, these circumstances are sufficient to show that she is bringing this suit for her husband and not bona fide on her own behalf.

The only question that then remains is whether this Court can interfere with the order as having been passed without jurisdiction or in irregular exercise of its jurisdiction. There is no doubt that, generally, an order requiring security under this section is entirely a matter of discretion with which the High Court would not interfere. But the present case is very peculiar because the learned District Munsif, instead of disposing of the application at once on its merits, adopted the wholly unjustifiable course of adjourning it together with the case, thereby defeating the very object of the petition and finally dealt with it not on its merits but, as I said before, dismissed it for something which, if true, is not the fault of the petitioner but is entirely due to the position created by the action of the Court itself. I consider this an irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. It has been suggested that the petition should be sent back for disposal on the merits. But all the facts are before me. They are matters of documentary record and from the petition and the counter-affidavit and from the Court having sent for the records in O. S. No. 11 and A. S. No. 17, it is clear that the lower Court itself knew of the evidence and, therefore, it will not be advisable if it be asked to pass an order on it and this course would cause further delay. Under these circumstances I will dispose of the matter myself. I think that the plaintiff should have been asked to furnish security for costs of the suit. The order of the lower Court is set aside and the plaintiff is hereby ordered to furnish security for costs in the sum of Rs. 200 to the satisfaction of the lower Court within one month from the date of receipt of this order. Otherwise her suit will stand dismissed with costs. The petition is allowed with costs in both Courts.

Patents and Designs Act (II of 1911), ss. 43, 53—Registration of design—Design should be new and original and not of a pre-existing common type—Suit for damages for infringement—Defence that design was not new or original—Legality of.

No registration under s. 43 of the Patents and Designs Act is effective, unless the design or configuration sought to be protected is new and original and not of a pre-existing common type. Consequently in a suit for damages for infringement of the plaintiff's design, the defendant can raise the plea that the registered design of the plaintiff was not new and original Ram Sahai v. Angnor (1), followed.

F. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated July 17, 1933.

Mr. Jagan Nath Talwar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Lal Anand, II, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—On November 21, 1932, the plaintiff-appellant, a tassel maker of Lahore, instituted a suit against the defendant for recovery of Rs. 100 as damages for contravention and infringement of his design under s. 53, Patents and Designs Act, 1911. The learned District Judge held that the plaintiff's design was neither new nor original, and that it had been established by the evidence produced by the defendant that this design had been published and manufactured in India for several years before the plaintiff registered his design. On these findings the suit of the plaintiff was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court.

The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that once a design had been registered, it was not open to the defendant to urge that there was nothing new or original in the plaintiff's design. It was suggested that it was open to the defendant to present a petition for the cancellation of the registration of the design to the High Court on the ground that the design had been published in British India prior to the date of registration or that the design was not a new or original design. It was maintained that in the absence of such a petition by the defendant he could not be allowed to raise in defence a plea that the design was neither new nor original. In my opinion this contention has no force. Reference may be made in this connection to a Division Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in Ram Sahai v Angnor (1), wherein it was laid down that:

"No registration under s. 43, Patents and Designs Act, is effective unless the design or configuration sought to be protected is new and original and not of a pre-existing common type."

In that case also the owner of the registered design was the plaintiff, and the defendant was allowed to raise the plea that the registered design was not new and original.

It was next urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the defendant had not succeeded in establishing that the design in question had been manufactured in British India before the registration. The defendant has produced five witnesses on this point, and I agree with the learned District Judge that there is no reason why implicit reliance should not be placed on the statements of Mohammad Ashraf, D. W. No. 2, Mohammad Din D. W. No. 3, and Allah Ditta, D. W. No. 5. In view of this evidence I hold it established that the tassels of the design manufactured by the plaintiff were being sold in Lahore by other dealers for several years before the design in favour of the plaintiff was registered.

No other point was raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant and I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 77 (3), 5, 6, 8—Dispute as to validity of attachment of occupancy rights of judgment-debtor — Jurisdiction of civil Court to determine nature of occupancy rights.

Where the dispute between the parties is one in execution proceedings and is as to whether occupancy rights of the judgment-debtor fall under s. 5 or s. 6 or 8, Punjab Tenancy Act and are attachable or not, it is not covered by s. 77 (3) of the Act and is, therefore, cognizable by a civil Court.

C. R. P. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala, dated April 24, 1931.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul for Mr. S. C. Chatterji, for the Petitioner.

Order.—This petition for revision has arisen out of execution proceedings. A decree for Rs. 364-4-0 was passed in favour of the petitioner, and he attached occupancy rights in a certain piece of land belonging to the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor presented an application on June 9, 1930, stating that he was not an occupancy tenant under s. 5, Punjab Tenancy Act, and that as his occupancy rights fell under the other sections of that Act, they could not be attached and sold in execution of the decree. Reliance was placed on his behalf on s. 56. The executing Court held that, as the judgment-debtor had not proved himself to be an occupancy tenant under s. 6 or 8, Punjab Tenancy Act, it must be held that he was an occupancy tenant under s. 5 and that therefore the occupancy rights in question were liable to be sold in execution of the decree of the petitioner. Against this order the judgment-debtor preferred an appeal to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. The lower Appellate Court held that the dispute or matter directly in issue in these execution proceedings was determinable by a Revenue Court only. He therefore accepted the appeal of the judgment-debtor and directed the decree-holder to institute

"a sort of inter-pleader suit in a Revenue Court for a declaration of the nature of the tenancy."

Against this order the decree-holder has presented the present petition for revision. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has observed that only a Revenue Court can determine whether certain occupancy rights fall under s. 5, Punjab Tenancy Act, or whether they must be held to fall under s. 6 or 8. Reliance was placed on s. 77 (3), Punjab Tenancy Act, in this connection. Section 77 (3) lays down that

"the following suits shall be instituted in and heard and determined by Revenue Courts, and no other Courts shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter with respect to which any suit might be instituted."

Thereafter the nature of the suits which can be taken cognizance of by Revenue Courts only is indicated in sub-cls. (a) to (p), cl. (3), s. 77. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has not indicated within the purview of which of the sub-clauses the present dispute between the parties falls. The opening words of cl. (3), s. 77 can only come into operation if the matter in dispute falls within the purview of any of the sub-cls. (a) to (p). I am of the opinion that the dispute between the parties is not one which is covered by the provisions of s. 77 (3). For the foregoing reasons I accept this petition for revision, set aside the judgment of the Senior Subordinate Judge, dated April 24, 1931, and remand the case to him under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, for re-decision of the appeal preferred to him by the judgment-debtor in accordance with law. The respondent was served, but no appearance has been put in by or on his behalf. The respondent shall pay the costs of the petitioner in this Court.

Appeal—Credibility of witness depending on his demeanour—Appellate Court, when can come to different conclusion from that of trial Court—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 87, 25—Abandonment, question of—If one of fact—Inference from facts as to existence of abandonment, whether a question of law—S. 87, if exhaustive — Breach of implied condition — Whether a ground for ejecting occupancy raiyat.

When a Court has got to deal with a pure question of credibility of witnesses, great weight ought necessarily to be given to the judgment of the Judge, who saw the witnesses But there may be other circumstances and facts, quite apart from manner and demeanour, which may show whether a statement can be believed or not. These circumstances and facts may justify the Appellate Court in differing from the trial Court even on a question of fact, turning on the question of credibility of witnesses whom the Appellate Court has not seen. [p. 322, col. 2.]

The question as to whether there has been abandonment of the land by the raiyat, is largely and principally a question of fact depending upon a number of circumstances to be proved in each case. But the inference from the facts found, as to whether there was abandonment or not is a question of law. Aswini Kumar v. Har Kumar (5), followed. [p. 323, col. 1.]

Section 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, is not exhaustive and there might be abandonment apart from the provisions of that section. Even if there be no abandonment within the meaning of s. 87, an inference of abandonment apart from the provisions of that section would be legitimate, if it is proved that the entire holding has been transferred and that the transferees have been put in possession of the whole holding. Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (6), explained Baikuntha Chandra Nag v. Chandra Nath Bandhopadhya (8) and Abdul Majid Bhuiya v. Ali Mia (9), relied on. Ram Lal Mandar v. Kuldip Narayan Tewari (10), referred to.

It is, however, open to doubt whether, in view of the express provisions laid down in s. 25, Bengal Tenancy Act, the breach of an implied condition would be a ground for ejecting an occupancy raiyat.

C. A. from appellate decree of the Second Sub-Judge, Midnapore, dated February 24, 1931.

Mr. Ramaprasad Mukherji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kshiteendranath Basu, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of an occupancy holding on the allegation that it has been abandoned by the recorded tenant. The case for the plaintiff as alleged in the plaint is that defendant No. 3 was the original occupancy raiyat in respect of the land in suit, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are now in possession of this entire holding on the basis of purchase, and that defendant No. 3 is not in possession of any portion of the holding. It is on these allegations that the plaintiff wanted khas possession of the land. Defendant No. 1, who contested the suit, resisted the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the original tenant, that is defendant No. 3, was still in possession of a portion of the land, that there was not a transfer of the entire holding, inasmuch as the purchase of defendant No. 2 was only a benami purchase and was for the benefit of defendant No. 3. Defendant Nos. 2 and 3 did not appear and contest the plaintiff's claim. The trial Court held that defendant No. 3 was in possession of a portion of the holding and that defendant No. 3 never repudiated his liability to pay rent. The trial Court was further of opinion that the sale, at which defendant No. 2 purchased, was a collusive affair. In this view of the matter, the trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim for khas possession. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court has held that the entire holding has been transferred and that defendant No. 3 is not in possession of any portion of the holding. On these findings the lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the entire holding had been abandoned by the original tenant. In the result, the lower Appellate Court has decreed the plaintiff's suit. Hence the present appeal by defendant No. 1.

The first contention of Mr. Mukerji, appearing on behalf of the appellant, is that the finding of the lower Appellate Court about defendant No. 3's possession is not a proper finding, inasmuch as, reversing the finding of the trial Court, the learned Judge has overlooked the principle, that when the question arises as to whether one witness should be believed rather than another and that question turns on the demeanour of witnesses in the witness-box, it requires circumstances of exceptional character to justify a Court of appeal in coming to a different conclusion. It is urged by the learned Advocate that the trial Court, in view of the demeanour of the plaintiff's gomasta in the witness box, disbelieved him and believed the evidence of defendant No. 1, as the latter appeared to him to have deposed in a very straightforward manner. It is contended that the lower Appellate Court, however, in believing the plaintiff's gomasta and in disbelieving defendant No. 1 has not at all taken into consideration the impression which these witnesses made on the trial Court by their demeanour in the witness-box. There can be no doubt that when a Court has got to deal with a pure question of credibility of witnesses, great weight ought necessarily to be given to the judgment of the Judge, who saw the witnesses. But there may be other circumstances and facts, quite apart from manner and demeanour, which may show whether a statement can be believed or not. These circumstances and facts may justify the Appellate Court in differing from the trial Court even on a question of fact turning on the question of credibility of witnesses whom the Appellate Court has not seen: see Coghlan v. Cumberland (1). It appears that the lower Appellate Court disbelieved the evidence of defendant No. 1 about the residence of defendant No. 3 on a portion of the holding, mainly relying upon the Record of Rights, which shows that there is no homestead land in the holding. The lower Appellate Court also relied upon another circumstance, namely, that, in the written statement, the story about the residence of defendant No. 3 on a portion of the holding was not specifically mentioned. There is, therefore, no substance in this contention.

It is next urged by the learned Advocate in support of the appeal that the facts found by the lower Appellate Court do not amount to abandonment and consequently the plaintiff is not entitled to khas possession. It may be pointed out, at the outset, that there is no finding in this case that there has been repudiation by defendant No. 3. It has not found also that there has been any abandonment within the meaning of s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the suit only on the ground that the holding has been abandoned by the original raiyat. Now the question is whether this finding can be challenged in second appeal. There can be no doubt that the question, as to whether there has been abandonment of the land by the raiyat, is largely and principally a question of fact depending upon a number of circumstances to be proved in each case: see Manohar Lal v. Ananta Moyee Dassee (2), and Moharunidi v. Asmat (3). It is no doubt true that Mitter, J., observed in the case of Aminaddin Sheikh v. Chandranath Sen (4), that the question of abandonment is a question of fact and that the finding about abandonment is binding in second appeal. But, in the case of Aswini Kumar v. Har Kumar (5), a Division Bench of this Court has observed that the inference from the facts found, as to whether there was abandonment or not, is a question of law. In view of the decision of this Court, I am not prepared to dismiss this appeal on the ground that it is concluded by finding of fact.

The next question for determination then is whether the facts found by the lower Appellate Court amount to an abandonment in law. In the case of Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (6), the propositions laid down by the Full Bench are in these terms:

"Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy."

It has been found that, in this case, there has been a transfer of the entire holding. Consequently, the landlord is ordinarily entitled to enter on the land. Mr. Mukerji, on the authority of the decision in the case of Romesh Chandra Mitra v. Daiba Charan Das (7), however, contends that the use of the word "ordinarily" in the proposition laid down by the Full Bench indicates that:

"the circumstances mentioned in each branch are being regarded as evidence of, or as importing reference to some higher, more precise or more ultimate test."

His further contention is that this ultimate test must be the same in both the branches of the proposition. It is clear from the second part of the proposition that the ultimate test is (a) an abandonment within the meaning of s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. But the question as to whether that is also the ultimate test in the first branch of the proposition is not free from difficulty. The first branch of the proposition laid down by the Full Bench does not expressly state what the ultimate test is. Prior to Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Roy (6), it was settled, on good authority, that s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, did not prescribe the only mode in which the holding could be abandoned. It is not very clear whether the decision in Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Rao (6), affects these decisions prior to the decision of that case. In the absence of any clear indication in the judgment of the Full Bench, I am not prepared to say that the view, which was taken by this Court prior to the decision of the Full Bench, namely, that there might be abandonment apart from s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, must be taken now as wrong. I am fortified in this view of the matter by two recent decisions of this Court, viz., Baikuntha Chandra Nag v. Chandra Nath Bandhopadhya (8) and Abdul Majid Bhaiya v. Ali Mia (9). In the last mentioned case, Suhrawardy, J., refrained from using the word "abandonment" and used the word "relinquishment". In that case the holding in question contained some undivided parcels of land and therefore could not be considered as a holding as contemplated by the Bengal Tenancy Act before the amendment of 1928. Consequently, the question was whether the landlord is entitled to re-enter when the whole of this tenancy was transferred, though it was not a holding within the meaning of s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judges held that the landlord was entitled to re-enter. It was observed in that case that s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, was not exhaustive and that there might be abandonment apart from the provisions of that section. The decision was based on two grounds, namely, (1) that the right of the landlord to re-enter, when his land remained unoccupied or is in the occupation of a trespasser (the transferee of a non-transferable tenancy is a trespasser), is a right which is conferred upon the landlord under the general law, and (2) that the transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding is the breach of an implied condition of a tenancy, namely, that the tenant would have no right to transfer and consequently on account of this breach of the implied condition the landlord is entitled to eject. It is, however, open to doubt whether, in view of the express provisions laid down in s. 25, Bengal Tenancy Act, the breach of an implied condition would be a ground for ejecting an occupancy raiyat. Ejectment for breach of an implied condition has always been limited to cases where there had been estoppel by record or where had been an attempt by the tenant to assert a title paramount to the landlord either in himself or in a third person. [See Romesh Chandra Mitra v. Daiba Charan Das (7)]. In fact, if that was the intention of the legislature that, apart from the provisions of s. 25, Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord would have the right to eject an occupancy raiyat for breach of an implied condition, the legislature would have said so expressly.

As pointed out above, in view of the above decisions of the Division Bench of this Court, I am not prepared to say that the ultimate test in the first branch of the proposition laid down by the Full Bench is restricted only to an abandonment within the meaning of s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is no doubt arguable that, in view of the ultimate test indicated in the second branch of the proposition laid down by the Full Bench, it is no longer open to contend that the ultimate test would be different, so far as the first branch of the proposition is concerned. But, as already observed, in view of the recent decisions of this Court, I am not prepared to hold that there cannot be an abandonment apart from the provisions of s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act. What then are the facts, which must be proved to show that there had been an abandonment apart from the provisions of s. 87? In the case of Ram Lal Mandar v. Kuldip Narayan Tewari (10), Dawson Miller, C. J., observed as follows:

"I agree that, apart from s. 87, Bengal Tenancy Act, there may be an abandonment of a holding but I consider that in such a case it must be proved either that the tenant has transferred his whole interest in the property and ceased to take any further interest therein, as for example, by a sale of the whole property or that he has abandoned the right to re-take possession in future or has either left the village without any intention of returning or done some other act which would clearly indicate that he no longer retained the spes recuperandi."

Again in the case of Prosonna Kumar De v. Ananda Chandra Bhattacharjee, 93 Ind. Cas. 86 (11), a Division Bench of this Court has made the following observation:

"It is not necessary to prove as a fact that the holding has been abandoned but it is a direct inference from the fact that the entire holding was sold and possession given to the predecessor."

In other words, even if there be no abandonment within the meaning of s. 87, an inference of abandoment apart from the provisions of that section would be legitimate, if it is proved that the entire holding has been transferred and that the transferees have been put in possession of the whole holding. This view can be supported on the principle that, after the entire holding has been transferred and the transferee has been put into possession, it becomes the khas land of the zemindar and the zemindar is, therefore, entitled to re-enter. See Pran Krishna Saha v. Mukta Sundari Dassya, 21 Ind. Cas. 544 (12).

Now, from the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, it is clear that the original defendant No. 3 is no longer in possession of any portion of the holding and that the entire holding has been transferred. In these circumstances, the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the holding had been abandoned by the original raiyat before the institution of the suit.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

SHIROMANI GURDWARA PARBANDHAK COMMITTEE AND OTHERS—OBJECTORS—RESPONDENTS

Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), ss. 18 (1) (e), 5—Presumption under, when arises—Religious Endowment—Shrine—Surplus income, if belongs to pujari—Petition under s. 5, if can be maintained by benamidar—Benami.

Where the oral evidence on the question as to whether the money came from the Gurdwara is unconvincing and unreliable and there is evidence that the family of the mahant has ancestral land, a share of which was given to the mahant and the mahant could have been given gifts of money and these would certainly not be the property of the Gurdwara of which he was the mahant, it is clear that he had other sources of income and there is no evidence worth considering that the money was supplied from Gurdwara income, there is no presumption under s. 18 (1) (e) of the Sikh Gurdwara Act.

In order to bring themselves within the presumption arising from s. 18 (1) (e) of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, the Gurdwara have to prove that the acquisition of the right, title or interest in question was made with funds proved to have belonged to the Gurdwara.

In cases where there is no deed of endowment of lands, or where it is ambiguous, usage is relevant evidence to determine whether lands and the offerings were after their acquisition endowed entirely for the temple or were only burdened with the actual expenses thereof, the surplus being held by the pujari for his own benefit. Kumaraswami Asari v. Lakshmana Goundan (4), applied.

An action can be maintained in the name of the benamidar in respect of property, though the beneficial owner was not a party to it, the latter being fully affected by the rule of res judicata. In fact the question whether the property is held benami by any one arises only between the real owner and a benamidar and though consideration moved from the real owner, he can still give a complete title to the benamidar and the benamidar is entitled to possession as against every one, except the real owner.

Messrs. Achhru Ram and Mohan Sunder Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Charan Singh and Bhagat Singh, for the Respondents.

Addison, J.—Puran Das, minor son of Narain Das, formerly mahant of the Janam Asthan Gurdwara at Nankana Sahib put in a petition under s. 5 of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act through his mother Musammat Lachmi claiming that he was the owner of a house situated in Ram Gali at Lahore by purchase of a site thereof on April 19, 1917, by a registered deed from one Shankar Das for Rs. 2,700 and by subsequent erection of a building thereon at the petitioner's expense. The property had been included in the usual consolidated list as being the property of the institution. The case for the objector Gurdwara was that the property was purchased and built by Mahant Narain Das out of the Gurdwara funds and that, therefore, there was a presumption under s. 18 (1) (e) of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, that the property belonged to the Gurdwara. It was stated before the Tribunal on behalf of Mahant Narain Das that he did not claim this property as his and that it belonged to his son. The only issue framed was, whether the property in dispute is the property of the Gurdwara Janam Asthan? The President said in his judgment:

"It is obvious that the main and in fact the sole question in the case is, whether the purchase of the house on April 19, 1917, was or was not a benami transaction and whether the real vendee was the petitioner Puran Das or his father Mahant Narain Das. If the transaction was benami and if Mahant Narain Das was the real vendee, then the petition of Puran Das must clearly be dismissed on the ground that he is not the real owner of the right claimed by him in his petition. If, on the other hand, the transaction was not a benami transaction and the real vendee was Puran Das, then Puran Das is entitled to a declaration in his favour as prayed by him against the Gurdwara. In either case it is immaterial and unnecessary to inquire from what source Narain Das, if he was the real purchaser, obtained the funds for the purchase and subsequent erection of the building. Whether he used Gurdwara funds or funds of his own private pocket, the result of the case will be the same, as in either event the petitioner would fail on the ground that the transaction was benami."

The learned President then went on to find that the objector Gurdwara had not been able to give direct evidence that Narain Das supplied the sum of Rs. 2,700 with which the site was purchased, but on the strength of a document, Ex. O. 1, he held it proved that he supplied the funds for the construction of the building. He further said that it was improbable, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that the Mahant would have furnished the funds for constructing the house, if he were not also the purchaser of the site. Finally he held, for the reasons given, that Mahant Narain Das, having provided the money, must be held to be the true owner and that the purchase was only benami in the name of his minor son Puran Das. He gave no finding on the question, whether the funds were the Mahant's private funds or Gurdwara funds. One member of the Tribunal, Sardar Kharak Singh, held that the property was purchased and built with Gurdwara funds. The third member, Lala Dwarka Prasad, held that the objector Gurdwara had failed to prove that the property was purchased and built with Gurdwara funds, but he agreed with the learned President in dismissing the petition of the minor Puran Das on the ground that he had no right to the property as he was only a benamidar. The decision of the Tribunal, therefore, was that the petition of Puran Das be dismissed. He has appealed against this decision.

In my judgment the Tribunal was wrong in dismissing the petition on the ground that Puran Das could not maintain it as he was only a benamidar. This question came before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gur Narayan v. Sheolal Singh (1). They held that an action could be maintained in the name of the benamidar in respect of property, though the beneficial owner was not a party to it, the latter being fully affected by the rule of res judicata. In fact the question whether the property is held benami by any one arises only between the real owner and a benamidar, and though consideration moved from the real owner, he can still give a complete title to the benamidar and the benamidar is entitled to possession as against every one, except the real owner. The Tribunal, therefore, was not right in holding that Puran Das had no right, title or interest in the property on their finding that he was a benamidar. He had title against all the world, except the real owner, and it therefore, remained for the Gurdwara objector to prove the issue framed for trial, the onus of which was placed on them, namely, whether the property in dispute is the property of the Gurdwara Janam Asthan?

In my opinion the Gurdwara has failed to prove that the property belongs to it. And in order to bring themselves within the presumption arising from s. 18 (1) (e) of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act they have to prove that the acquisition of the right, title or interest in question was made with funds proved to have belonged to the Gurdwara. Ex. O. 1 does appear to establish that the money spent for constructing the building was spent by Mahant Narain Das. It is not necessary to discuss at length the possession of a mahant in respect of the surplus income of his institution. It was held in Prem Singh v. Labh Singh (2) that the mahant of a religious institution is not bound to submit accounts for the information or approval of the worshippers at the shrine unless it is proved by evidence that it is the custom and practice of the institution for him to do so. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Aiyar (3) held that the endowments of a Hindu mutt are not conveyed in trust, nor is the head of the mutt a trustee with regard to them, save as to any specific property proved to be vested in the head for a specific and definite object. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Kumaraswamy Asari v. Lakshmana Goundan (4) held that in cases where there is no deed of endowment of lands, as in this case, or where it is ambiguous, usage is relevant evidence to determine whether lands and the offerings were after their acquisition endowed entirely for the temple or were only burdened with the actual expenses thereof, the surplus being held by the pujari or his own benefit. It was further held that a trust, whether express or implied, by which a portion of the income from the trust property is directed for the purposes of a public temple and the surplus for the beneficial use of its pujari was not illegal. There is no evidence in the present case as to the usage of the institution in respect of the surplus income of the Gurdwara property. I agree with Lala Dwarka Parshad, one of the members of the Tribunal, that the best evidence on point, whether the property was purchased and built with Gurdwara funds, would have been the account books of the Gurdwara, which the objector Gurdwara did not produce. At one stage apparently they intended to produce these accounts (see their list of documents printed at pp. 34-35). When the mahant was driven out by the Akalis, all these books came into their hands and some explanation should have been given why they were not produced. It ought to have been clear from them whether the income came from Gurdwara funds or not. In their absence it must be presumed that the money did not come from the surplus income of the Gurdwara.

The oral evidence is unconvincing and unreliable on this question, but one thing is proved, namely that mahant Narain Das only went to this Gurdwara in 1914. Before that he had been living with his family in Bhai Pheru and and there is evidence that the family has ancestral land, a share of which went to the mahant. Apart from that the mahant could have been given gifts of money and these would certainly not be the property of the Gurdwara of which he was the mahant. It is clear that he had other sources of income, and there is no evidence worth considering that the money was supplied from Gurdwara income. There is thus no presumption under s. 18 (1) (e) of the Act and it must be held that the Janam Asthan Gurdwara has not proved that the property in dispute belonged to it. This they had to do in order to succeed in the present case.

For the reasons given I would accept the appeal with costs throughout and grant the petitioner Puran Das a decree

Mr. S. Nagaraja Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. V. Sundaresa Iyer, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The execution proceedings in this case have had a curious and interesting history. The defendant died soon after the passing of the decree. Ignorant of this fact, the plaintiff filed the first four execution petitions against the dead judgment-debtor. The fifth petition he filed, bringing a wrong person on the record as the debtor's representative. The present petition is the sixth one, filed against the same wrong representative; but the plaintiff amended it after the expiry of the 12 year period prescribed by s. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, by bringing the right representative on the record. The lower Court's finding, which is not contested, is that the plaintiff throughout acted bona fide.

On these facts, three questions arise:

(1) Are the first four petitions against the dead judgment-debtor steps in aid of execution within Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act?

(2) Is the fifth petition against the wrong representative a step in-aid of execution?

(3) Does the amendment of the sixth (i. e., the present) petition beyond the period provided by the law, relate back to the date when it was originally presented?

The first point.—There is a preponderance of authority in favour of the view that, when owing to a bona fide error the execution petition names the deceased judgment-debtor as the person against whom execution is sought, it is sufficient to save limitation. In Samia Pillai v. Chockalinga Chettiar (1) a Bench of this Court came to that conclusion. In Bepin Behari Mitter v. Bibi Zohra (2), the learned Judges, dissenting from Madho Prasad v. Kesho Prasad (3) and following Samia Pillai v. Chockalinga Chettiar (1), held that an execution application filed bona fide against a dead person, though it cannot be acted upon, is nevertheless a step-in-aid of execution, which has the effect of saving the decree from being barred. The Patna High Court in Sheogobind Ram v. Kishunbasi Kuar (4), and the Lahore High Court in Maula Bakhsh v. Mohamad Ikram (5), took the same view. In two recent Madras cases although the point did not directly arise, Samia Pillai v. Chockalinga Chettiar (1), was cited with approval: Parakkat Devaswam v. Venkatachallam Vadhyar (6) and Viriyala Jaganatha Rao v. Viriyala Narayenamurty (7). But in an unreported decision in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 185 of 1902 a Bench of this Court, without discussing the point or considering the authorities, took the opposite view and Wallace, J. in Parakkat Devaswon v. Venkatachallam Vadhyar (6), has rightly, in my opinion, refused to follow it. I, therefore, hold that the first four execution petitions, each of them filed within the time prescribed by the law, though they were not such as they themselves could be acted upon, had nevertheless the effect of saving the decree from becoming barred.

The second point.—Where a petition for execution was filed bona fide against a wrong legal representative of the judgment-debtor, it was held that in spite of the mistake, it would still be an application to take a step-in-aid of the execution: Balkishendas v. Bedmati Koer (8). The decision was referred to with approval in Bepin Behari Mitter v. Bibi Zohra (2), already mentioned. The same view was taken in Ramaswami Chetti v. Oppillammani Chetti (9), Begam Bibi v. Bulaki Shah and Sons (10) and Hari Mahadev Vedakar v Vishnu Balakrishna Risbud (11). I, therefore, hold that the fifth execution petition filed in time, although against a wrong representative, has the effect of keeping the decree alive.

The third point.—An amendment made under sub-s. (1) of O. XXI, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, with the sanction of the Court, relates back to the original presentation of the petition: that is the effect of sub-cl. (2).

In Vemuri Pitchayya v. Raja Yarlagadda Ankineedu (12), an application for execution was presented within the 12 years allowed by s. 48 of the Code; but no schedule of immovable property belonging to the judgment-debtor was attached to it. The defect was later remedied under an order of Court but at a time when the 12 years had expired. The learned Judges held, dissenting from the view of the Calcutta High Court, that the amendment related back to the date of the original petition. Sankaran Nair v. Ambu (13), is not an authority to the contrary; the case merely decided that where the lower Court declined to pass a remedial order under O. XXI, r. 17 (1), there was no refusal of jurisdiction and the High Court was not bound to interfere in revision. The case more in point is Manakkal Maheshwaran Nambudripad v. Thiruvazhiyot Valappa Menon (14). There, in the original petition the name of the wrong representative was given. The Court allowed the amendment and the correct name was substituted more than 12 years after the passing of the decree. The amendment was held to relate back to the original presentation. In Venkatalakshmamma v. Garikipati Seshagiri (15), the plaintiff obtained a decree against one R. on February 29, 1912. The execution petition in question was filed on February 18, 1924, against the debtor who the judgment states, must be presumed to have died by then. On July 5, 1925 an application was made to permit the substitution, in the place of the deceased debtor, of his widow and the amendment was allowed. The execution petition was treated as being in time by the learned Judges (see pp. 637 and 647*). The view of the Patna High Court is in conformity with these decisions: Sheogobind Ram v. Kishunbasi Kuer (4). I, therefore, hold that the amendment takes effect from the date of the original presentation and that the execution petition in question is not barred by time.

The lower Court's order is accordingly confirmed and the Civil Revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Inherent lacuna on the record on all important points—Appellate Court should remit case to the trial Court for further enquiry.

Where, on almost every important point, there is an inherent lacuna on the record and it is not possible to come to a satisfactory finding on the question in issue, the only proper course for the Court of Appeal is to remit the case to the trial Court for further enquiry under O.XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code.

F. C. A. from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ferozepore, dated October 31, 1923.

Mr. Faqir Chand for Mr. Badri Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. L. Kapur, for the Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—After hearing Counsel and carefully examining the record I find that the suits, which have given rise to this and connected appeals, Civil Appeals Nos. 290 and 291 of 1929, have been tried very perfunctorily and it is not possible to come to a proper decision on the materials on the record.

The admitted facts are that on August 22, 1917, Lachhman Singh, (father of Ujagar Singh, respondent in Civil Appeal No. 289, Saudagar Singh, respondent, in Civil Appeal No. 290, and Ranjit Singh, respondent in Civil Appeal No. 291), executed two bonds (Exs. P-2 and P-3) for Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 4,965 in favour of Roda Singh, plaintiff-appellant No. 1 and his brother Sundar Singh plaintiff-appellant No. 2, respectively. It was recited in Ex. P-2 that Rs. 5,000 was due by the executant, Lachhman Singh, and Sundar Singh plaintiff No. 2 jointly to one Mehtab Mal, having borrowed from the latter "to deposit the pre-emption money relating to the land in Mauza Lakhe Bhede," that Roda Singh had taken upon himself to pay the entire amount above-mentioned to Mehtab Mal, and therefore Lachhman Singh held himself bound to pay to Roda Singh Rs. 5,000 with interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem with yearly rests. Similarly in the other bond (Ex. P-3) it was stated that Rs. 4,965 was due by Lachhman Singh and Sundar Singh jointly to Mehtab Mal, having been borrowed from him to pre-empt land in the same village, that Sundar Singh had taken upon himself to pay the whole sum to Mehtab Mal, and that therefore, Lachhman Singh owed to Sundar Singh, Rs. 4,965 for which he executed this bond, agreeing to re-pay it with interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem, compound interest with yearly rests. On May 27, 1924, the amount due by Lachhman Singh on foot of the aforesaid bonds (Exs. P-2 and P-3) was Rs. 13,500, but instead of Lachhman Singh re-paying it, or himself acknowledging the liability, his three sons, Ujagar Singh, Saudagar Singh and Ranjit Singh executed three bonds for Rs. 4,500 each, in favour of Roda Singh and Sundar Singh jointly, the consideration being the amount due by Lachhman Singh on foot of the two bonds dated August 22, 1917, (Exs. P-2 and P-3). The amount of each bond was payable on Nimani 1982 (June 1925) with interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem with yearly rests.

On these bonds three suits were instituted by Roda Singh and Sundar Singh on May 28, 1928, for recovery of Rs. 5,674 each. The defendant in each case pleaded that the suit was barred by time, that the bond had been executed under undue influence and, in any case, it was without consideration. The learned Subordinate Judge held the suits to be within time and found that the plea of undue influence had not been established. He, however, dismissed the suits holding the bonds to be without consideration, as under the law payment of a barred debt due, not by the executant, but by a third party was not good consideration under s. 25, Contract Act. The plaintiffs appeal.

On examining the records, I confess I have not been able to ascertain the real facts, and unless this is done, it is not possible to decide whether or not the consideration for the bonds in dispute was valid. The circumstances in which the original bonds (Exs. P-2 and P-3), came to be executed by Lachhman Singh in 1917 and also those which led to the execution of the bonds in suit in 1924 are by no means clear. It is most unfortunate that the learned Subordinate Judge did not examine the parties properly before framing the issues and neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants nor Lachhman Singh gave evidence at the trial. In the bonds of 1917, the consideration was stated to be payment of the amount borrowed from Mehtab Mal by Lachhman Singh and Sunder Singh jointly for acquisition of certain land by pre-emption, and it was recited that Roda Singh and Sunder Singh had undertaken to pay in its entirety the debt due to Mehtab Mal. Mehtab Mal was not summoned as a witness by either party and it is not clear whether this recital was true, either wholly or in part. Nor do we know whether any land was in fact acquired by pre-emption; whether Lachhman Singh had any share in it, whether his sons were joint with him in this transaction and whether it was in their possession jointly or severally (if at all) in 1924. We are equally in the dark as to whether the two plaintiffs, actually carried out their understanding given in Exs. P-2 and P-3 to pay off Mehtab Mal. Further, it is by no means clear why the defendants should have quietly executed the bonds in 1924, each for one-third the amount due by the father, without the latter undertaking any liability, jointly or severally with his sons.

It will thus be seen that on almost every important point there is an inherent lacuna on the record and it is not possible to come to a satisfactory finding on the question in issue.

In these circumstances the only proper course seems to me that the case be remitted to the trial Court for further inquiry under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code. The two plaintiffs, the three defendants, Lachhman Singh and Mehtab Mal must be summoned (at the plaintiff's expense) to give evidence: (1) as to the history of the acquisition of the land in Mouza Lakhe Bhede, stated to have been acquired by pre-emption, the person or persons by whom it was brought, the party from whom the consideration proceeded and in whose actual possession it has been since 1917; (2) as to whether Mehtab Mal had advanced any money for the purpose, whether it was repaid to him, and if so, when and by whom; (3) the circumstances in which the bonds Exs. P-2 and P-3, and the bonds in suit were executed in 1917 and 1924, respectively, and (4) whether Lachhman Singh and the defendants lived jointly. If possible, extracts from the revenue papers relating to the land in question be placed on the record, and the Patwari or Qanungo examined to explain them. If the parties desire to produce any other evidence to elucidate the above points, they should be allowed to do so. The return must be submitted in four months.

Din Muhammad, J.—I agree.

Mr J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants.

Sir Shadi Lal.—The question of law which arises in this appeal, is one of considerable importance and relates to the exact scope of the expression samanodaka as used in the Hindu Law of inheritance. The facts bearing upon the question do not admit of any dispute. The property, which is in dispute between the parties, belonged to one Manikrao who died in October 1916. The plaintiffs are descended in the male line from one Tulsingh, who was an ancestor of Manikrao in the 22nd degree. They claimed the estate on the ground that they were entitled to succeed to it as the agnates of the deceased in preference to the defendant, Atmaram, who was his father's sister's son. The trial Judge negatived their claim, but on appeal his judgment was reversed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces and Berar, who have held that the plaintiffs come within the purview of the term samanodaka and have priority over the defendant who, being only a bandhu, cannot succeed in the presence of an agnate, however, remotely the latter may be related to the deceased.

The heirs of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara School are (1) sapindas, (2) failing them, samanodakas, and (3) on the failure of both the above-mentioned classes, bandhu. The word sapinda includes blood relations to the 7th degree reckoned from, and including, the propositus; and it is obvious that the plaintiffs, who were related to the deceased Manikrao in the 22nd degree, are not his sapindas. They, however, claim to be samanodakas, and that class certainly includes all the agnates from the 8th to the 14th degree. But it is a debatable question whether agnates beyond the 14th degree come within the ambit of samanodakas for the purpose of succession. It is to be regretted that the plaintiffs, who are respondents in the appeal have not appeared to sustain their claim, but their Lordships have had the advantage of hearing the point fully and fairly argued by Mr. Parikh, and have themselves considered all that could reasonably be argued in support of the view taken by the Court of Appeal in India.

Now, the word samanodakas, literally translated, means persons connected by equal libations of water; but Vijnaneswara, the author of the Mitakshara, abandoned the ancient doctrine basing the right of inheritance upon the right to offer funeral oblations and founded it upon propinquity. After detailing the heirs coming within the class of sapindas he states, in Chap. II, s. 5, verse 6, the law relating to samanodakas in the terms:

"If there be none such, the succession devolves on samanodakas, and they must be understood to reach to seven degrees beyond sapindas, or else as far as the limits of knowledge as to birth and name extend. Accordingly Vrihad Manu says: "The relation of the sapindas ceases with the 7th person, and that of samanodakas extends to the 14th degree; or as some affirm, it reaches as far as the memory of birth and name extends. This is signified by gotra."

The conflict of opinion alluded to in the above passage is not mentioned either in the Manu Smriti or in the Yajnavalkya Smriti. In Chap. V, verse 60, Manu declares that sapinda relationship ceases with the 7th person and samanodaka relationship ends only when the origin and name are no longer known. That chapter, however, deals with social matters such as impurity on account of birth and death; and it is not clear whether the description of samanodaka adopted for prescribing rules in the domain of social observances was intended to define the word in its application to the law governing succession as stated in Chap. IX, verse 187. The word samanodaka is not mentioned in the Smriti of Yajnavalkya, who confers the right of inheritance upon gotraja (a person born in the same gotra, or a gentile), sloka 135, but gotraja was apparently intended to be used in the same sense as samanodaka in Manu Smriti. It was, however, recognized in course of time that the rule enunciated in the ancient texts, giving the right of inheritance to all agnates, however, remote and placing the cognates after them, was not in conformity with the feelings of the people; and Vijnaneswara, when writing his commentary Mitakshara on the Smriti of Yajnavalkya, probably found that a usage had grown up restricting the samanodaka relationship to the 14th degree. He accordingly refrained from endorsing the all-embracing rule of Yajnavalkya, and while mentioning it in the verse dealing with the subject, he gave prominence to the restricted scope of the word, and supported it by citing Brihad Manu. It must be remembered that the commentators, while professing to interpret the law as laid down in the Smritis, introduced changes in order to bring it into harmony with the usage followed by the people governed by the law; and that it is the opinion of the commentators which prevails in the provinces where their authority is recognized. As observed by this Board in Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (1), at p. 436*, the duty of a Judge

"is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the District with which he has to deal, and has there been sanctioned by usage For under the Hindu System of Law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law."

Indeed, the Mitakshara

"subordinates in more than one place the language of texts to custom and approved usage, Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (2), at page 370†."

It is, therefore, clear that in the event of a conflict between the ancient text writers and the commentators, the opinion of the latter must be accepted. Now, the words "as some affirm" used by Vrihad Manu in the extract quoted in the Mitakshara do not show that he himself was in favour of extending the meaning samanodakas to include agnates beyond the 14th degree. He merely cited the opinion which was expressed by other writers.

*Page of 12 M. I.—[Ed.]

†Page of 13 M. I. A.—[Ed.]

His own view is, however, contained in part 1 of the extract which confines the samanodaka relationship to agnates from the 8th to the 14th degree; and, the author of the Mitakshara seems to have adopted the same view. There is certainly no indication that he gave his sanction to the rival view.

The rule confining the word to agnates up to the 14th degree has the merit of avoiding uncertainty and is also in perfect harmony with the sentiments of the people. The opposite view would lead to the incongruous result that an agnate related in the 100th degree or even remoter degree would be preferred to a cognate who may be nearly related to the deceased by the tie of blood, such as the son of his sister or of his father's sister. The judgments of the High Courts in India reveal a divergence of judicial opinion. The High Court of Bombay in Bai Devkore v. Amritram Jamiatram (3), interpreted the word samanodaka to include all agnates without any limit of degree. This rule was sanctioned by Nilkantha, the author of Vyavahara Mayukha, whose authority is recognized in Gujrat. It appears that the case came from Gujrat, and that the learned Judges were influenced by the opinion of Nilkantha. The judgment in that case was followed by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Baran Rai v. Kamla Prasad (4), which was governed by the Mitakshara School. That view has, however, been dissented from by the Madras High Court, who in their judgment in Rama Rao v. Kuttiya Goundan (5), have pronounced against the extension of the samanodaka relationship beyond the 14th degree. Their Lordships have considered also several cases which contain dicta on the subject, but those dicta were not necessary for determining the dispute between the parties. In the judgment of this Board in Mewa Singh v. Basant Singh (6), there are observations to the effect that those who claim to be the reversionary heirs must bring themselves within the necessary number of degrees, namely, fourteen. The suit was, however, dismissed on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they were related to the person whose estate was claimed by them.

Upon an examination of the available texts of the Hindu Law, and the judicial decisions on the subject, their Lordships have reached the conclusion that according to the Mitakshara School of the Hindu Law, which governs this case, samanodakas include only those agnates whose relationship to the deceased extends from the 8th to the 14th degree, and in the absence of any such agnates the estate devolves upon his bandhus. The result is that the appeal should be allowed, the order of remand made by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner set aside, and the judgment and the decree of the Court of first instance restored. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The respondents must pay the costs incurred by the appellant here as well as in the Court of Appeal in India.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57—Default, meaning of—Failure to go on with application and proceed with sale—Whether constitutes default—Attachment, cessation of—Fresh application for execution—Competency of.

The word "default" used in O. XXI, r. 57, Civil Procedure Code, is not restricted to default of appearance, but means a failure to do what the decree-holder was bound to do, that is, to go on with his application and have the property sold and if a default took place, the attachment previous to that had come to an end on the decree-holder's application being struck off. In such cases any intermediate order passed by the Court becomes a nullity and the decree-holder can file a fresh application for execution. Dildar Husain v. Sheo Narain (1) and Fateh Din-Allah Ditta v. Qutab Din relied on.

C. R. P. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Montgomery, dated March 17, 1933.

Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Achhru Ram, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—A decree for Rs. 7,605 was passed in favour of one Datar Singh, who proceeded to execute it against the property of his judgment-debtor, Narain Singh. It appears that Narain Singh owed debts to other people and among them was a firm known as Khan Chand-Lakhu Ram, who held some of the lands of the judgment-debtor under mortgage. The decree-holder applied for execution and attached the lands of Narain Singh, including the mortgaged land. Khan Chand-Lakhu Ram objected to the attachment. On June 11, 1932, the Counsel for the decree-holder made a statement admitting the objections of Khan Chand-Lakhu Ram as well as of some other objectors and agreeing to the sale of the land subject to the mortgages. The executing Court passed an order on the same date to the effect that all the lands belonging to Narain Singh may be sold subject to the mortgages. No action could be taken on this order for sometime because the records had gone to the office of the Collector, and after several adjournments the Counsel of the decree-holder made another statement on October 15, 1932, asking that the execution application be consigned to the record room, but that the lands attached may continue under attachment, and an order to that effect was passed by the Court. On October 21, 1932, Datar Singh put in a fresh application for execution and got the lands which were not under mortgage attached. Khan Chand-Lakhu Ram, objected again and pleaded that in the face of the statement of the Counsel of the decree-holder dated June 11, 1932, and the order of the Court thereon, the decree-holder could not execute his decree except according to the terms agreed upon at the time. The Senior Subordinate Judge, Montgomery, held that the objection was correct and that unless the order dated June 11, 1932, is set aside by a regular suit brought by the decree-holder, it is binding on him. It was, therefore, ordered that the land of the judgment-debtor be sold subject to the mortgage of the objectors. The decree-holder has filed a petition for revision of this order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, dated March 17, 1933, through Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, whom I have heard. I have also heard Mr. Achhru Ram for the respondents.

The only point for decision is what is the effect of the admission dated June 11, 1932, and the order passed on it. The contention of Mr. R. C. Manchanda is that as the application for execution was dismissed on October 15, 1933, the proceedings in execution came to a close and any intermediate order passed, in the course of these proceedings, became a nullity and that a fresh application was competent and as the decree-holder had himself left out property that was under the mortgage of the objectors the latter could not raise any legitimate objection to the continuance of the fresh execution proceedings. In support of his argument he refers to a decision of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court, in Dildar Husain v. Sheo Narain (1), in which it was held that the word "default" used in O. XXI, r. 57, Civil Procedure Code, is not restricted to default of appearance, but means a failure to do what the decree-holder was bound to do, that is, to go on with his application and have the property sold and that if a default took place, the attachment previous to that had come to an end on the decree-holder's application being struck off. He goes on to say that the view expressed in the Allahabad case has been followed with approval in Fateh Din-Allah Ditta v. Qutab Din (2), a Division Bench authority of this Court. I think these authorities are in point and help the contention of the petitioner.

The proceedings in execution have been dismissed in default within the meaning of "default" as given in the authorities cited above. There is thus no order of the executing Court which is still effective against the decree-holder and he is free to file a fresh application for execution, without trying to get the interim order dated, June 11, 1932, set aside by a regular suit. Therefore, I accept this revision with costs and set aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, dated March 17, 1933. The interim order of this Court staying execution proceedings started by the decree holder is hereby cancelled, and the execution of the decree will now proceed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Original Civil Jurisdiction Suit No. 1265 of 1928

July 5, 1934

B. J. WADIA, J.

MAHOMED HUSSEIN HAJI GULAM MAHOMED AJAM—PLAINTIFF

AISHABAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS

Executor — Muhammadan executor — Probate, if essential — Wilful default—Onus—Nature of proof—Investing money in unauthorised investment—Liability for loss—Executrices to be paid out of property of deceased monthly in lieu of services—Payment, if gratuitous or debt — Muhammadan Law—Gift—Essentials to constitute gift—Mere book-entries in respect of money which is subject-matter of gift, if enough—Bequest to heir, when valid—Consent of other heirs, nature of.

There is no statutory obligation on a Muhammadan executor to take out probate of the testator's will. A Muhammadan executor can establish his right in a Court without taking such probater Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas Jivan (1) and Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (2), relied on. [p. 335, col. 2.]

The burden of proof of wilful default in respect of something which the executors could have received, but for their wilful default or neglect, is in the first place, always on the party who alleges the default. It is for that party not merely to give proof of such default, but to prove clearly and affirmatively at least one act of wilful default to the satisfaction of the Court before the Court can make a reference for take accounts on that footing. It must also be shown that the estate has suffered loss or damage, and that such loss or damage is due to circumstances of wilful neglect or default on the part of the executrices. In re Stevens; Cooke v. Stevens (3), referred to. [p. 336, col. 1.]

Any executor who invests the moneys belonging to the estate in an unauthorised or hazardous investment is liable for the loss arising therefrom, however prudent such an investment of his own money he might think it to be. [p. 337, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where under the will each of the two executrices was to be paid out of the property of the deceased Rs. 400 per mensem in lieu of their services, as long as the property is administered, after the death of the deceased;

Held, that the payment was a sort of commission payable to the executrices by way of remuneration. It was a gratuitous bequest and not a debt. This, however, was not a gift out of the future income of the estate, for the testator had clearly provided that the remuneration must be paid out of his property, meaning out of the corpus of the estate, and was, therefore, not a gift in futuro. [p. 339, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under the Muhammadan Law there must not only be a declaration by the donor of his intention to make the gift, but the subject of the gift must be accepted by and on behalf of the donee, and delivery of possession must be given to the donee in the manner which the subject of the gift is capable of. A relinquishment of control over the subject is necessary to complete the gift. Mere book-entries in respect of money which is the subject-matter of gift is not enough to support a gift. There must be some evidence to show that the donor relinquished his control over these moneys and divested himself completely of his beneficial interest therein, so that he could not have operated upon these sums if he wanted to. Hariram Serowagee v. Madan Gopal Bagla (4) and Musa Miya v. Kadar Bux (5), relied on. [p. 338, col. 2.]

Under Muhammadan Law a bequest to heirs can only be rendered valid by consent of the other heirs. Such consent need not be express. It may be implied by the unequivocal conduct of the other heirs. [p. 339, col. 1.]

Judgment.—This is a suit for the administration of the estate of one Haji Gulam Mahomed Ajam, who died in Bombay, on or about March 1, 1928, leaving him surviving as his only heirs, according to the Sunni Muhammadan Law by which he was governed, a widow, two sons and three daughters. He left a will in the Gujarathi writing, dated January 9, 1928, of which he appointed his widow and one of his daughters, being defendants Nos. 1 and 2, executrices. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, however, have not obtained probate of the will. The plaintiff and defendant No. 3 are the sons and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the two other daughters, of the deceased. He died possessed of properties, movable and immovable, of large value in Bombay, Rangoon, and other places in India. Some of his properties were equitably mortgaged to Mr. F. E. Dinshaw during his lifetime, and other properties were mortgaged in favour of the Central Bank of India, Ltd.

The suit was filed on June 19, 1928. On November 26, 1928, plaintiff took out a notice of motion for appointment of a Receiver of the estate, and lengthy affidavits were filed on either side. The notice of motion was dismissed, and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were allowed to continue in management of the estate as the executrices of the will of the deceased. Thereafter none of the defendants filed their written statements. Defendant No. 4 and her husband were residing at Mauritius. She came to Bombay with her husband some time about the end of 1929 and inspection of the books of account relating to the estate of the deceased was given to her.

It is alleged that full inspection has not been given, whereas defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have stated that defendant No. 4's Mehta attended at their Attorney's office from June 1, 1931, till February 27, 1932, for one hundred and ninety-eight days in all, and three to four hours per day, and full and free inspection was given of every book and paper that was asked for. The inspection was not completed, as the Mehta was dismissed. She filed her written statement in February 1933, and has charged defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with diverse breaches of trust, alleging that they have misapplied and wasted the estate of the deceased and made unauthorized investments and payments. A schedule giving the particulars of the alleged maladministration is annexed to the written statement. She accordingly prays for an account against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the footing of wilful default, and for the appointment of a Receiver of the estate of the deceased, except such portion thereof as is in the possession of the Central Bank of India, Ltd., with power to recover the income and profits thereof. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 put in their written statement only recently, as it was alleged on their behalf that certain negotiations were going on for an amicable settlement between the parties. An objection was taken to their written statement being taken on the file at this stage, but I thought that the executrices should be heard in their defence, and I ordered the written statement to be taken on the file. They allege that on March 31, 1926, the deceased made a gift of certain sums of money in favour of defendant No. 1 together aggregating Rs. 1,20,618-11-3. They further allege that he also made a gift of a sum of Rs. 21,487 on the same day in favour of two of the daughters, viz., defendants Nos. 2 and 5. They, therefore, contend that they and defendant No 5 are creditors of the estate for the said sums. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 admittedly took possession of the properties after the death of the deceased. They made no inventory of the properties, but are willing to tender an account of their management of the estate since the death of the deceased.

Some time after the death of the deceased suits were filed in this Court against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as executrices and other heirs of the deceased both by Mr. F. E. Dinshaw and the Central Bank of India, Ltd., to realize their mortgage securities. Mr. Dinshaw's claim has since been entirely paid off, and by an order of the Court, dated July 27, 1931, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were allowed to enter into a fresh mortgage in favour of the Bank. Pursuant to the order they created an equitable mortgage giving a first charge to the Bank on the immovable properties of the deceased in Bombay and two immovable properties in Mahableshwar to secure the repayment of the sum of Rs. 42,00,000 with interest at six and a half per cent. The mortgage is dated February 1, 1932, but even before that date, i. e., in or about September 1930, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had handed over the management of all the Bombay properties to the Bank.

It is alleged in their written statement that this was done with the consent of all the heirs. They continued to live in the family house known as "Chateau Ajam" at Narayan Dabholkar Road, Malabar Hill, but they offered to vacate after the Bank took over the management. Defendant No. 2, Havabai left the house about two years ago and went to live with her husband at Chakla. Defendant No. 1 continued to reside in that house but vacated in or about July-August 1933. Thereafter the Central Bank of India, Ltd., filed Suit No. 1914 of 1932, on the equitable mortgage in their favour, and by a consent order dated December 20, 1932, Mr. H. C. Captain, the Secretary of the Bank was appointed Receiver of the shares belonging to the estate and lying with the Bank with the powers mentioned therein, and the Bank agreed to pay to defendants No. 1 and 2 the sum of Rs. 400 per month for a period of three years beginning from July 1, 1932, in consideration of their assisting the Bank in the realization of the mortgaged propeties, and so long as they continued to act as executrices and observed the terms of the order. It is also provided in the will of the deceased that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should get Rs. 400 per month each after the death of the deceased, the words being "in lieu of their services as long as my property is administered." The will has not been admitted to probate, but there is no statutory obligation on a Muhammadan executor to take out probate of the testator's will. A Muhammadan executor can establish his right in a Court without taking such probate: see Mahomed Yusuf v. Hargovandas Jivan (1), following Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (2). The will was not admitted by the plaintiff. He refers to it in para. 3 of the plaint as an alleged writing purporting to be the will of the deceased, and evidence was led on behalf of the executrices to prove the wil in Court, and the will has been proved. There is, however, no dispute about its contents or its validity, as the testator has directed that his estate should be distributed according to the principles of the Sunni Muhammadan Law.

The main issues for the Court in this suit are, whether defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be ordered to account on the footing of wilful default, whether the deceased made the gifts as alleged by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and if so, whether the same are valid and binding. The onus of proving the gifts is on the alleged donees. The burden of proof of wilful default is, in the first place, always on the party who alleges the default. It is for defendant No. 4, not merely to give proof of such default, but to prove clearly and affirmatively at least one act of wilful default to the satisfaction of the Court before the Court can make a reference for taking accounts on that footing. It must also be shown that the estate has suffered loss or damage, and that such loss or damage is due to circumstances of wilful neglect or default on the part of the executrices. It has, however, been held that a debt i really the foundation of a decree on the footing of wilful default, and, if the debt is proved or admitted, the burden shifts to the executors to show why they have not got in it: see In re Stevens; Cooke v. Stevens (3). Wilful default can therefore only be decreed against executors in respect of something which the executors could have received but for their wilful default or neglect, and such default or neglect must be proved by the party alleging it.

Defendant No. 4 has given a list of the particulars of amounts misapplied by the executrices or taken for their own use and wrongly debited to the estate. It is annexed to her written statement. Before dealing with the same I may here mention that neither defendant No. 4 nor her husband nor any one on her behalf has given evidence in this case. The plaintiff has also not given any evidence, and though he does not allege any wilful default in his plaint, he seemed to make common cause with defendant No. 4 at the hearing. Counsel for defendant No. 4 has selected two items out of the particulars annexed to the written statement, one being a sum of about Rs. 30,000 which is described as "amount due by Ahmed Muhammad Saley Aloo of Rangoon in respect of outstandings of the deceased and rents and dividends recovered by him as the agent of the executrices at Rangoon and not accounted for."

The other item is a sum of Rs. 25,000 which is described as "amount advanced to Husseinbho A. Lalji, a friend of the executrices on personal security."

With regard to the first item of Rs. 30,000, it appears that Ahmed Muhammad Saley Aloo is the brother of defendant No. 2's husband, and as he was doing his own business at Rangoon, he was employed by the deceased to look after his immovable properties at Rangoon during his lifetime. He continued to manage for six or eight months after the death of the deceased, but as the executrices were not satisfied with his management, he was removed. The estate claimed from him a sum of about Rs. 28,000, but according to him the amount due was much less. His indebtedness was settled on his return from Rangoon to Rander (near Surat) in 1929 or 1930, and on September 8, 1930, he passed a promissory note for Rs. 25,000 in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. According to his brother's evidence he suffered great loss in his business, and has since been unable to re-pay the amount of the promissory note. Defendant No. 1 also stated that Ahmed Muhammad was living in very straitened circumstances at Rander. She said that she pressed him for re-payment, but he was unable to pay, and he wrote a letter to her and defendant No. 2 by post on September 10, 1931, acknowledging his liability for the said amount but praying that no suit may be filed against him in view of his present financial condition. It was argued that that letter was written on September 10, 1930, and the date was subsequently altered at the instance of the executrices in 1931 in order to show that the claim was not time-barred.

There would, in my opinion, be no meaning in passing a promissory note on September 8, and writing the letter immediately on the 10th. Further, for the purpose of saving limitation, there was nothing to prevent the executrices from taking another letter in order to extend the period of limitation. It is true that the debtor has not been called to give evidence, but I am not satisfied that the change in the date which is apparent was deliberately made for the purpose alleged. If the executors have a well-founded belief that any action taken against the debtor to the estate will be fruitless, they are entitled to withhold action, but the onus is on them to prove the grounds of their belief. Such grounds have been given both by defendant No. 1 as well as by defendant No. 2's husband who is the brother of the debtor, and I see no reason to disbelieve their testimony. Moreover, an executor has always a right to settle a debt due to the estate. It has therefore not been shown to my satisfaction that this sum has been lost under circumstances which make defendants Nos. 1 and 2 liable for wilful default. In any event the claim is not yet time-barred.

With regard to the second sum of Rs. 25,000, the promissory note that was passed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was not executed by Husseinbhoy A. Lalji, a friend of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as alleged, but by the firm of Abdullabhoy Lalji & Co., of which presumably Husseinbhoy A. Lalji is a partner. Moneys were advanced to their firm at six per cent. interest. Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 said that the whole amount has been recovered, the only outstanding dispute being over a small sum of about Rs. 50 for interest. No evidence was led as to any loss sustained by the estate, as there was some misunderstanding by which Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was led to believe that there was no dispute between the parties, about the principal amount having been recovered, and that the only dispute was as to the rate of interest charged to the debtors. Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 informed the Court that all the items of the sums recovered appeared either in the books of their Solicitors, or in the books of the firm of Abdullabhoy Lalji & Co., and that they were willing to produce the same whenever required. With regard to the rate of interest, it was argued on behalf of defendant No. 4 that the interest charged by Mr. F. E. Dinshaw as mortgagee was at first seven per cent. per annum and subsequently was raised to seven and a half per cent. The interest on the mortgage in favour of the Bank is also six and a half per cent. In either case the debt was secured. In this case the amount was lent on personal security at six per cent. per annum. The deceased, however, had several accounts with the Central Bank of India, Ltd., and in his overdraft account he only paid five and a half per cent. to the Bank up to his drawings to the extent of Rs. 20,00,000 and over that six per cent. per annum. I agree with Counsel for defendant No. 4 that the moneys of the estate should not have been lent by the executrices on personal security. Any executor who invests the moneys belonging to the estate in an unauthorized or hazardous investment is liable for the loss arising therefrom, however prudent such an investment of his own moneys he might think it to be.

There is, however, no loss to the estate in respect of this debt, and defendant No. 4 has not succeeded in proving that there was wilful default on the part of the executrices. All the other items in the list of particulars are generally instances of alleged acts of devastavit, and the executrices will have to render accounts of their management. In my opinion, wilful default has not been proved, and if sufficient proof is not given, the Court cannot order an inquiry as to liability based upon a supposed breach of default. It is of course open to the Court at any subsequent stage of the proceedings upon application by a party and on his showing that there is sufficient evidence of wilful default to direct that accounts may be taken on that footing. For the present there will be an order only for the usual and common accounts in an ordinary administration suit.

The next question relates to the gift in favour of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5, referred to in para. 11 of the written statement of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It is alleged that on March 31, 1926, the deceased gave as a gift to his wife, defendant No. 1, a sum of Rs. 1,20,618-11-3 made up of three different sums which are entered in the journal for 1925-26. These three sums have also been credited to account in the ledger for 1925-26. On the same day a sum of Rs. 21,487 was given as a gift to defendants Nos. 2 and 5. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have given evidence in relation to the gifts set up by them. Defendant No. 1 stated that her husband told her that he had given to her as a gift a sum of about Rs. 1,20,000 which was credited to her in his books. He said this about two years before he died, and also several times before that. The only person present at that interview was defendant No. 2. About the gift to the daughters both defendants Nos. 1 and 2 stated that rupees two lakhs were set apart for the marriage expenses of defendants Nos. 2 and 5, that the two daughters were both married at the same time in April, 1922, and a balance of about Rs. 22,000 was left over.

This balance was credited to the account of defendants Nos. 2 and 5. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 also stated that the deceased asked them to withdraw the amount or any portion thereof as and when they liked, but that nothing was withdrawn by the daughters as they did not need any amount, and defendant No. 1 stated that she withdrew about Rs. 10,000 in all after her husband's death. According to defendant No. 2 the conversation about the gift to the two daughters was after the conversation with defendant No. 1 about the gift to her, whereas according to defendant No. 1 the conversation about the gift to the two daughters was before the conversation about the gift to her. In the written statement it is alleged that the gift was made to defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2 and 5 on the same date. There is no other oral evidence as to the gifts except the evidence of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendant No. 5 has not been called. No other member of the family nor any relation nor friend has been called to prove the alleged gifts. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, however, rely on certain entries in the books of account kept by the deceased for the purpose of proving the gifts. [His Lordship discussed the evidence relating to these entries in the account books and proceeded]:

In my opinion these book entries, even apart from their genuineness which is challenged and is not altogether free from doubt, are not sufficient to support the alleged gift. The gift has nowhere been mentioned before, and is for the first time referred to in the written statement of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The deceased himself has not referred to it in his will. There is not sufficient evidence to show that the deceased intended to make a gift. Book entries do not by themselves confer or determine the rights of parties: see Hariram Serowagee v. Madan Gopal Bagla (4). There is nothing before me in the evidence to show that the deceased relinquished his control over these moneys and divested himself completely of his beneficial interest therein, so that he could not have operated upon these sums if he wanted to. The mere fact that he did not do so for a couple of years does not by itself prove any relinquishment. In any event the entries do not show that even if a gift was intended, it was completed by the deceased.

The effect of these entries does not give to defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2 and 5 a complete dominion or right of property over the moneys or the right to use the same as and when they liked. They have no doubt deposed to certain statements alleged to have been made to them by the deceased, and these are relied on as a declaration of his intention. But the statements are vague and hazy, and I do not accept them. They are not supported by any other independent evidence. Under the Muhammadan Law there must not only be a declaration by the donor of his intention to make the gift, but the subject of the gift must be accepted by and on behalf of the donee, and delivery of possession must be given to the donee in the manner which the subject of the gift is capable of. A relinquishment of control over the subject is necessary to complete the gift: see Musa Miya v. Kadar Bux (5). Delivery of possession is also necessary, though the delivery may be constructive in some cases, and manual delivery, especially in the case of husband and wife, is not always necessary. There is no evidence, however, of any possession, actual or constructive, given to defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2 and 5, and the book entries in themselves do not amount to delivery of possession. It was argued that at any rate defendant No. 1 withdrew large sums of money aggregating to Rs. 49,000 odd from the amount gifted to her, but I have already held that there is no evidence that she withdrew the sums as against the gift. Defendants Nos. 2 and 5 admittedly never withdrew any amount at all. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 tried to get over this difficulty by alleging that they had no need. Further, no interest is credited either to defendant No. 1 or to defendants Nos. 2 and 5 in their account. The Mehta said that the parties were Mussalmans who are against taking and giving interest, but in the same breath he admitted that there was an interest account or Vyaj Vahi in the books of the deceased in which there are entries both for interest received and interest paid. The Mehta in his long examination has not even mentioned that these sums were gifted to defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2 and 5, nor that his master had told him that he had made the gifts. A gift of such large amounts would be generally known in the family and amongst relations. No evidence has been called. It was also argued by Counsel for the plaintiff that the gift to the two daughters is a gift of money which is capable of division, and not having been divided either by the donor or at any time after his death, there is, strictly speaking, no gift under the doctrine of Mushaa known to the Muhammadan Law. It is not necessary for me to discuss that portion of the argument, for it has been held that this doctrine must be applied within very strict limits. I am content to rest my decision on the evidence of defendants Nos 1 and 2 and on the book entries relied on by them, and considering both together, I cannot say that the case of the alleged gifts has been made out. Why these sums were credited to defendant No. 1 and defendants Nos. 2 and 5, and why these book entries were made, is not for the other side to explain. The onus lay on defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5 to prove the gifts, and they have failed to discharge the onus. The gifts, if at all intended, were never completed, and not being completed, are not valid under the Muhammadan Law. Under the circumstances no legal effect can be given to them.

The last issue is, whether each of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is entitled to the remuneration of Rs. 400 per month as provided by the will or otherwise. Under cl. 6 of the will, which has now been proved, each of the two executrices was to be paid out of the property of the deceased Rs. 400 per month after the death of the deceased in lieu of their services as long as the property is administered, that is, I take it, administered by the executrices. It was argued that this provision was not binding upon the other heirs of the deceased, unless they consented expressly or impliedly to this payment. The payment is a sort of commission payable to the executrices by way of remuneration. It is a gratiutous bequest and not a debt: see Aga Mahomed Jaffer Bindanim v. Koolsom Beebee (6), and A. E. Salayjee v. Fatima Bibi (7). Being payable to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, it is a bequest to heirs, and can only be rendered valid by consent of the other heirs. Such consent need not be express. It may be implied by the unequivocal conduct of the other heirs. All the heirs of the deceased are sui juris. He died in March, 1928, and the plaintiff filed the suit in June 1928. In para. 4 of the plaint it is alleged that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were expending a larger sum than Rs. 400 per month allowed under the alleged will of the deceased. All the parties were presumably aware of this provision, and defendant No. 4 has stated in para. 8 of her written statement that she will contend that by reason of the neglect, default and breaches of duty on the part of the executrices they were not entitled to the commission of Rs. 400 a month as provided for by the will of the deceased. Except defendant No. 4 none of the other parties has raised this contention. Inspection of the books has been taken by all the parties. No protest was ever made by any one of them, and they must be deemed to have impliedly consented to this payment of Rs. 400 per month. It was further argued that every recurring payment of Rs. 400 per month is a gift in futuro, and therefore ineffective in Muhammadan Law. This, however, is not a gift out of the future income of the estate, for the testator has clearly provided that the remuneration must be paid out of his property, meaning out of the corpus of the estate, and is therefore not, in my opinion, a gift in futuro.

I have, however, stated before that the Central Bank of India, Ltd., took over the management of the properties in Bombay in or about September 1930. In 1932 an equitable mortgage was created in favour of the Bank to secure repayment of Rs. 42,00,000. The Bank filed their suit No. 1914 of 1932 against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alone, and on the notice of motion for Receiver, an order was taken by consent on December 20, 1932, in which the payment of Rs. 400 per month has been provided for. It was argued that this notice of motion was not served upon the other heirs, and as they had no notice, the sum of Rs. 400 should be debited only to the shares of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from and after the date of the order, viz., December 20, 1932. Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended that this payment should be debited as against the whole estate, for the order merely continued the provision made in the will. It is, however, only the figure of Rs. 400 mentioned in the will that the Bank took for its guidance. The estate is not now administered by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. At least, such part of the estate as is still with them has dwindled considerably. There is no question of any acquiescence or consent, express or implied, on the part of defendant No. 4, for in her written statement filed in February 1933, she has protested against this payment. None of the other heirs of the deceased made any protest. I would therefore order that a separate account should be taken of the sum of Rs. 400 per month paid to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from and after July 1, 1932, and that in taking the accounts of the estate, the share coming to defendant No. 4 should not, in any way, be affected by payment of this sum of Rs. 400 to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 after July 1, 1932.

Counsel for defendant No. 4 lastly applied for the appointment of a Receiver. He said that notice had been served on defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on December 21, 1933, that she would press for the appointment of a Receiver on the grounds of the alleged negligence on the part of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. All the properties of the deceased, however, are now managed by the Central Bank of India, Ltd., except the Dumas House which, it is alleged, is in the occupation of the plaintiff and the other heirs of the deceased, and certain houses at Rander which are in the occupation of the heirs of the deceased. Counsel said that there were also certain ornaments belonging to the estate. Defendant No. 4 wrote to the Attorneys for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alleging that defendant No. 1 had taken out certain ornaments from one of the safes at Rander, but in her Attorney's reply of January 21, 1931, she pointed out that it was only the ornaments of defendant No. 5 that were taken out to be given to her when she was sent to live in her father-in-law's house. It is provided by para. 4 of the will that the ornaments which remained in the possession of defendant No. 1 and the children and grand-children of the deceased had all been gifted to them during his lifetime, and none of his heirs and creditors were entitled to the same. The only other property is the family house, and I have already stated before that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 offered to vacate the same when the Bank took over the management in September 1930, and have since vacated it. It is now lying vacant. No ground has been made out for the appointment of a Receiver.

[After finding on the issues, his Lordship referred the matter to the Commissioner with certain directions to take the usual administration accounts.]

The only other question is one of the costs of this hearing. Several issues were raised, and on some of them defendant No. 4 has failed. On the issue of the alleged gifts defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have also completely failed. I do not agree with Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 that the costs of proving those gifts should be considered part of the costs of administration of the estate. This was an inquiry about an adverse claim made against the estate. On the issue of wilful default it is still open to the parties to apply to the Court on further evidence for a direction that accounts should be taken on that footing, but until then it will be difficult to ascertain what exactly will be the costs of and incidental to that issue. It may be that no wilful default is proved, and such costs may have to be set off against the costs which defendants Nos. 1 and 2 may be ordered to pay in respect of the issues relating to the gift. Taking all these facts into consideration, the only order I propose to make at present is that all costs and further directions be reserved until the Commissioner has made his report.

D. Order accordingly.

Custom (Punjab) — Succession — Muhammadan Gujars of village Bodhaya in Dasuya Tahsil, of Hoshiarpur district—Sisters, if preferred to collaterals—Riwaj-i-am—"Qarabati", meaning of.

It is well-established that sisters are generally not recognised as heirs and the onus is on them to prove their claim as against collaterals howsoever distant even if the property is non-ancestral.

Whatever the origin of the word "qarabati" may have been as used in Riwaj-i am, there is no doubt that it is now used to denote all kinsmen whether near or distant.

F. C. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Hoshairpur, dated June 6, 1928.

Messrs. Badri Das and J. L. Kapur, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Karim, for the Respondents.

Rangi Lal, J.—The parties to this case are Muhammadan Gujars of village Bodhaya in the Dasuya tahsil of the Hoshiarpur District and the contest is between the step-sisters of the last male holder of the land in dispute and a collateral of his in the 10th degree. The lower Court held in favour of the collateral and the step-sisters have appealed.

I am, however, clearly of opinion that there is no force in the appeal. It is well established that sisters are generally not recognised as heirs and the onus is on them to prove their claim as against collaterals, however distant, even if the property is non-ancestral vides Husain Bibi v. Nigahia (1) and Sant Kuar v. Sher Singh (2). In the present case the riwaj-i-am entry clearly negatives the right of the sisters. The anwer to question No. 45 which runs thus: "Does the property ever devolve on sisters or upon their sons?" is as follows:

"Generally the right of sisters and their sons to succeed is not admitted but Gujars, Pathans, Sianis and Sheikhs say they succeed in the absence of all collaterals."

The learned Counsel for the appellants drew our attention to the vernacular riwaj-i-am in which the word "qarabati" is used for collaterals. He urged that that word being derived from the root "qurab" which means nearness, denotes only near collaterals. The Persian English Dictionary by F. Steingass gives the meaning of the word "qarabati" as follows: related, connected, akin, consanguinous. The learned Counsel was not able to cite any authority in support of the restricted meaning which he desired to place on that word. Whatever the origin of the word may have been, there is no doubt that it is now used to denote all kinsmen whether near or distant. This meaning is made quite clear by the English version of the riwaj-i-am which has been quoted above. No serious attempt was made to rebut the strong presumption arising from the aforesaid entry. The witnesses appearing on behalf of the defendants were able to refer to only one instance in which a sister is said to have succeeded. The following pedigree table will help in explaining the facts of that case.

Musammat Sultani and Musammat Mahando were holding the land which had come down from Lakha in equal shares. On the remarriage of Musammat Mahando her share was mutated in favour of Sultani. The mutation proceedings do not show that there was any other claimant at all. The vague statements of the defendants' witnesses that some collaterals of Lakha were alive, cannot be relied on. It is not clear whether the last male holder was Faqir or Lakha. This solitary instance, is, in my opinion, of no help to the defendants. The decision of the lower Court on this point must, therefore, be upheld.

The learned Counsel for the appellants pointed out that one-ninth of the holding in dispute was held by Musammat Azizan, defendant at the time of the death of her step-brother Fazal Qadar and urged that the plaintiff as the preferential heir of Fazal Qadar had no right to succeed to it. This point was not raised before the lower Court and cannot be raised for the first time in appeal. It is admitted that Musammat Azizan was allowed to remain in possession of one-ninth of the holding by way of maintenance till her marriage and that she is now married. The parties apparently realized at the time of the trial that the land held by her was on her marriage to be treated as if it formed part of the estate of Fazal Qadar. She had not succeeded to it as an heir and she cannot, in my opinion, change the course of succession in respect of it. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bhide, J.—I agree.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Plaintiff advancing money to defendant in consideration of his promise to give a girl in marriage to plaintiff's brother—Non-compliance with promise—Criminal prosecution for offences under ss. 417, 420, 500, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Arbitration—Bond in pursuance of award—Suit on bond—Maintainability.

The plaintiff had advanced Rs. 63 to the defendant in consideration of the latter's promise to give a girl in marriage to the plaintiff's brother. When the defendant did not comply with the promise, the plaintiff prosecuted him for offences under ss. 417, 420 and 500 of the Penal Code. While the prosecution was pending, the parties referred their differences to arbitration and the arbitrators decided that the defendant should pay Rs 53 to the plaintiff. In pursuance of this award of the arbitrators, the bond in suit was executed and the prosecution was withdrawn:

Held, that although the institution of the criminal prosecution was the occasion for the reference to arbitration which resulted in the execution of the bond in suit, yet it was in reality the civil dispute between the parties as regards the sum of money alleged to have been advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant, which was the subject of reference to the arbitration. Further, one of the offences forming the subject-matter of the criminal prosecution was compoundable by the parties and the other two compoundable with the permission of the Court. Consequently, the real object of the agreement not having been to interfere with the course of justice, the suit should not be dismissed on the ground of the consideration being opposed to public policy. Saktay Sah v. Mahadin (1), followed.

C. App. against the order of the Munsif (as Judge of Small Cause Court) Tarabganj at Gonda, dated September 9, 1933.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's application for revision of the judgment and decree dated September 9, 1933, passed by the learned Munsif of Tarabganj at Gonda in the exercise of his Small Cause Court jurisdiction.

The plaintiff sued on the basis of a bond executed by the defendant in his favour. The only defence raised was that the bond was not enforceable being void under s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, as its object was to stifle a criminal prosecution. The learned Munsif accepted this plea and dismissed the suit. According to the plaintiff's case he had advanced Rs. 63 to the defendant in consideration of the latter's promise to give a girl in marriage to the plaintiff's brother. When the defendant did not comply with the promise, the plaintiff prosecuted him for offences under ss. 417, 420 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code. While the prosecution was pending, the parties referred their differences to arbitration and the arbitrators decided that the defendant should pay Rs. 53, to the plaintiff. In pursuance of this award of the arbitrators, the bond in suit was executed and the prosecution was withdrawn. The defendant admitted that the parties had made the reference to arbitration. He also admitted the execution of the bond in suit. It is also not denied that after the execution of the bond in suit the prosecution was withdrawn.

The question is whether in these circumstances the consideration of the bond in suit can be said to be unlawful within the meaning of s. 23 of the Indian Contract Act. No doubt the institution of the criminal prosecution was the occasion for the reference to arbitration which resulted in the execution of the bond in suit, but I am satisfied that it was in reality the civil dispute between the parties as regards the sum of money alleged to have been advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant, which was the subject of reference to the arbitration. Further, it would appear that out of the three offences which formed the subject of the criminal prosecution, the offence under s. 508 was compoundable by the parties. The other two offences under ss. 417 and 420 were also compoundable with the permission of the Court. Although no evidence has been given about such permission having been granted, yet the fact being admitted that the Magistrate allowed the prosecution to be withdrawn, it can be presumed that he gave the necessary permission for the compounding of those offences. An agreement to stifle prosecution is distinguishable from the lawful compounding of a compoundable offence. It could not be said that the real object of the agreement was to interfere with the course of justice. The case appears to me to be covered by the decision of a learned Judge of this Court in Saktay Sah v. Mahadin (1). In this case it was held that when the offence with which a particular person was charged is compoundable, he is at liberty to come to a settlement with the prosecutor and the settlement so arrived at cannot be considered to be one, the consideration of which might be considered to be illegal. I am in full agreement with this decision. I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Munsif was wrong in dismissing the suit on the ground of the consideration being opposed to public policy.

The result, therefore, is that I allow the application, set aside the decree of the lower Court and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in both the Courts. He is also allowed interest from the date of suit till realisation at 6 per cent. per annum.

In the case of non-proprietors who have built on sites presumably with the consent of the proprietors, the non-proprietors and their heirs are entitled to occupy the houses as long as they choose to do so, and the proprietors of the sites can re-claim the sites of the houses only if the non-proprietors abandon the houses or sell the sites without his consent. Mahomed Alam v. Ajab (1) and Zarif v. Akbar (2), referred to.

Forfeiture by reason of disclaimer is an incident that attaches to tenancy but it cannot be extended to the non-proprietors' tenure of house in the "abadi" merely by analogy.

It cannot be said that when a village grows into a town, the proprietor of the village sites on which houses have been built automatically loses his rights therein.

It does not follow from the fact that a person is not owner of the village site in the abadi that he is a tenant.

S. C. A. from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated October 11, 1927.

Messrs. Nawal Kishore and M. C. Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shuja-ud-din and Khurshaid Zaman, for the Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for the possession of two houses in the abadi of Urmur in the Hoshiarpur District instituted in the year 1921 by one Fazal Karim Khan against Gokal Chand. Both Fazal Karim Khan and Gokal Chand are dead and are now represented by their heirs Although the original suit was for possession of the houses, it is conceded that the plaintiff could only claim the sites underneath the houses—the houses having been built by the defendant's ancestors.

The original plaintiff Fazal Karim Khan claimed to be the sole proprietor of Urmur and alleged that the defendant Gokal Chand was his tenant and that he had forfeited the tenancy owing to his express denial of the plaintiff's title in the course of evidence given by him on February 5, 1921, in a case to which the plaintiff was a party. The defendant's main pleas were that Urmur was a town and not a village, that the residents in the abadi of Urmur including himself were the owners of the sites of their houses, that even if he was not the owner of the sites, his statement dated February 5, 1921, did not amount to denial of plaintiff's title, and lastly, that in any case he was not liable to be ejected merely on account of that statement. The trial Court held that Urmur was a town and not a village: that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the abadi sites, though his rights had become very much limited in course of time; that Gokal Chand's statement of February 5, 1921, did amount to disclaimer of plaintiff's title, but that the position of the defendants was not that of tenants but of quasi-owners or licensees, and they were therefore not liable to be ejected on account of Gokal Chand's statement. The trial Court therefore merely granted a decree to the plaintiffs declaring their title to the sites underneath the houses in dispute.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that Urmur was not a town but a village, that Fazal Karim Khan and his descendants were the owners of the abadi sites, that the position of the defendants was that of tenants and they were therefore liable to ejectment on account of Gokal Chand's denial of plaintiffs' title. He accordingly accepted the appeal and granted the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the sites of the houses in dispute after removal of the materials of the houses. From this decision the defendants have preferred the present appeal. The Courts below have given a concurrent finding, that the plaintiffs are owners of the sites of the houses in dispute, and this being a finding of fact, cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellants has urged that the learned Additional District Judge was wrong in holding that Urmur was a village and not a town, but this point seems to be really immaterial for the purposes of the above finding as the finding that the plaintiff is the owner of the house sites in the abadi is based on direct evidence and does not turn on any presumption arising from the fact whether Urmur is a town or a village.

The learned Counsel for the appellant was unable to cite any authority in support of his contention that when a village grows into a town, the proprietor of the village sites on which houses have been built automatically loses his rights therein. Such a position appears to my mind to be clearly unsustainable in law.

Assuming then that the plaintiffs are the proprietors of the sites of the houses in the abadi, the next question is whether the defendants are their tenants. The learned Additional District Judge has held that the defendants are tenants but the finding does not appear to be based on any evidence. The learned Judge appears to have held the defendants to be tenants merely because it was not proved that they were owners or licensees as alleged by them. But it does not necessarily follow from this that the position of the defendants must be that of tenants. There is no evidence on the record to show that the defendants' ancestors were allowed to occupy the sites of the houses in dispute as tenants or that they ever paid any rent to the plaintiffs or their ancestors. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs referred to the fact that the defendants were occupancy tenants of agricultural land in the village, that this would not necessarily show that the land in the abadi was also held by them as tenants. The next piece of evidence to which the learned Counsel referred was the entry in the revenue records showing that the abadi was in the possession of the residents of the village. This again cannot establish that these residents occupied the sites as tenants.

So far as the abadi is concerned, the position of the defendants appear to be that of non-proprietors who have built on sites therein—presumably with the consent of the proprietors. In such cases, according to the well recognised custom, the non-proprietors and their heirs are entitled to occupy the houses as long as they choose to do so, and the proprietors of the sites can reclaim the sites of the houses only if the non-proprietors abandon the houses or sell the sites without his consent cf: paras. 236 and 238 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, also Mahomed Alam v. Ajab (1), and Zarif v. Akbar (2). In the present instance no such contingency has arisen. It is true that Gokal Chand disclaimed the plaintiff's title but it is not proved that either according to custom or any agreement between the parties, the defendants are liable to be ejected by reason of such disclaimer of title. Forfeiture by reason of disclaimer is an incident that attaches to tenancy, but it cannot be extended to the non-proprietors' tenure of houses in the abadi merely by analogy. It was incumbent on the plaintiffs to establish that such a result follows in the case of non-proprietors occupying abadi sites, but they have failed to do so. The declaratory decree granted by the trial Court was quite sufficient to protect the plaintiffs' rights and I would accordingly accept this appeal and restore that decree. In view of the circumstances I would leave the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Din Mohammad, J.—I agree.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench

King, C. J. and Zia-ul-Hasan, J.—(January 11, 1935).—An important question of law has been raised in this appeal, namely, whether a Criminal Court can, in a prosecution under s. 307 of the Municipalities Act for failure to obey a notice issued by a Municipal Board under s. 186 of the Municipalities Act, go into the question of the illegality, validity and reasonableness of the notice. On this point there appears to be some conflict of judicial opinion. On the one hand we are referred by the learned Government Advocate to the cases of:—

A contrary view is expressed in the cases of:—

We, therefore, refer the above question to a Full Bench for decision under s. 14 (1) of the Oudh Courts Act.

Judgment of the Full Bench

King, C. J.—(March 5, 1935).—The question of law which has been referred to this Full Bench is, whether a Criminal Court can, in a prosecution under s. 307 of the Municipalities Act, for failure to obey a notice issued by a Municipal Board under s. 186 of that Act, go into the question of the legality and reasonableness of the notice.

Although the question is put in a general and abstract form, I think it is necessary to state briefly the facts out of which it has arisen.

The respondent Mumtaz Husain bought a house within the limits of Sitapur Municipality in October, 1931. According to the case for the prosecution Mumtaz Husain constructed a chabutra and a thatched shed in front of his house without obtaining from the Municipal Board permission to make such constructions. On October 22, 1932, the Municipal Board issued a notice under s. 186 of the Municipalities Act, to him stating that he had constructed a platform with a thatch over it without obtaining permission, and ordering him to demolish the platform and the thatch within a week. This notice was duly served upon Mumtaz Husain on November 4, 1932. He appealed to the District Magistrate under s. 318 of the Municipalities Act. The District Magistrate dismissed the appeal by an order dated May 25, 1933. He took all the facts into consideration and held that Mumtaz Husain had erected the chabutra and the thatched shed without the Board's permission, and that the notice under s. 186 was, therefore, regular.

After this appeal had been dismissed, the Municipal Board prosecuted Mumtaz Husain under s. 307, for failing to comply with the notice under s. 186. In the Magistrate's Court the accused reiterated the same plea that he did not construct the chabutra or shed himself and for that reason he did not comply with the notice. He also stated that the notice was unreasonable and illegal. The learned Magistrate found that the chabutra and shed had been in existence at this very spot before Mumtaz Husain bought the house, and that he was not responsible for having constructed them, and therefore, acquitted the accused. The judgment implies that the notice was illegal or unreasonable although no such finding was expressly recorded.

An appeal against the acquittal has been filed on behalf of the Local Government and the main point argued by the learned Government Advocate is that the District Magistrate's appellate order, declaring the notice to be "regular" i. e. legal and proper, became final under s. 321 of the Municipalities Act and that it was not open to the Magistrate to go behind that order and re-open the question of the legality or propriety of the notice and come to a finding which was in substance a reversal of the District Magistrate's appellate order.

It appears to me that this contention is correct. Under s. 186 the Board is competent to issue a written notice to the owner of any land directing him to demolish a building upon the land in any case where the Board considers that the erection of the building is an offence under s. 115. It must be noted that it is for the Board to decide whether the erection of the building is an offence under s. 185. The Board may be right or wrong in its decision, but if it considers that the erection of the building amounts to an offence under s. 185, then it is competent to issue a notice under s. 186. In the present case, therefore, it appears to me that the Board was clearly acting within the scope of its authority in issuing the notice because it clearly considered the erection of the building to be an offence under s. 185.

The accused when served with the notice availed himself of the remedy provided by the Statute under s. 318, and appealed to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate considered the propriety and legality of the notice and dismissed the appeal.

Now we come to the important s. 321, upon the interpretation of which the decision of this reference primarily turns. This section lays down that no order or direction eferred to in s. 318 shall be questioned in any other manner or by any other authority than is provided therein. It further lays down that the order of the appellate authority confirming, setting aside or modifying any such order or direction shall be final. Under s. 321, therefore, the appellate order of the District Magistrate was final. I take this to mean that the question of the legality and propriety of the notice, which had been finally decided by the District Magistrate, could not be reopened and decided by any Civil or Criminal Court. In other words, the trying Magistrate was precluded by s. 321, from trying the question which had been finally decided by the District Magistrate under s. 318 and was bound to treat that decision as conclusive just as if the trial had been barred by the principal of res judicata.

For the respondent it is contended that a Magistrate cannot convict under s. 307 without satisfying himself that the notice under s. 186 was legal and proper, and, therefore, he is not bound to treat the District Magistrate's appellate order as final and conclusive on that point.

Several authorities have been cited on behalf of the appellant and the respondent, respectively.

For the appellant the case of Mannu v. Emperor (1) has been cited. In that case a person applied for a licence to store firewood but the Board refused to grant him the licence, without giving any reasons. He did not appeal against the refusal to grant a licence but continued to store firewood without permission. He was prosecuted and convicted. The prosecution in that case was for the breach of a bye-law made under Part G (x) of s. 298. The order of the Board refusing to grant the license was held to be an order made under the bye-law and, therefore, to be appealable under s. 318. The learned Judge held that the applicant, having failed to seek his remedy by an appeal under s. 318, could not challenge the order of the Board in the Criminal Proceedings and was rightly convicted. The learned Judge observed that the Criminal Courts should not refuse to enforce the provisions of the Statute according to their plain meaning merely on the ground that there seemed reason for suspecting that the Municipal Board was using its powers under the Statute in an oppressive manner and not in accordance with the spirit of s. 298 of the Act. The view taken in this case certainly supports the contention of the appellant.

The case of Mahadeo Prasad Bakkal v. Jamila Khatun (4), has also been cited but it is readily distinguishable and throws no light upon the correct decision of the question before us.

The case for Har Prasad v. Emperor (2), is clearly in favour of the appellant. In that case the accused was prosecuted under s. 307, for failure to comply with two notices issued by the Municipal Board under ss. 186 and 211 ordering him to remove a certain construction which was encroaching upon a public drain. It was proved that the notices had been served and had not been obeyed. The accused maintained that he had not made any encroachment on the public drain and, therefore, the Municipal Board had no jurisdiction to issue the notices. It was held that s. 318 gave to the accused a remedy by way of appeal to the District Magistrate to challenge the legality or validity of the notices, and as he failed to avail himself of that remedy, the Criminal Court was under s. 321, precluded from questioning the legality or validity of the notices. It was further held that there is nothing in the language of s. 307 of the Municipalities Act which indicates that it is the duty of the Court to satisfy itself that the notice was "lawfully" issued by the Municipal Board. As I was a member of the Bench which decided that case, I may say that I still adhere to the same view. I think there is an important difference between the language of s. 147 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1900, and the corresponding s. 307 of the Muncipalities Act, 1916. Under the former Act s. 147 provided a penalty for disobedience of any lawful direction given by the Board or any notice lawfully issued by it. Section 307 of the Act of 1916 provides a penalty for failing to comply with a notice "given under the provisions of this Act". It has been contended that the law has not really been changed, because if a notice has been given under the provisions of the Act, it must have been "lawfully" given. I am not prepared to accept this contention. The Legislature when enacting s. 307 of the Act of 1916 deliberately omitted the words "lawful" and "lawfully" which were contained in the corresponding section of the previous Act. It must be presumed that this deliberate omission was intended to effect some change of meaning, and it would be most astonishing if it were held that the omission of such important words left the meaning of the section unchanged. I think it is possible for the Board to give a notice under s. 186 legally or illegally. Supposing a Magistrate convicts an accused person under s. 379, Indian Penal Code, the conviction may be set aside as illegal on the ground that the Magistrate refused to allow any cross-examination of the prosecution witnessess, or refused without any adequate reason to summon defence witnesses. But although the conviction was illegal, could it be denied that the accused was convicted under s. 379, Indian Penal Code? So in the present case I think it could not fairly be denied that the notice was given under s. 186. Both in form and in substance the notice was such a notice as the Board, was empowered to give under s. 186, and it is not argued that the notice was void ab initio, or a nullity, owing to lack of inherent jurisdiction or for any other reason. The Municipalities Act itself contemplates the possibility of an illegal "order or direction made by a Board under the powers conferred upon it by s. 186" (and by the other sections mentioned in s. 318). Section 319 provides that if the officer hearing the appeal under s. 318 entertains reasonable doubt as to the legality of the notice or order he may refer the point for the decision of the High Court. This shows that it is possible for an order made by a Board under s. 186 to be an illegal order. The legality of such a notice or order is, therefore, a question which the District Magistrate has exclusive jurisdiction to determine, either on his own responsibility or in conformity with the decision of the High Court. If he upholds the legality and propriety of the notice, I think his decision is final and the question cannot be re-opened and tried again by the Magistrate who tries the case under s. 307.

The question of law has, however, been framed in such general terms that it is necessary to consider the position in case no appeal has been preferred to the District Magistrate under s. 318. In such a case I think that in a prosecution under s. 307 the trying Magistrate can consider and decide whether the notice in question was given by the Board under s. 186. I think it is open to the Magistrate to hold that the notice was void ab initio, a mere nullity which is devoid of any legal consenquences, and therefore that it is not a notice which has been given under s. 186 and therefore failure to comply with it does not constitute an offence under s. 307. Cases of this sort are probably rare, but it is possible, for example, that the notice was issued by a Subordinate Official who was not empowered to do so on behalf of the Board. Or the notice might have been issued in respect of a building situate outside the Municipal limits. So if it is pleaded that the notice is a nullity, or that it is not a notice which has been given by the Board under s. 186, then I think that the trying Magistrate can try and decide that question, if it has not already been decided by the District Magistrate under s. 318. If the trying Magistrate finds that the notice is not a nullity, then I think he is precluded by s. 321 from trying its legality, validity or reasonableness.

The case of Municipal Board of Bahraich v. Jwala Prasad (3) is also in favour of the appellant, but only indirectly. In that case the accused was prosecuted under s. 307 for non-compliance with a notice to close a drain, issued under s. 267. The Bench of Magistrates came to the conclusion that the notice was unreasonable and acquitted the accused. A learned Judge of this Court held that it was only necessary for the Magistrates to consider whether the accused had failed to comply with a notice properly issued to him and they had no jurisdiction to enter into the merits of the Municipal Board's decision to issue the notice and to reverse it. This case is not directly in point because the decision does not depend upon the interpretation of s. 321. The notice under s. 267 was not appealable to the District Magistrate under s. 316, so no question arose whether s. 321 precluded the Criminal Court from questioning the validity of the notice. Never-theless, the learned Judge held that in a prosecution under s. 307 a Magistrate only had to consider whether the accused had failed to comply with a notice properly issued to him. When he speaks of a notice being "properly issued, he probably means a notice which is both in form and in substance a notice which could be issued by the Board and which has in fact been issued by authority of the Board within the scope of its jurisdiction.

The respondent has referred to the case of Kashmiri Lal v. Emperor (7). In that case a notice had been issued by the Board under s. 267 (1) (b) requiring the owner of premises to construct a cesspool. He was prosecuted under s. 307 for failing to comply with the notice. It was held that the order could not be questioned on the merits in the Magistrate's Court provided that the order was made within the jurisdiction of the Board. In other words, the view was that s. 321 prohibits the Magistrate from questioning the reasonableness or parcticability of the order but not its legality. I agree to this extent that it is open to the Magistrate (if the point has not been concluded by the District Magistrate's appellate order) to consider whether the order is a complete nullity, as I have explained above, but if it appears that the order was not a complete nullity, then I think it is not open to the Magistrate to question whether the Board's jurisdiction was wrongly or illegally exercised.

The case of Ram Charan v. Improvement Trust, Lucknow (6) was decided by a single Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court. In that case it was held that if a notice is not issued according to the provisions of the Act, a person to whom the notice is issued may disobey it and yet not be liable to punishment; hence to sustain a conviction under s. 307 it is necessary to prove that the notice was issued under the provisions of the Act or under a rule or a bye-law. This judgment is very brief. We do not know under what section of the Act the notice was issued or whether it was appealable under s. 318. There is no reference whatever to s. 318 or s. 321 and I do not think that this decision is of much help.

The case of Yusuf Husain v. Emperor (5) is certainly in point and is in the respondent's favour. In that case the accused applied for sanction to make a construction and the Board by ignoring his application and further ignoring his reminder, granted constructive sanction to the applicant who thereupon started to construct his building. Subsequently the Board issued a notice under s. 186 directing him to demolish the building. The learned Judge held that disobedience to such a notice was not an offence under s. 307 and it was immaterial that no appeal against the illegality of the notice was taken under s. 318. In that case the notice under s. 186 was clearly illegal and clearly indefensible. Unfortunately the accused did not avail himself of the remedy provided by the statute in s. 318 by appealing to the District Magistrate. If he had appealed, undoubtedly the notice would have been set aside as illegal. As he failed to appeal, the question was whether he could challenge the legality and validity of the notice in the criminal prosecution. The learned Judge referred to the language of s. 147 of the Municipalities Act of 1900 and expressed the opinion that the change of language in the corresponding s. 307 of the present Act had made no change in the law. With due respect, I am unable to accept this view for reasons which I have already stated. Under the new Act I think that the accused was guilty of a technical offence in disobeying a notice illegally issued under s. 186. I think that even in that case it must be held that the notice in question was a notice issued by the Board under s. 186. The notice was not a mere nullity. The Board had jurisdiction to issue the notice but they exercised their jurisdiction illegally or wrongfully. In such a case I think that the Criminal Court was precluded by s. 321 from questioning the legality of the notice for the purpose of finding the accused guilty or not guilty. The point could no doubt be taken into consideration for the purpose of passing sentence, and a nominal fine could be imposed for a technical offence.

The learned Judge observed that the notice under s. 186 could not be held to have been given under the provisions of Act, because the construction did not amount to an offence under s. 185, and therefore the Board could not have considered in good faith that the construction did amount to an offence under 185. It will be observed that the learned Judge seems to hold that the Board is required to consider "in good faith" that the construction constituted an offence under s. 185. The Statute itself, however, does not require the Municipal Board to consider "in good faith". Probably it was not contemplated that a Municipal Board would act otherwise than in good faith, but as the law stands, the Board is given complete discretion and if it acts in bad faith, its proceedings are not vitiated for that reason. I have every sympathy with the learned Judge in wishing to acquit the accused in that case. His decision was certainly just and equitable, but in my opinion it does not rightly interpret the effect of ss. 186, 307 and 321.

The last case for the respondent is Kashi Prasad Verma v. Municipal Board, Benares (8). In that case it was held that the jurisdiction of a Criminal Court hearing a complaint under s. 155 of the Municipalities Act, to inquire into the question whether the goods imported are in fact liable to octroi duty, is not barred by s. 162 (1) of the Act; and before an offence under s. 155 can be established the Municipal Board must satisfy the Criminal Court that the goods are in fact liable to octroi. A question was raised in that case whether s. 164 (1) did not absolutely preclude the Criminal Court from questioning the assessment of the goods to octroi duty. Sub-s. (i) runs as follows:—

"No objection shall be taken to a valuation or assessment, nor shall the liability of a person to be assessed or taxed be questioned in any other manner or by any other authority than is provided in this Act."

The learned Judge has held that this provision barred the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in matters of municipal taxation, but did not bar the jurisdiction of Criminal Courts in such matters. The reason was that

"a Criminal Court is one of the authorities referred to in this very Act for hearing complaints under s. 155 of the Act."

Apparently s. 160 is referred to, which allows an appeal relating to taxation being made to the District Magistrate. The mere fact, that the District Magistrate is the authority who can hear appeals relating to taxation, does not seem to me to warrant the inference that every Magistrate is authorised to question assessments to taxation in the course of trying a criminal case. Section 164 does not merely prohibit any other authority from questioning municipal taxation but prohibits any authority from questioning municipal taxation in any other manner than is provided in this Act. I take this to mean that even the District Magistrate himself could not decide questions relating to taxation except by way of appeal, i. e., he could not do so in the course of trying a criminal case.

The respondent goes to the length of arguing that the word "authority" in s. 321 does not include a Criminal Court, although it may include a Civil Court. It to me seems impossible to hold that the word "authority" is not wide enough to cover Criminal Courts as well as Civil Courts. It is perhaps worth noting that the marginal note of s. 164, the language of which is similar to s. 321, is Bar to jurisdiction of Civil and Criminal Courts in matters of taxation. It is not always clear whether marginal notes can be referred to in case of the obscurity of any expression in the text of the Statute. The answer depends upon whether the notes can be regarded as inserted by, or under the authority of the legislature. In the Full Bench case of Ram Saran Das v. Bhagwant Prasad (9), it was held that marginal notes to sections of an Act can be referred to for the purpose of interpretation if they can be regarded as inserted by, or under the authority of, or assented to, by the legislature. It was shown in that case that the marginal notes to the sections of the Agra Pre-emption Act, 1922, should be regarded as inserted in the Act with the assent and authority of the Legislative Council and that they could be referred to for the purpose of interpreting the sections. We have no information as to whether the procedure adopted by the Legislative Council in passing the U. P. Municipalities Act of 1916 was similar to the procedure adopted by the Legislative Council in passing the Agra Pre-emption Act of 1922, but we have no reason to suppose that the procedure was different. If the marginal note of s. 164 can be referred to as showing what meaning the Legislature attached to the section, it is clear that they meant the word "authority" to include both Criminal and Civil Courts. It is also worth noticing that s. 131 (1), of the U. P. District Boards Act, 1922, is word for word the same as s. 164 (1) of the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916, and the marginal note is also the same showing that "authority" was understood to include Civil and Criminal Courts. As the former Act was passed in the same year as the Agra Pre emption Act, I think the marginal note may confidently be taken as inserted with the authority of the Legislature. I would not, however, base my opinion upon the marginal note of s. 164. I think that the word "authority" is sufficiently wide to cover both Criminal and Civil Courts. In fact I think it has never been doubted that Civil Courts are "authorities" contemplated by ss. 164 and 321 and if Civil Courts are authorities, it is difficult to understand why Criminal Courts should not also be authorities.

It has been argued for the respondent that, s. 321 should not be so construed as to deprive a citizen of his elementary right of defending himself in a Criminal trial. If he pleads that the notice was illegal or unreasonable, then the Court should not convict him without deciding the plea against him. I think the answer is that a Court cannot refuse to give effect to a statutory provision, according to its plain and ordinary meaning, on the ground that it would result in hardship or injustice. The plea must no doubt be recorded but I think the Legislature is competent to prohibit the Court from re-opening a question which has been finally decided, in substance if not in form between the same parties, by an authority having exclusive jurisdiction to decide it. The appeal under s. 318 was decided between Mumtaz Husain and the Board. The prosecution is in form between the King-Emperor and Mumtaz Husain, but in substance it is between the Board and Mumtaz Hussain. The Board is the complainant and the Court cannot take cognizance of the offence except on the complaint of the Board. The Police are in no way concerned and the Crown is not directly interested. So the effect of s. 321 seems to be merely to apply the rule of res judicata which broadly speaking, prohibits the re-opening of a question finally decided between the parties by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

In the case before us it is clear that if the trying Magistrate goes behind the District Magistrate's appellate order and decides the legality and validity of the notice upon the merits, the appellate order is not "final" and the accused will be allowed to have an indirect appeal against it. In fact the trying Magistrate has in effect reversed the appellate order which is declared by statute to be "final". This procedure seems to be in direct conflict with the Statute. The question whether such procedure is desirable and just seems beside the point. It is not for us to justify the acts of the Legislature but to give effect to them. If the District Magistrate's appellate order happens to be made in conformity with the decision of the High Court, on a reference regarding the legality of the notice, it would perhaps be more difficult to stress the "injustice" to the accused in precluding the trying Magistrate from re-opening and deciding the question decided by the final order. But the principle is the same whether the appellate order represents the District Magistrate's decision or the decision of the High Court. In either case the appellate order is final and I think the trying Magistrate cannot go behind it.

In my opinion the answer to the question formulated for our decision depends on whether the District Magistrate has, or has not, made an appellate order under s. 318. If he has, then the answer to the question is in the negative. If he has not, then the trying Magistrate may decide (if the question is raised) whether the notice is a notice which has been given by the Board under s. 186 or a nullity. If he finds that the notice was given by the Board under s. 186, then he is precluded from trying its legality validity or reasonableness.

Srivastava, J.—(March 7, 1935). I agree with the answer given by the Hon'ble Chief Judge to the question which has been referred to the Full Bench. Its answer depends solely on the interpretation to be placed on the provisions of s. 321 and 307 of the U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916). It should be noted that no question has been raised before us as regards the competence of the Local Legislature to enact a provision like that contained in s. 321, if it is supposed to affect any fundamental right or to contravene any principle of criminal law. I have no doubt that the word "authority" used in sub-s. 1 of s. 321 is sufficiently wide to include a Criminal Court. An order under s. 186 being specifically mentioned in s. 318, the effect of s. 321 cl. (1) clearly is that such order cannot be questioned "in any other manner or by any other authority than is provided" in s. 318. The manner laid down in s. 318 is by way of an appeal and the authority provided therein is the District Magistrate. The obvious interpretation, therefore, of this provision of s. 321 is that an order made by a Municipal Board under s. 186 can be questioned only by means of an appeal to the District Magistrate. Section 186 empowers the Board to stop erection, re-erection or alteration of any building and to direct the alteration or demolition thereof. The policy underlying the whole enactment seems to be to give wide and extensive powers to the Boards in Municipal matters and to restrict the litigation in respect of them. It is frequently necessary to restrict the rights and liberties of individuals for the larger good of society. The Legislature could well presume that the actions of Municipal Board constituted of a majority of the elected representatives of the public will, as a rule, be based on considerations of public interest and will not be unreasonable or capricious if, therefore, in a matter like that provided in s. 186 which is essentially a civic matter, the right of the citizen to question the orders of the Board is restricted to an appeal to the District Magistrate, I can see nothing unreasonable in such a provision.

The second clause of s. 321 provides that the order of the appellate authority confirming setting aside or modifying any such order or direction shall be final. There would be no finality in the order, if it could be questioned either in the Civil Court or in the Criminal Court. The provision is tantamount to this that the District Magistrate as a Court of Appeal is given exclusive jurisdiction to deal with the legality or propriety of orders of the Board in matters provided for in s. 318. The province of a Court is only to expound the law as it stands and not to scan its wisdom or its policy. The language of s. 321 appears to me to be so plain and unambiguous that it can admit of but one meaning and except by straining, it we cannot adopt a different construction.

Next as regards s. 307 which deals with the consequences of disobedience to a notice all that the section requires is that the notice has been given "under the provisions of this Act." The words "under the provisions of this Act" in this section must be construed consistently with the provisions of s. 321. They should not be construed so as to nullify the provisions of the latter section and enable an accused to question the order, otherwise than as provided under s. 318 or to affect the finality of the order of the appellate authority. Of course if the accused can show that the notice given to him could not in the eye of law be regarded as a notice at all under the provisions of the Act, then s. 307 would have no application and no conviction could be made under that section. I would, therefore, answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the same terms in which it has been answered by the Hon'ble Chief Judge.

Zia-ul-Hasan, J. (February 25, 1935)—In this appeal on behalf of the Local Government the following question has been referred to the Full Bench.

"Whether a Criminal Court can, in a prosecution under s. 307 of the Municipalilies Act for failure to obey a notice issued by a Municipal Board under s. 186 of the Municipalities Act, go into the question of the legality, validity and reasonableness of the notice".

I have given my best consideration to the arguments of the learned Government Advocate, who pleaded for the question being answered in the negative, but am definitely of opinion that the answer must be in the affirmative. To hold otherwise would not only in the words of the Hon'ble Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court (in the case of Kashi Prasad Verma v. Municipal Board, Benares (8), "stultify Criminal Courts, which would be constrained to convict persons of an offence, although they know that they are not guilty", but would also go against the very basic principle of criminal justice, namely, that an accused person is of right entitled to defend himself in a trial.

Out of the cases cited by the learned Government Advocate, only three need be considered, namely, Municipal Board, Bahraich v. Jwala Prasad (3), Mannu v. Emperor (1) and Har Prasad v. Emperor (2). The first of these is a single Judge case but in this case also the learned Judge held that the only matter the Magistrate has to consider is whether the accused has failed to comply with a notice properly issued to him. This clearly shows that the Magistrate has to judge of the propriety of the notice issued by the Municipal Board. The second was a case in which a person had been convicted for storing firewood on a piece of land without obtaining a license for the purpose from the Municipal Board as required by the bye-laws framed by the Municipality under s. 298 of the Municipalities Act, and there arose no question of any notice issued by the Municipal Board much less of the validity or legality of such a notice. In fact, the learned Judge's attention was drawn to s. 318 of the Municipalities Act but the learned Judge was of opinion that "the discussion (whether the provisions of s. 318 would apply to the facts of the case) is not really relevant, because the validity of the conviction of Mannu for breach of the rule prohibiting unlicensed persons to use any plot of land within Municipal limits for the purpose of storing wood does not depend upon the consideration of the remedies, if any, open to Mannu against the refusal of the Municipal Board to grant him the license for which he applied."

Further on the learned Judge states,

"If I am right in this view, it would seem to follow that the Board's order refusing a licence could not be questioned by a suit in any Civil Court; but on this point I do not pronounce my final opinion because questions might arise as to the competence of the Local Legislature to take away the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts in such a matter."

This case is, therefore, no authority for holding that the jurisdiction of Criminal Courts to determine the question of the validity or otherwise of a notice issued by the Municipal Board is barred though the head-note of the ruling shows otherwise with regard to the third case which was decided in the Allahabad High Court by the present Chief Judge of this Court and Mr. Justice Thom. I may observe that the accused was not represented in that case before their Lordships and if the authorities in support of the contrary view had been placed before them, it is probable that the decision of their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court would have been different.

We were also referred to some cases in which it has been held that s. 321 of the Municipalities Act bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, but they are obviously not in point in this case.

It was urged that the policy underlying the Municipalities Act of 1916 was to extend the powers of Municipal Boards to a large extent. This may be so, but an extension of the powers of Municipal Boards does not necessarily involve the curtailment of the rights of the public, especially in the matter of defence in Criminal Courts, and I cannot persuade myself to believe that though admittedly in 1900 an accused person was given the right to challenge the validity of a notice issued by a Municipal Board, this elementary right was taken away from him in 1916 when education had appreciably advanced in the country and when the rights of the subject had begun to be recognized more and more.

No doubt s. 321 of the Municipalities Act lays down that "No order or direction referred to in s. 318 shall be question in any other manner or by any other authority than is provided therein" and further that "the order of the appellate authority confirming, setting aside or modifying any such order or direction shall be final"; but I cannot bring myself to believe that by enacting this section the Legislature meant to take away the elementary right of a citizen to defend himself in a criminal trial. It appears to me that by the word "authority" they intended to mean an authority that might be appealed to or moved against an order or direction made by a Municipal Board by the person against whom the order or direction has been made under any of the sections referred to in s. 318 and did not intend thereby to deprive a citizen of his right to defend himself if prosecuted in a Criminal Court by the Board, though to guard against even the remotest possibility of such a person moving the Criminal Court, they used a word comprehensive enough to include Criminal Courts.

Reliance was also placed on the marginal note to s. 164 which runs, "Bar to jurisdiction of Civil and Criminal Courts in matters of taxation"; but in the first place their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that marginal notes to the sections of an enactment are not part of the enactment and cannot be relied upon for basing an argument about the construction of the enactment, in the second, there is no similar marginal note to s. 321 with which we are concerned at present, and in the third, the view that I have taken about the construction of s. 321 easily explains that marginal note.

It cannot be denied that an order of any of the authorities referred to in s. 318, Municipalities Act, must, in the very nature of things, be a quasi executive order and not a judicial order. It follows, therefore, that if the plea of the learned Government Advocate be accepted, a person prosecuted by a Municipal Board under s. 307 must be much worse off than the most hardened criminal, in that he can never get the benefit of a judicial trial.

It may also be noted that the learned Government Advocate could not point to any other enactment by which the jurisdiction of a Criminal Court to go into the facts of a case before it or the right of an accused to defend himself should have been barred.

I am supported in the view that I have taken by the following cases, in all of which accused's right to question the validity of the notice issued by the Municipal Board was recognised.

Ram Dayal v. Emperor (10), Emperor v. Piare Lal (11), Kashmiri Lal v. Emperor (7), Ram Charan v. Improvemeat Trust (6), Ata Karim v. Municipal Board, Fatehpur (12), Yuruf Hussain v. Emperor (5), and Kashi Prasad Verma v. Municipal Board, Benares (8), (referred to above).

With regard to the case of Kashi Prasad Verma v. Municipal Board, Benares (8) it was urged that the learned Chief Justice took the word "authority" in s. 164 to include a Criminal Court on the ground that a Criminal Court itself was an authority referred to in the Act but that this reasoning could not be applied to s. 321 in which the words are "authority other than that mentioned in s. 318" which does not mention a Criminal Court. This was, however, one of the reasons and not the sole reason of His Lordship's decision. Another and a stronger reason is contained in the following words:

(10) 8 Ind. Cas. 562; 7 A L J 1075; 33 A 147; 11 Cr. L J 681.

(11) 23 Ind. Cas. 745; 12 A L J 254.

(12) 119 Ind. Cas. 248; A I R 1929 All. 756; Ind. Rul (1929) All. 1000.

"Section 164 would more appropriately apply to cases where the goods are detained by the Municipal authorities or where octroi duty has been paid which the importer thinks is in excess of what he was bound to pay. On such matters the order of the Appellate authority is final and the importer has no right to claim a refund in any Civil or Criminal Court.":

and the learned Judge goes on to say:

"But we are unable to hold that on that account a Criminal Court is compelled to convict an accused even though satisfied that the goods on which he has not paid octroi were not liable to the payment of octroi."

As regards the cases of Ram Dayal v. Emperor (10) and Emperor v. Piare Lal (11), it was urged that they were under the old Municipalities Act of 1900, in which s. 147 itself showed that what was made an offence was the disobedience of any lawful direction of the Board or of any notice lawfully issued by it and much stress was laid on the fact that the words "lawful" and "lawfully" were omitted from the penal section (307) of the present Act. It was, therefore, argued that the omission of these words from the penal section indicated that the intention was not to leave the plea of illegality of the direction or notice open to the accused. This argument was no doubt accepted in the case of Har Prasad v. Emperor (2), but with all respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, I regret I am unable to take that view. As was pointed out by Mr. Justice Kisch in Yusuf Hussain v. Emperor (5), the omission of these words is not of much significance inasmuch as s. 307 still contains the sentence. "If a notice has been given under the provisions of this Act", which is equivalent to saying "if a notice is lawfully given", for a notice given under or in accordance with the provisions of the Act must be lawful or legal. Now, when the very first condition of the proof of an offence according to s. 307 is that the notice given by the Board should be under the provisions of the Act, or in other words legal, I fail to understand how it can be said that the Court in which the prosecution is launched is precluded from going into the question of the legality or otherwise of the notice. In fact, under s. 307 itself, the very first thing that the Court must see is whether the notice was legal or not.

It might be said and was in fact said, that what was meant by the sentence. "If a notice has been given under the provisions of this Act," was that the Court should see whether or not the Board had jurisdiction to issue a notice of the kind in question and was not concerned with the question whether the notice was right or wrong, legal or illegal, I am unable to accept this interpretation of s. 307. If that had been the intention of the Legislature nothing was easier than to express. "If a notice has been given purporting to be under the provisions of the Act," instead of saying "If a notice has been given under the provisions of this Act".

It is thus clear that to interpret s. 321 of the Act in the manner contended for by the learned Government Advocate will not only be against the very elementary principles of the administration of criminal justice but would also be against the provisions of s. 307 of the Act itself.

I would, therefore, answer the question in the affirmative.

King, C. J. and Zia-ul-Hasan, J.—(March 13, 1935).—The majority of the Judges constituting the Full Bench have decided that when the District Magistrate has made an appellate order under s. 318, upholding the legality or the validity of the notice issued by the Board under s. 186, the Criminal Court which tries a case under s. 307, for failure, to comply with the notice, cannot go into the question of the legality, validity or reasonableness of the notice.

In the present case, therefore, the trying Magistrate was precluded from finding that the notice was illegal or invalid.

The accused admitedly failed to comply with the notice and was, therefore, guilty of an offence under s. 307.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the Magistrate's order of acquittal dated October 17, 1933, and convict the accused Sheikh Mumtaz Husain under s. 307, U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916, and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 20 within one week from the date when this sentence is communicated to him by the trial Court and order that in default of payment of the fine within the period mentioned, he shall undergo simple imprisonment for one week.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 92, O. XLIII, r. 1 (j)—Order refusing to set aside sale—Appeal—Auction-purchaser, if a necessary party.

In an appeal from an order passed under O. XXI, r. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, rejecting an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree, the auction purchaser is a necessary party and the appeal cannot proceed in his absence. Mela Ram v. Narain Das (1), Khaire v. Salem Raj (2), Bhawani Shankar v. The Industrial Bank of India, Ltd. Ludhiana (3), Bahadur Ali Khan v. Co-operrtive Credit Society Basti Babo Khel (4) and Nanak Chand v. Raja Singh (5), referred to.

Misc. F. C. A. from the order of the First Class, Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated March 27, 1933.

Mr. Bishan Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order passed under O. XXI, r. 92, Civil Procedure Code, rejecting an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree which is appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1 (j) of the Code.

The learned Counsel for the respondent has raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the appeal cannot proceed as the auction-purchaser has not been made a respondent. In my opinion this objection is sound and must succeed. It was laid down in Mela Ram v. Narain Das (1) that where in an appeal from an order passed under s. 312, Civil Procedure Code, rejecting an application to set aside an execution-sale it appeared that the judgment-debtor has not made the auction-purchaser a party to the proceedings, the appeal must be dismissed as the auction-purchaser was a necessary party in order to enable the Court to effectually adjudicate upon all the questions involved in the application. It was held in Khaira v. Salem Raj (2), that an appeal against an order confirming an auction-sale, to which the auction-purchasers were not made parties till long after the appeal was time-barred as against them, should be dismissed. Reference may also be made to Bhawani Shankar v. The Industrial Bank of India, Ltd. (3), Bahadur Ali Khan v. Co-operatrive Credit Society, Basti Baba Khel (4) and Nanak Chand v. Raja Singh (5) in this connection.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the observations made in Khaira v. Salem Raj (2) and Bhawani Shankar v. Industrial Bank of Inaia, Ltd. (3), were inapplicable to the facts of the present case as those cases arose out of insolvency proceedings. It must, however, be remembered that the ratio deciaendi of those rulings was that no order to the detriment of the auction-purchaser could possibly be made without giving him an opportunity of being heard and that therefore it was necessary to make him a party to the appeal wherein the validity of the sale in his favour was challenged. Moreover, Mela Ram v. Narain Das (1), and Nanak Chand v. Raja Singh (5) are cases arising out of execution of decrees under the Civil Procedure Code, and the reasoning embodied in those rulings is fully applicable to the present case. For the reasons given above, I dismiss the appeal of the judgment-debtor with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act (V of 1908), O. XIX, r. 3, O. XXXIX, r. 1, O. XXXVIII, r. 5—Affidavit stating grounds of belief — Necessity of— Essentials for an order under O. XXXIX, r. 1— Present intention of obstruction or delaying execution of decree must be proved—Injunction or attachment, when to be granted—Orders under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, and O. XXXIX, r. 1—Whether discretionary—Interference by Appellate Court.

Where the deponent in his affidavit does not say which part is based on information and which on belief, nor the grounds of his belief, the affidavit is defective Padmabati Dasi v. Rasik Lal Dhar (1), relied on.

Before any order can be made under the provisions of O XXXIX, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff must prove some overt act towards the alienation of the properties such for example as negotiations or offers for sale and that the property is in danger of alienation.

Where there is nothing in documents filed by way of objections by the defendants to an application under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, to show that the defendants ever had any intention of obstructing or delaying the execution of any decree which might be passed against, them or with such intent were about to dispose of their property, it cannot be said that the Court could be satisfied "otherwise" within the meaning of r. 5 (1) of O. XXXVIII, Civil Procedure Code. and the mere fact that a defendant has in the past mortgaged or disposed of his property is not a sufficient ground for levying attachment. There must be a present intention. Sanaji Kapurchand v. Pannaji Devi Chand (3), Nowroji Padamji v. Deccan Bank, Ltd. (4) and Manmatha Nath Sett v. Nagendra Nath Bhattacharjya (5), relied on. [p. 357, col. 2.]

Prima facie case is essential before either injunction or attachment can be granted. Moreover, the Court must be satisfied that interference is necessary to prevent injury which is irreparable, and that the mischief or inconvenience which is likely to arise in consequence of withholding the relief will be greater than that from granting it. Daily Gazette Press, Ltd. v. Karachi Municipality (6) and Vathiar Ramanuja Aiyangar v. Aiyanachariar (7), referred to.

Orders pressed under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 and O. XXXIX, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, are discretionary, and an Appellate Court ought not to interfere with the exercise of a Judge's discretion unless satisfied that it was not judicially exercised, that is to say, that the Judge acted on wrong principles. The mere fact that the Judges of the Appellate Court might have taken a different view is not a sufficient ground for interference. If the Judge rightly appreciates the facts, and applies to those facts the true principles, that is a sound exercise of judicial discretion. Daily Gazette Press, Ltd. v. Karachi Municipality (6) and Subba v. Haji Badahaw (12), referred to.

Neither injunction nor attachment ought to be lightly granted. It would be a serious thing if persons in possession were restrained from making use of the property merely because a suit had been instituted about it It is only where it is essential that property should be kept in its existing condition pending suit, that the Court should interfere. Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Satish Chandra (13), relied on. C. A. from the original orders of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Alipur, dated November 17, 1932.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Rai Chaudhuri and Urukramdas Chakerbertty, for the Appellant.

M. C. Ghose, J.—These two appeals were argued by Mr. Sharat Chandra Rai Choudhuri on February 15 last. My learned brother, on hearing him proposed to dismiss them summarily. I proposed to admit them for hearing. I do not propose to say more than certain of the arguments advanced by Mr. Rai Chaudhuri which inclined me in favour of admission of these appeals. He urged that the learned Subordinate Judge committed an error in making adverse remarks on the plaintiff's case. He should have noted that the plaintiff was a small child when his mother died and his elder sister, defendant No. 2, took care of him and defendant No. 1 who married her came to live as Ghar Jamai, and during his infancy they exercised their influence on him.

During his minority, his case is that they and defendant No. 3 managed the estate and embezzled large sums of money and when he was 20 years old, they induced him to execute three deeds of release to the extent of one lac of rupees on the representation that his father desired that the gifts should be made, but that there was nothing in his will to that effect. The learned Subordinate Judge criticised the affidavit filed on behalf of the plaintiff; but having regard to the provisions of O. XXXVIII, r. 5 (1) and O. XXXIX, r. 1, which provide that the facts might be proved by affidavit or otherwise, the learned Judge should have taken into account the admission of defendant No. 3 that immediately before the suit he had been trying to dispose of one of the properties. All these properties had been brought during the time they were managing the estate. The learned Judge was wrong to criticise the plaintiff for not paying sufficient court-fees for consequential relief, inasmuch as the suit should be valued according to the statement of the plaintiff. The plaintiff stated in the plaint that he was in possession of all the six properties, that he himself was in direct possession of one property and the other five properties were let out to tenants from whom he was getting rents and that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that the defendants were in possession of the properties.

It was suggested that the appeals were made very late. It was urged in reply that the petitions were made immediately the suit was filed and they were disposed of on November 17 and, thereafter, the plaintiff made no delay but immediately obtained copies of the necessary documents and filed the appeals in the beginning of December and it was not his fault that the appeals were not heard till the middle of February. In my view, we should admit these appeals, look at the records and hear the parties before forming our final opinion.

Lort-Williams, J.—These are two appeals from a judgment of Mr. Hiralal Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge at Alipur refusing to grant two applications by the plaintiff (1) for attachment of property before judgment under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code and (2) for a temporary injunction under O. XXXIX, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff's father died in January 1929, leaving considerable property, both movable and immovable, and a will under which plaintiff became sole owner of the estate. He attained his majority in August 1929, and took out letters of administration in November. In 1933, when he was 22 years of age, he brought the present suit against his sister and her husband, and the manager of the estate. The plaint is a long, rambling and scandalous pleading, full of unnecessary and irrelevant matter, and deficient in particulars. It offends against all the rules of pleading contained in O. IV, Civil Procedure Code, and, if any attention were paid in the Subordinate Courts to the rules of pleading and procedure, it ought to have been struck out long ago under O. VI, r. 16, as tending to prejudice, embarrass and delay the fair trial of the suit. So far as it is possible to ascertain from this confused document what the plaintiff claims, he seems to allege that he was a person of weak intellect, and under the control and dominance of the defendants, who conspired together to defraud him; that, inter alia, they took possession of all his properties, and used the money belonging to his estate to buy, in their own names, certain other properties, enumerated 1 to 6 in Schedule 'Chha' and induced him by fraud to execute three deeds of release for sums amounting to one lac of rupees. He asks for a declaration of title to the properties in Schedule 'Chha', and for accounts. He does not ask for possession or for any other consequential relief, or for an injunction.

The defendants deny the allegations of fraud in toto, admit the deeds, which were duly registered, and which they say, the plaintiff executed voluntarily two years after he attained majority, and in accordance with the wishes of his father, and state that they purchased the properties in Schedule 'Chha' with their own money. The application for attachment related of course to defendants' own properties, and was in respect of plaintiff's claim for accounts. The application for an injunction related to the properties in Schedule 'Chha' which plaintiff sought to restrain defendants from alienating. The pleadings and affidavits disclose the following facts. The properties in Schedule 'Chha' are in the possession of the defendants. They have built houses thereon, and have been living there for some time and have let out part to tenants, from whom they collect the rents. Their names are registered as owners and they pay the Municipal Taxes. The title deeds to properties 1-4 were left, with other properties, in plaintiff's house, and have been misappropriated by him. The title deeds to properties Nos. 5 and 6 are in the possession of the manager to whom they belong. He borrowed money in 1933 by hypothecating property No. 5 only, for the purpose of buying another house, and transferred the title-deeds to the mortgagee. Subsequently, in order to pay off the mortgage, he decided to sell the property and executed a bainapatra. This was long before the institution of the suit, but on hearing of the suit he postponed registration of the document, returned the baina money, with costs and fees thereon, to the purchaser, recovered the document, and filed it in Court. The Subordinate Judge did not deal with the matter summarily but heard the Pleaders at considerable length and after carefully considering all the facts and documents he refused both applications. His reasons for refusing an injunction were :

1. That the plaintiff's affidavit, is inadequate and defective. He, alleges, in para. 12 thereof simply that the defendants are trying to dispose of the properties in Schedule 'Chha' and states that his allegation is based partly on information which he believes to be true and partly on belief. He does not say which part is based on information and which on belief, nor does he state the grounds of his belief, contrary to the provisions of O. XIX, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code: Padmabati Dasi v. Rasik Lal Dhar (1). No overt act towards the alienation of the properties in Schedule 'Chha' is even suggested in the application, such for example as negotiations or offers for sale, and there is no proof that the property is in danger of alienation. These reasons clearly are sound and unanswerable, and such proof is essential before any order can be made under the provisions of O. XXXIX, r. 1.

2. The plaintiff, in respect of the Schedule 'Chha' properties, asks in his plaint only for a declaration of title, without any consequential relief, and without asking for an injunction. It is clear from the pleadings and affidavits that he is out of possession, yet he does not ask for it. His claim is barred under s. 42, Specific Relief Act.

3. The title deeds of the properties are in the possession of the plaintiff. (This statement is not quite accurate. The plaintiff has possession of the deeds of properties Nos. 1-4), In view of this and the pendency of the suit, the plaintiff cannot have any reasonable apprehension of alienation. No person would be willing to purchase property which is the subject of lis pendens. These reasons also are sound. In a suit for declaration an injunction should not be granted where there is no claim for consequential relief or permanent injunction: Shiromani v. Banta (2). The learned Judge's reasons for refusing attachment were that the affidavit was sworn, not by the plaintiff, but by an employee of the plaintiff, who states in paras. 4 and 6 that the defendants are trying to, and are about, to dispose of their properties with intent to obstruct and delay the execution of the decree, and that his statements are based partly on information and partly on belief, without stating which are based on which and without stating his grounds of belief. Therefore this affidavit also is inadequate and defective, and open to the same objections as the other, and offends against the order and the decision to which I have already referred. The learned Advocate for the plaintiff argued that in addition to plaintiff's affidavits, which he admitted were inadequate and defective, there were in the objections filed by the defendants admissions upon which the Judge could be satisfied "otherwise" within the meaning of O. XXXVIII, r. 5 (1).

But the Court must be thoroughly satisfied, and there is nothing in these documents to show that the defendants ever had any intention of obstructing or delaying the execution of any decree which might be passed against them, or with such intent were about to dispose of their property. Mere vague allegations are not sufficient: Sanaji Kapurchand v. Pannaji Devi Chand (3) and see Nowroji Padamji v. Deccan Bank, Ltd. (4). And the mere fact that a defendant has in the past mortgaged or disposed of his propertyis not a sufficient ground for levying attachment. There must be a present intention: Manmatha Nath Sett v. Nagenra Nath Battacharjya (5). Further the Judge held, for the reasons given in his judgment, that the plaintiff had failed to make out a prima facie case. This is essential before either injunction or attachment can be granted. Moreover, the Court must be satisfied that interference is necessary to prevent injury which is irreparable, and that the mischief or inconvenience which is likely to arise in consequence of withholding the relief will be greater than that from granting it; Daily Gazette Press, Ltd. v. Karachi Municipality (6) and Vathiar Ramanaja Aiyangar v. Aiyanachariar, 17 Ind. Cas. 219 (7) and many other cases.

The question of appeal raises the further question whether the procedure under the Code and the machinery of the High Court are generally appropriate to appeals in such matters as these. It is true that an appeal is given, but in most, if not in every such case, it must be fruitless and should not therefore be admitted except in very exceptional circumstances. Both injunction and attachment are intended to give prompt relief from immediate or impending danger of injury which will be irreparable. These applications were heard and refused by the learned Judge on November 17, 1933. They came before this Court for disposal under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code, on February 15, 1934, no less than three months after the alleged danger had arisen. If admitted, these appeals will be heard some two or three years hence. (The Court is now hearing Miscellaneous Appeals of 1931 and 1932). Long before that date, in all probability, the suit itself will have been decreed. Could any procedure be more absurd or more likely to bring the Court and the administration of justice into contempt? In my opinion the Court ought not to admit appeals from such orders, except in cases of serious misdirection in law or fact, when special directions might be given for expedition.

Moreover, it must be remembered that both these orders were discretionary, and an Appellate Court ought not to interfere with the exercise of Judge's discretion unless satisfied that it was not judicially exercised, that is to say, that the Judge acted on wrong principles. The mere fact that the Judges of the Appellate Court might have taken a different view is not a sufficient ground for interference : Daily Gazette Press, Ltd. v. Karachi Municipality (6), Watson v. Rodwell (8), Sheffield v. Sheffield (9), Mass v. Gaslight and Coke Co. (10) and Donald Compbell & Co. v. Pollak (11) and many other cases.

If the Judge rightly appreciates the facts, and applies to those facts the true principles, that is a sound exercise of judicial discretion : White, C. J., in Subba v. Haji Badahaw (12). This well established rule frequently seems to be over-looked or disregarded by Appellate Courts in India, or Appellate Judges too readily come to the conclusion that a discretion has not been exercised judicially. Finally neither injunction nor attachment ought to be lightly granted. It would be a serious thing if persons in possession were restrained from making use of the property merely because a suit had been instituted about it. It is only where it is essential that property should be kept in its existing condition pending suit, that the Court should interfere: Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Satish Chandra (13). For all these reasons, I am of opinion that these appeals ought to be dismissed, but as my learned brother does not agree, the matter must be referred for hearing by a third Judge, under the provisions of cl. 36 of the Letters Patent.

Buckland, Actg. C. J.—I am not satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge wrongly exercised his discretion ; and I agree with my learned brother Lort-Williams, J., that these appeals should be summarily dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code.

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), ss. 196, 197 (a) (b)—Planting of grove—Whether changes nature of occupancy holding—Grove, if rendered capable of being mortgaged—Sale in execution of mortgage decree—Legality of.

The planting of a grove may change the nature of the occupancy holding and render the grove capable of being mortgaged and of being sold in execution sale on a mortgage decree. Where trees have been standing for a very long time on a holding, when the zemindar gives implied permission that the tenant should plant a grove on a particular number of his occupancy holding, the zemindar must have consented to the alteration of the tenure of that number from an occupancy tenure to a grove tenure and that number becomes capable of mortgage and can be sold in execution of a mortgage decree. Jalesar Sahu v. Raj Mangal (3), Man Singh v. Madho Singh (4) and Sultan Husain Khan v. Jwala (5), relied on. Daya Kishen v. Mohamad Wazir Ahmad (1) and Ram Dial v. Narpat Singh (2), not followed.

S. C. A. from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Etawah, dated March 11, 1931.

Mr. A. P. Pandey, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by defendant No. 3 against concurring decrees of the two lower Courts which have granted the plaintiffs-mortgagees a decree for sale on a mortgage of June 21, 1913, executed by one Lalla, who is defendant No. 1. The mortgage purported to be in regard to two of the former numbers, plots Nos. 50 and 51. We are concerned in the present suit only with plot No. 50 which is the present No. 85. It is found by the lower Appellate Court that this number was one of seven numbers which formed the occupancy holding of defendant No. 1 and it was recorded as an occupancy holding in the papers of the settlement of 1872. The plot No. 50 is now occupied by 92 trees, of which 88 are mango trees standing in regular rows and the lower Appellate Court has found that this plot is, therefore, grove-land and was a grove at the time of mortgage. The question which has been agitated in second appeal is that because the plot was originally part of an occupancy holding, therefore, the mortgage in 1913 was invalid and the mortgage cannot be enforced by a decree for sale. For the respondents the view is put forward that when the trees were planted on this plot, the plot changed its nature and ceased to be part of an occupancy holding and became grove-land and was, therefore, transferable by way of mortgage and can be sold in execution of a mortgage decree. There are a number of rulings to which reference has been made and learned Counsel for the appellant relies on the following rulings:—

Daya Kishen v. Mohamad Wazir Ahmad (1) a ruling of 1915: Ram Dial v. Narpat Singh (2), a ruling of 1909. In the earlier of these rulings of 1909, there was no consideration as to whether the existence of the grove land had changed the nature of the holding, but it was merely held that where an occupancy tenant purported to mortgage a grove which was his occupancy holding, the grove could not be sold in execution of a decree on the mortgage. In Daya Kishen v. Mohamad Wazir Ahmad (1), it was held that the planting of a grove by an occupancy tenant on his holding with the permission of the zemindar does not change the nature of the holding from an occupancy tenancy to grove-land and the tenant has not got the right to sell the trees so planted, nor can the trees be sold in execution of a decree against the tenant. This ruling undoubtedly is in favour of the appellant, and if this ruling had been followed by this Court, we consider that it would be a strong reason to allow this appeal. But the ruling has not been followed by this Court. In Jalesar Sahu v. Raj Mangal (3), two learned Judges of this Court held the contrary, and this was followed by a learned Single Judge in Man Singh v. Madho Singh (4), and also by another learned Single Judge in Sultan Husain Khan v. Jwala 78 Ind. Cas. 480 (5). These later rulings ranging from 1921 to 1924 lay down that the planting of grove may change the nature of the occupancy holding and render the grove capable of being mortgaged and of being sold in execution sale on a mortgage decree. That view of the character of the groves has been adopted by the legislature in framing the Agra Tenancy Act, Act III of 1926, and in ss. 196 and 197 (a) and (b) it is provided that where a tenant, such as an occupancy tenant, plants trees on a part of all of his holding so that the portion planted becomes a grove, that part becomes grove-land and is held under non-occupancy tenure and is transferable and the lease will expire when the land ceases to be grove-land. As the view of the later rulings has now been adopted by the legislature we do not think that we should go back to the earlier rulings of 1909 and 1915 on which learned Counsel relies, particularly as in one of these rulings, that of 1909, this aspect of the case was not considered as to whether the existence of the grove-land changed the nature of the holding. In the case before us the trees have been standing for a very long time on the holding and the lower Appellate Court finds that these trees range in age from 30 to 50 years. On this view of the case we consider that when the zemindars gave implied permission as the lower Appellate Court has held that the tenant should plant a grove on this particular number out of his occupancy holding, the zemindars must have consented to the alteration of the tenure of that number from an occupancy tenure to a grove tenure. Accordingly that number became capable of mortgage and could be sold in execution of a mortgage decree.

The decree, therefore, of the lower Appellate Court is correct and we dismiss this second appeal with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Appeal No. 296 of 1930
December 5, 1933

KRISHNAN PANDALAI AND CURGENVEN, JJ.

TIRUNARAYANA PILLAI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

P. R. Y. MANICKAVACHAGAM CHETTIAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 11, 3, 4—Party impleaded both in appeal and memorandum of objections—Two separate applications, if necessary for bringing his legal representative on record—Breach of trust—Cause of action, if survives against legal representatives of deceased trustee—Trusts Act (II of 1882), ss. 19, 23, 37, 62—Breach of trust—Suit for, against trustee—Accounts—Nature of proof—Trustees not rendering accounts properly—Liability for interest — Accounts to be taken must be common account and not on footing of wilful default—Trustee, if authorised to give possession of property before receiving purchase-money—Conditional release where trustees have purchased trust property — Power of Court to order.

Where a party is already impleaded both in the appeal and the memorandum of objections, there is no necessity of two separate applications to bring his legal representatives on the record. Venkatachariar v. Ponnappa Aiyangar (1), referred to.

The cause of action for breach of trust survives against the legal representatives of a deceased trustee and legal representatives of a deceased trustee can be proceeded against in respect of breaches of trust by the deceased. [p. 362, col. 2.]

Where in a suit for the breach of trust, the plea is that the trustees have not kept proper accounts or furnished them to the beneficiaries, it is not sufficient to show that the account was not regularly and correctly kept from day to day but was mostly written up for the purpose of being produced in Court. What is more important is the question whether the account as far as it goes can be shown to be untrue in the sense that the actual receipts are not entered or the expenditure entered is fictitious or excessive. Thus the faults in the mode of keeping accounts are to be distinguished from the faults involving dishonesty or misconduct.

An accounting party not rendering accounts properly but retaining trust moneys (such as the unpaid purchase moneys due by them on the several benami purchases) in their hands must pay interest even if the debt by its nature does not carry interest. Pearse v. Green (6), relied on.

In a suit for breach of trust the account to be taken must be a common account which will give the beneficiaries liberty to surcharge and falsify but not an account on the footing of wilful default. Peary Mohan v. Manohar (7), relied on.

Trustees are not authorised to give possession of property comprised in a trust for sale before receiving the purchase money. Oliver v. Court (3), relied on.

Under s. 62, Trusts Act, the Court has no power to make an order directing a conditional re-sale conditional on such sale producing a higher price than that for which the trustees themselves bought.

C. A. from the decree of the Sub-Judge, Mayavaram, in O. S. No. 17 of 1927.

The Advocate-General and Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Subbaraya Ayyar K. S. Krishnasawami Iyengar, K. S. Rajagopala Iyengar and K. Ramanathan Chettiar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants are defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the lower Court. On the death of appellant No. 1 (defendant No. 1) pending this appeal the other appellant applied to add his legal representative who opposed the application and stated that he did not wish to continue the appeal. The appellants being co-trustees and the presence of all trustees before the Court being necessary to determine the appeal by the surviving trustee and the questions arising between the trustees and the respondents cestui que trust, we ordered the addition of the legal representative of the deceased defendant No. 1 as a co-respondent.

The suit though originally brought by two plaintiffs was afterwards continued as a representative one on behalf of all creditors of defendants Nos. 5 to 8 for whose benefit they executed a trust deed Ex. 1 dated August 19, 1923, of all their properties mentioned in the schedules attached thereto constituting defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and another, since deceased trustees to sell and distribute the proceeds rateably among their creditors mentioned in Sch. A thereto. The plaintiffs (respondents Nos. 1 and 2) charged the trustees with, several breaches of trust passive and active such as not getting in all the properties, not getting the lands cultivated and houses let, not keeping proper accounts, buying the trust properties at auctions themselves in the name of benamidars while not paying the purchase money due on those purchases, underselling the trust properties, partiality in the distribution of dividends, etc., and prayed for removal of the trustees and appointment of new trustees, administration of the trust properties, accounts of the dealings by the trustees and recovery of what may be found due from the trustees and other appropriate reliefs.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 adopted the same defence denying the charges and asking that the suit should be dismissed. The lower Court raised four issues of which the most important was Issue No. 1 which raised the question whether the acts of malfeasance, misfeasance, and gross negligence complained of against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are true, and if so, to what relief the plaintiffs are entitled. The learned Judge heard the evidence which was voluminous and delivered a careful and painstaking judgment considering the several charges and passed a preliminary decree in terms of para. 95 of his judgment removing the trustees from their office and proposing to appoint suitable persons in their stead at the time of the final decree. He also directed that the new trustees when appointed should take the steps mentioned in the decree and carry out the trust in luding inter alia the resale of certain trust properties which he found the trustees had themselves purchased benami in the names of others provided that the re-sale fetched a better price than that at which the trustees themselves had purchased and ordered the trustees to pay four sums of money which he found that they had made themselves liable for by reason of their neglect of duty.

In this appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 most of the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge are not questioned by them but respondent No. 1 has raised, by way of memorandum of objection, questions involving the liability of the trustees which the learned Judge has either rejected or not expressed any opinion upon on account of the state of the contention before him. On account of the number of questions thus involved, the most convenient way of disposing of this appeal is to deal seriatim with the objections raised by both parties and then decide what in the circumstances at present existing is the most suitable form of decree to be passed. (Their Lordships then decided some of the objections on facts and proceeded.) The next objection raised by the appellants relates to the directions in the decree about the re-sale of the properties which the learned Judge found had been purchased by the trustees themselves in the names of their servants and dependents. This would appear to have been the subject which occupied the bulk of the trial in the lower Court. The trustees denied that they had purchased any properties for their own benefit. The plaintiffs alleged that defendant No. 1 purchased the properties specified in the judgment for a total price of Rs. 5,775 in the name of one Somasundara Mudaliar and that defendant No. 2 purchased the properties also specified for a total price of Rs. 34,080, through one Mahadeva Ayyar. It was also elicited that a firm of which defendant No. 4 was a partner had been allowed to buy a mill for Rs. 5,050, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had not brought into account even the above-said sums on the due dates, that defendant No. 2 was still in arrears to the extent of Rs. 8,939-11-6 and that 4th defendant's firm had paid nothing at all as a consequence of which a decree was obtained against the firm. It appeared also that defendant No. 4 was quite unable to pay any portion of the decree amount. He did not appear at the trial nor has he appeared here. The learned Judge dealt with the benami purchase of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 very elaborately in paras. 43 to 86. In para. 86 he records these findings that the purchases by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of the properties mentioned therein were benami and for their own benefit and invalid. In para. 87 he deals with the purchase by defendant No. 4's firm but says that that was not included in the charges mentioned in the plaint. On these findings he directed in the preliminary decree that the properties bought by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be re-sold by the new trustees when appointed but that if the re-sale did not fetch the price at which the defendants had bought, the sales to the defendants should stand. He did not give any direction as to the price of the mill and, therefore, must be deemed to have held that the new trustees should be bound by the sale and that they should recover the amount of the decree obtained therefor from the judgment-debtors (defendant No. 4 and his partner).

The appellants' objection about this part of the decree is that by s. 62, Trusts Act, the Court had no power to make an order directing a conditional re-sale conditional on such sale producing a higher price than that for which the trustees themselves bought. This objection is valid and would have had to be given effect to and the decree amended in consonance with s. 62. But this objection has now become unnecessary to entertain because respondents Nos. 1 and 2 (plaintiffs) represent that owing to the change of conditions principally that fall in land values on account of the economic depression which has prevailed for the last three years, a re-sale of the properties is not necessary at all because the properties are not likely to fetch anything like the price for which the trustees themselves bought in 1925. They, therefore, say that they are willing that the trustees should keep their purchases upon the footing that they owed the price to the trust fund from the dates of those purchases and be made to account on that footing. The learned Advocate-General has not questioned the finding that the purchases were benami in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and that they were grave breaches of trust. He has also properly admitted that on that finding if those purchases are upheld as the plaintiffs are willing that they should be upheld, the trustees would be liable to account for the purchase money from the due dates and can be charged with interest for the unpaid sums during the time they failed or delayed to bring it to account. He, however, asks that in calculating the interest on the unpaid purchase money credit should be given according to the resolution of the trustees and the conditions of sale for dividends payable to the purchasers as creditors. This was not questioned by the plaintiffs and suitable directions will have to be given in the decree by omitting the provision for the re-sale of the properties and substituting therefor an inquiry into the purchase-money payable by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with interest on the above footing.

Now we come to the objections raised by the respondents. But before dealing with them we may refer to two objections raised by the added respondent, the legal representative of the deceased defendant No. 1. His first objection is that though he has been added as a respondent on the application of appellant No. 2 (defendant No. 2) that is effective only for the purpose of the appeal and that as respondents Nos. 1 and 2 have not made a separate application to implead the legal representatives of the deceased defendant No. 1 in the memorandum of objections he cannot be deemed to be a party to the memorandum of objections so as to be bound by adverse finding against defendant No. 1, if any, arrived at therein. This, in our opinion, is an incorrect view. Defendant No. 1 was originally impleaded in the memorandum of objections.

It is true that on his death pending the appeal, there was no separate application to bring his legal representatives on the memorandum of objections apart from the application by the co-appellant himself to bring on the record of the appeal. This, in our opinion, was sufficient to implead the legal representatives of the deceased defendant No. 1 for the purposes both of the appeal in which he was originally a party (appellant) and of the memorandum of objections to which also he was originally made a party. For this purpose the memorandum of objections and the appeal itself cannot be regarded as two separate proceedings requiring that the same party should be impleaded by two separate applications for the same purpose. Order XLI, r. 22 (4), Civil Procedure Code, was relied upon as showing that an appeal and a memorandum of objections have now been regarded as separate proceedings as it is now the law that though the original appeal is withdrawn or dismissed for default, the memorandum of objections has still to be proceeded with. That provision was inserted in the Code of 1908 to alter the law which existed before, that when for any reason such as withdrawal or dismissed for default, the appeal ceased to be pending, the memorandum of objections fell with it.

But this provision has not the effect of making the two distinct proceedings for the purpose now contended that where a party is already impleaded both in the appeal and the memorandum of objections, two separate applications are necessary to bring his legal representatives on the record. No authority was cited for this contention and the only one which was referred to, Venkatachariar v. Ponnappa Aiyengar (1), is rather against than in favour of the contention. We disallow it. Another contention of the added respondent was he cannot be impleaded on account of breach of trust which may be established against the deceased defendant No. 1. According to the learned Advocate the cause of action for breach of trust does not survive against the legal representatives of a deceased trustee but dies with him. This is quite incorrect as the legal representatives of a deceased trustee can certainly be proceeded against in respect of breaches of trust by the deceased. The manner in which and the extent to which they will be liable are different matters but ordinarily there can be no doubt that the assets of the deceased in their hands are liable for the breaches of trust: Lewin, Edn. 13, p. 949, Hardwicke v. Vernon (2).

Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 first object that the trustees should have been made liable for taking no steps to get in the outstandings due to the business carried on by defendants Nos. 5 to 8 at Colombo. The trust deed (Ex. 1) does contain a general clause at the end vesting in the trustees for the benefit of the creditors all other properties of the debtors besides those enumerated in the schedules. But the schedules which appear to have been carefully drawn up do not mention any outstandings at Colombo as due to the debtors. But if it were shown that the trustees had reasonable grounds to know that there were any such outstandings, they would still be liable to exercise reasonable diligence to realise them. As a matter of fact there is no evidence of a tangible character to show that there were any outstandings worth pursuing at Colombo. The trustees themselves required the debtors to produce all their books including the Colombo accounts, but it appears from the evidence of D. W. No. 6, who was looking after the management of the trust under the trustees and of D. W. No. 27 (defendant No. 2), that the Colombo accounts were not produced. There is nothing, however, to show that the trustees received any later information of any outstandings at Colombo nor is there in this case, in which 44 witnesses were in all examined, anything to show that there was any such outstanding. In the absence of any such proof the only conclusion possible is that the plaintiffs have failed to establish any negligence or breach of trust against the trustees in this matter.

The second objection relates to the sale of the Vijiyapuram mill. The facts about this property are that after the fruitless attempts to sell the properties referred to already, the mill which had cost the debtor's family Rs. 19,500 to erect was finally sold for Rs. 5,050 at an auction held on December 5, 1925, to one Chidambara Thevan. It is now admitted that this Chidambara Thevan was an alias for the firm of defendant No. 4 and his partner. This defendant No. 4 who was one of the trustees was also the person who was put in charge of the mill pending the sale and also of some properties belonging to the trust in that village. Thus the price was really payable by defendant No. 4 and his partner. Quite apart from the gross impropriety of allowing a trustee himself to buy trust property of which all these trustees, viz., defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 seem to have been guilty, there was in this case the additional breach of trust of not insisting upon the payment of the price; for it is now admitted that no portion of this price has ever been paid and defendant No. 4 also did not account to his co-trustees for the income of the trust properties in his charge. The mill stood on some leasehold property. The lease expired. Defendant No. 4's firm re-sold the mill to third parties who removed the materials of the mill from the premises. Thus the trust has lost both the trust property and the price therefor as a result of the action of the trustees. Therefore they had to institute a suit (O. S. No. 14 of 1929) for the recovery of the price and the income from the village with interest thereon less the dividend due to the firm as creditors.

They obtained a decree for Rs. 5,453-1-0 against the firm, i. e., defendant No. 4 and one Khadir Ibrahim Rowther. Defendant No. 4 is described as quite unable to pay anything. Whether anything will be recovered from the other defendant cannot now be stated. These facts which have not in any way been controverted, furnish an instance of very grave breach of trust on the part of these trustees. It was bad enough for the trustees to buy trust properties for themselves but, to do so without even paying the price for which they bought was scarcely honest. Trustees are not authorised to give possession of property comprised in a trust for sale before receiving the purchase money: Lewin, Edn. 13, p. 1072; Godefroi, Edn. 5, p. 321 citing Oliver v. Court (3). The learned Judge's only ground for not visiting the trustees with the consequence of this act was that the plaintiffs did not make out a specific charge in the plaint. But as the evidence and the judgment show, the facts which were elicited at the trial were incapable of dispute and it is, therefore, necessary to deal with the point in a suit brought for breach of trust. For the reasons given already for the purchase of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and for the additional reason that the mill can no longer be traced, the only course left is to make the trustees liable for the money due to the trust which we may take as fairly represented by the decree amount in O. S. No. 14 of 1929 with interest thereon as provided therein. The trustees who obtained that decree may if they pay their money to the trust according to the directions in the decree execute it for their personal benefit and recover what they can from the judgment-debtors.

The third objection raised by the respondents is that the trustees have not maintained proper accounts or furnished them to plaintiffs on demand and that on the facts proved in the case an account should be ordered against them on the footing of wilful default. The learned Judge deals with this question of the accounts kept by the trustees in paras. 34 and 42. He found that the only account produced by the trustees was Ex. 12 and that it was not regularly and correctly kept from day to day but was mostly written up for the purpose of being produced in Court. In aid of this conclusion he referred to the fact that it is in the handwriting of Narayanasawami Ayyar who was not employed by the trustees before August 1925, that pp. 1 to 58 appear to have been written at the same time and that the book contains entries of payments not on the dates they should occur but on subsequent dates and he also points out other inaccuracies. With much of this criticism it is impossible not to agree, but we are not prepared to say that Ex. 12 is a fabrication which does not represent as far as it goes a bona fide presentation of the income and expenditure of the trust funds. It must be remembered that the trustees themselves are not accountants. They are mirasdars and agriculturists. The men employed by them, viz., Chandrasekharam Pillai and Pakkiria, were apparently not capable of maintaining accounts in proper form. Exhibit 12 which is written by D. W. No. 6, Narayanaswami Ayyar, is also in this sense not above criticism as an account book. The more important question, however, is whether Ex. 12 as far as it goes can be shown to be untrue in the sense that the actual receipts are not entered or the expenditure entered is fictitious or excessive. After the discussion which this matter has undergone in the lower Court and before us, except as to the matters in which the trustees can be made liable for breach of trust, our attention has not been drawn to any instance in which Ex. 12 has been shown to be untrue by omitting to enter actual receipts or by entering untrue disbursement.

The faults of Ex. 12 are really due to the faults in the mode of account keeping. They are not faults involving dishonesty or misconduct. We do not say that the trustees were justified in not heeding the notice Ex. CC, dated December 6, 1926, given to them before the suit by the plaintiffs for the disclosure of their accounts and if they had done so many of their difficulties in this case would have been minimised. Therefore, if for no other reason they have been personally visited with the costs by the lower Court, an order fully justified by numerous authorities, Springett v. Dashwood (4), Wroe v. Seed (5). And if for no other reason than that an accounting party not rendering accounts properly but retaining trust moneys (such as the unpaid purchase moneys due by them on the several benami purchases) in their hands must pay interest even if the debt by its nature does not carry interest, these trustees must pay interest: Pearse v. Green (6). But we are unable to agree with the learned Judge when he says that Ex. 12 is not a true account of the trust estate. We do not mean that it is not necessary to take an account for that has not been done. What we mean is that the account to be taken must be a common account which will give the plaintiffs liberty to surcharge and falsify: see Peary Mohan v. Manohar (7), citing In re Stevens; Cooke v. Steens (8), but not an account on the footing of wilful default. Our reason for refusing to order an account on the ground of wilful default for the period covered by Ex. 12 is not that instances of wilful default have not been proved which might have justified such an order, but that the plaintiffs having ample opportunity of scrutinising Ex. 12 have made all their charges thereon to the lower Court by I. A. No. 300 of 1929 and we have considered them and incorporated our conclusions on such of them as are worthy of notice in the direction we propose to give. It will only lead to further acrimonious and protracted disputes to leave any such matters open.

The above, however, relates only to the period to which the account Ex. 12 relates, i. e., up to the end of 1928. Soon after this appeal was filed, a stay order was obtained from this Court staying practically the whole of the further proceedings contemplated by the preliminary decree passed by the learned Judge. All that has been done in pursuance of that decree is, we are informed, that Rs. 7,560-10-0 mentioned therein has been deposited by the trustees in Court and has been received by the plaintiffs and other creditors in payment of what remained due out of the 1½ annas in the rupee dividend declared by the trustees. In consequence of this the administration of the trust and maintenance of accounts have remained in the hands of the trustees up to date. The accounts subsequent to January 1, 1929, have not been produced into Court at all and this makes it necessary that the accounts for that period also should be taken. The evidence in the case naturally does not refer to this period nor to any matters arising therefrom. We have considered the basis on which this account should be ordered and have come to the conclusion that in view of what has been disclosed as to the period before December 31, 1928, in the first instance the account for this period also should be a common account with liberty to the plaintiffs to allege any further specific acts of wilful default within the subsequent period which may be disclosed from the account of that period to be hereafter produced.

To explain our meaning, we would refer to the distinction between the two ways in which an account on the footing of wilful default may be ordered: see Peary Mohan v. Manohar (7). We do not think that the evidence justifies an order for a general account on the footing of wilful default, but we direct that if on the accounts to be hereafter produced which the plaintiffs have had no opportunity to scrutinise, any particular transactions should be disclosed which are open to the charge of wilful default, the plaintiffs should have a chance of having those particular charges investigated. Even where the period from which such charges arise is such that they should be put on the pleadings and unless so put, the Court will not inquire into them at all, the mere fact that they are not on the pleadings will not prevent such charges from being raised if in the course of the investigation (of an account in common form) facts are ascertained which render it reasonable to believe, there has been wilful default and in such a case the Court will assist parties complaining of misconduct by trustees: Per Denman, J. in Smith v. Armitage (9) at p. 729*. Where, however, the period of the account to be investigated is after the suit and the charges could not therefore be put into the pleadings and instances of wilful defaults have been proved as to the period for which accounts are produced to give liberty to the plaintiffs to allege particular instances when they are discovered in the actual account taking is the only possible way of not shutting them out altogether without a hearing. The case cited by the learned Advocate-General In re Wrightson; Wrightson v. Cooke (10), was one of charging further breaches of trust and the distinction is there pointed out at pp. 793 and 800† between charging fresh breaches of trust not alleged in the pleadings for obtaining relief against the trustees on that ground or for removing them and the rule enabling further instances of wilful default to be proved on an account ordered on that basis. In English practice the former is not permissible but the latter is.

The fourth objection raised by the respondents relates to the interest on the unpaid purchase money due by defendant No. 2 on his purchase through Mahadeva Ayyar, amounting according to the statement furnished to us to Rs. 8,939-11-6, and on the payments made by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 long after the purchase money was due. We have already referred to this subject and propose to make suitable directions in the decree charging defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with interest for non-payment or late payment of the purchase moneys.

We have now dealt with the specific objections raised by the appellants and the respondents. As matters now stand, the surviving trustees do not object to their removal and it is not necessary to appoint new trustees for carrying out what remains of the trust as we are told that only one property (a small house in Thirumalavasal) remains to be sold. We have decided to get this done by an officer of Court and for the remainder it consists mostly of taking accounts and winding up this trust for sale which has already been pending too long. As a result, in modification of the decree of the lower Court, we declare as follows: (Their Lordships concluded with directions for drawing up the decree).

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 1161 of 1932

February 1, 1935

GANGA NATH, J.

PADUMAN DAS—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Shrimati PARBATI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Customary Right—Right of privacy—Suit to remove construction affecting right of privacy—Customary right of privacy must be proved to have existed—Party wall—Right of co-owner of party wall—Interference with reasonable use of wall—Co-owners—Minor—Implied permission to sue by guardian—Absence of formal order granting leave to sue—Whether fatal to suit.

In a suit for removal of constructions affecting the plaintiff's right of privacy, it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege that a customary right of privacy existed in the particular neighbourhood in which the plaintiff was living or that he individually or as a member of a particular class was entitled to take advantage of the customary right of privacy. Bhagwan Das v. Zamurrad Husain (1), referred to

Co-ownership implies that each co-owner should have a reasonable user of the thing owned in common and so long as each co-owner uses the wall reasonably without interfering with the enjoyment of that wall by the other party, or without doing anything which would weaken, damage or increase or diminish the wall enjoyed in common, he is entitled to do what he likes. A co-owner of a party wall has no right to do any act which may have the effect of excluding the other co-owner from the wall or interfere with his reasonable use of the wall.

In a suit by the guardian on behalf of the minor where implied permission of the Court to sue can be presumed, the absence of a formal order granting leave to sue is not necessarily fatal to the suit. Sridhar Rao v. Ram Lal (3), referred to.

Mr. K. Varma for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal and arises out of a suit brought by him against the defendants-respondents for a declaration that the western wall of house No. 24/70 situate in Mohalla Gopal Das Sahu, Benares City, appertains to house No. 24/70 which belongs to the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 and that it was not the eastern wall of house No. 24/68 which belongs to defendant-respondent No. 1, and that the plaintiff was not bound by decree No. 521 of 1925 in the case of Ganesh Das v. Srimati Parbati, defendant. The plaintiff further prayed for the demolition and removal of certain constructions alleged to have been made in the intervening wall in dispute as they interfered with the privacy of the plaintiff. The defendants contended that the suit was not maintainable under O. XXXIV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, that the wall in dispute was a joint wall of the parties and that the suit was barred by s. 11, Civil Procedure Code. Both the Courts below have found that the suit was barred by s. 11, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff Paduman Das is a minor. The former suit was brought by his brother Ganesh Das on his own behalf and that of plaintiff in respect of the same wall. The interest of Ganesh Das was not adverse to that of plaintiff, nor was plaintiff prejudiced in any way. Both the Courts below have found that the plaintiff is bound by the decree in the former suit.

As a matter of fact and quite independently of the former decision both the Courts below have found that the wall in dispute belongs to the parties. Both the Courts below dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In this appeal the first point urged is that the plaintiff's suit as regards the removal of the construction which affected his right of privacy should have been decreed. The Courts below have found that the plaintiff's privacy is not affected by the constructions in dispute. There is another fatal defect to this part of the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff did not come into Court on the basis of any customary right of privacy. As held in Bhagwan Das v. Zamurrad Husain (1), it was necessary for the plaintiff to have alleged that a customary right of privacy existed in the particular neighbourhood in which the plaintiff was living or that he individually or as a member of a particular class was entitled to take advantage of the customary right of privacy. As against this, both the Courts below have recorded a finding that on all sides there are houses which overlooked the plaintiff's house and interfered with the plaintiff's right of privacy. The plaintiff's suit, therefore, has been rightly dismissed as regards his relief concerning his right of privacy. The other point urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant was that the defendants have no right to rest their beams on any portion of the wall. It appears from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the respondents have placed their beams about 6 inches inside the wall towards their side and have covered the wall with plaster. The lower Court has observed:

"Some portion of the beams has been covered by the plaster, and as such, there is practically no support of it nor any interference has been caused nor she has done any act as to make the wall exclusively her own."

Co-ownership implies that each co-owner should have a reasonable user of the thing owned in common and so long as each co-owner uses the wall reasonably without interfering with the enjoyment of that wall by the other party, or without doing anything which would weaken, damage or increase or diminish the wall enjoyed in common, he is entitled to do what he likes. A co-owner of a party wall has no right to do any act which may have the effect of excluding the other co-owner from the wall or interfere with his reasonable use of the wall. Nothing has been done by the respondents which might tend to interfere with the reasonable use of the appellant. In Baij Nath v. Janki Prasad, 127 Ind. Cas. 585 (2), an order refusing to restrain a co-owner of a party wall from opening an almirah in the wall and from placing some beams of his side of the wall was upheld. The lower Courts, therefore, rightly refused to grant an injunction to the appellant. A preliminary objection was raised by the learned Counsel for the respondents that inasmuch as the plaintiff had a certificated guardian, this suit which has been brought by the minor under the guardianship of Ranchor Das who is not a certificated guardian is not maintainable. Both the Courts below have held that implied permission of the Court would be presumed and I think rightly because the suit has not been dismissed on the ground of want of permission. The absence of a formal order granting leave to sue is not necessarily fatal to the suit: vide Sridhar Rao v. Ram Lal (3). There is no force in the appeal. It is, therefore, ordered that the appeal be dismissed with costs and the decree of the lower Court confirmed.

Permission to file a Letters Patent Appeal is refused.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 976 of 1933

RAMSUNDER TEWARI AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

DULHIN BATASO KUER—PLAINTIFF —RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 116—Tenant holding over after expiry of lease—Institution of suit for rent—Effect—Tenancy from year to year—Whether can be presumed—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 51—Rent to be paid by such tenant.

If a tenant holds over after the expiry of his lease he ordinarily becomes a trespasser, unless the landlord in some manner signifies his intention of recognizing the continuance of the tenancy. Such intention will be sufficiently indicated by institution of a suit for rent. When the tenant is found to be continuing in possession he will be presumed to be a tenant from year to year, in the absence of any evidence providing that he holds on a different tenure.

As for the amount of rent payable, in the absence of evidence of a special contract varying the amount to be paid, he provisions of s. 51, Bengal Tenancy Act will apply, since those provisions apply to all agricultural tenancies: and from year to year the rent which was payable in the previous year will be presumed to be the rent payable for the holding. In the absence of proof of any contrary arrangement he must be deemed to be governed by the same conditions as governed his tenancy while he was holding under the kabuliyat.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Shahabad, dated June 9, 1933, reversing that of the Munsif, Sasaram, dated November 23, 1932.

Mr. Harinandan Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. N. Varma, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This second appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent instituted in the following circumstances. The defendant, who is a proprietor in his estate gave a usufructuary mortgage of bakasht land to the plaintiff who then leased the land to the defendant for a term of three years, reserving an annual rent of 26 maunds $3\frac{1}{2}$ seers of paddy. The lease expired in 1333 Fasli but the plaintiff stated that after the expiry of the lease it was being renewed annually and that the defendant continued to hold the land on the same terms as before. The defendant denied that he had continued to be the tenant of the plaintiff after the expiry of the term of the kabuliyat and the Munsif, finding that the renewal of the lease had not been proved, dismissed the suit. His decision was reversed on appeal by the District Judge who found that the defendant was still in possession of the land, and came to the conclusion that the defendant had voluntarily held over during the years in the suit with the consent of the plaintiff. Therefore, applying the principles of s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, he found that the defendant was liable to pay rent to the plaintiff at the rate specified in the kabuliat.

In coming to his conclusion the learned District Judge laid some stress on the entries in a khasra prepared by the Irrigation Department wherein were entered the names of persons who had taken a long lease of canal water. The defendant's name appears in this khasra of 1335 as indicating that he is the lessee under the Irrigation Department. The learned Advocate for the appellant argues that weight should not have been given to this khasra because it may have been merely a continuation of a previous khasra in which the name of the original lessee was continued as a matter of course. But the learned District Judge, discussing this khasra, has quoted the evidence of the plaintiff's husband, which he accepts, wherein this witness said that the khasra in question was prepared in 1335 Fasli for a seven years' lease in a certain man's name who had stood in that khasra, although he had transferred this holding in 1336, because the lease had originally been made with him in 1335. The learned District Judge accordingly considered that the entry of the defendant's name as having taken the lease in 1335 implied that he had not abandoned the cultivation of the land on the expiry of his kabuliyat in 1333. The learned District Judge has remarked that the presumption of correctness attaching to the entries has not been rebutted but apparently all that he means by this is, that this evidence, which is admissible under s. 35 of the Indian Evidence Act, does prima facie show that the defendant was cultivating the land in 1335 and that the defendant has not been able to rebut this evidence by proving that he has not been cultivating. The learned District Judge going on to discuss the case in general remarks that the defendant's story that he has quarrelled with the plaintiff over the question of premium payable on the plaintiff's entry on other land in the estate which he has puchased, rather supports the case of the plaintiff than that of the defendant, accounting for the fact that the defendant was contesting this suit; and he comes to the conclusion that the defendant had voluntarily held over in the years in suit with the tacit consent of the plaintiff. It would have been better if the learned District Judge had discussed the oral evidence in more detail, but I do not consider that it is possible to say that he has arrived at this conclusion on the point of fact without considering the evidence in the case.

It is argued that if the provisions of s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act are to be held to apply to the occupation of this land by the defendant, it must be proved that the defendant, holding over in this fashion, has agreed to pay the rent which he paid, and that the landlord has expressly consented to this holding over. If a tenant holds over after the expiry of his lease he ordinarily becomes a trespasser, unless the landlord in some manner signifies his intention of recognizing the continuance of the tenancy, which in the present instance is sufficiently indicated by the fact that the suit for rent has been instituted. If the plaintiff had sued the defendant for damages on account of his wrong occupation of his land, it would have been necessary, if the defendant wished to deny that he was a trespasser, that he should indicate that the landlord had in some way or other signified his intention of the continuance of the tenancy but that question does not arise when by the very form of his plaint the landlord recognizes the tenancy.

It may possibly be doubted whether the provisions of s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act apply as Statute Law to govern the relationsip of the parties in this case in view of the provisions of s. 117 of the Act, which excludes leases for agricultural purposes from the operation of Chap. V. The same doubt might apply to the application of s. 106 of the Act. But the rule laid down in s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act did not become part of the law of India for the first time by the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act. It was a rule which had been observed before the passing of this Act in the consideration of agricultural leases not governed by any special law. Therefore, when the defendant is found to be continuing in possession he will be presumed to be a tenant from year to year, in the absence of any evidence providing that he holds on a different tenure.

On the question of what would in such cases be deemed to be the amount of rent payable, in the absence of evidence of a special contract varying the amount to be paid, there can be no doubt that the provisions of s. 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act will apply since those provisions apply to all agricultural tenancies; and from year to year the rent which was payable in the previous year will be presumed to be the rent payable for the holding. It is possible that the tenant might here be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of s. 44-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, though I doubt whether he could be held to be a raiyat of his own bakasht land, merely because he has created a temporary intermediate tenure. However that may be, when we find that the defendant is holding over, it cannot be doubted that, in the absence of proof of any contrary arrangement, he must be deemed to be governed by the same conditions as governed his tenancy while he was holding under the kabuliyat. So that whether the learned District Judge has erred or not in regarding the provisions of s. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act as applicable, the conclusion at which the Court is to arrive in a suit of this kind for arrears of rent instituted by the landlord, will be the conclusion at which the learned District Judge has actually arrived; and in legal ground has been made for interfering with his decision.

The learned Advocate takes the objection that, although the plaintiff landlord treats his claim as a claim for rent, he has claimed interest at a rate which would not ordinarily be allowed in a rent suit. But this question has not been discussed by the learned District Judge, whose judgment omits any mention of interest, which is also omitted from the decree. The plaintiff has preferred no cross-objection on this point; and the decree must stand as it is. The plaintiff might probably have been able to claim interest as legally due by virtue of the provisions of s. 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but as he has omitted to make the claim in the appeal, there is no reason for making any alteration in the decree.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 162 of 1934

November 26, 1934

BACHCHA BABU AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 120-B—Charge of criminal conspiracy — Essentials to be proved—Evidence of association—When of value for prosecution —Approver—Corroboration, necessity of—Nature of corroboration required, in conspiracy cases—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, illus. (b), s. 45—Discrepancy between evidence of approver and of witnesses—Value of evidence — Criminal trial—Accused telling lie—Conviction, if can be based on it—Whether can be used to corroborate approver — Expert evidence—Document typed on same machine as another document—Admissibility of evidence.

To establish a charge of criminal conspiracy, the prosecution must prove an agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done some illegal act or some act which is not illegal by illegal means provided that where the agreement is other than one to commit an offence, the prosecution must go further and prove that some act besides the agreement was done by one or more of the parties in pursuance of it. Where the agreement, therefore, is one to do or cause to be done an act which is itself an offence, no overt act, i. e., any act done by one of the parties to the agreement in pursuance of it, need be proved; the crime of criminal conspiracy is established once such an agreement is proved. Consequently where the conspiracy alleged is one to commit a series of serious crimes mere proof of such an agreement between the appellants is sufficient to sustain a conviction. Proof of overt acts committed by the accused or any of them is not strictly necessary on this charge, but proof that the accused or some of them were concerned in the overt acts alleged would go far to establish that the agreement alleged was in fact made between them. Though proof of overt acts is not necessary in a case yet it may well be that if such acts are proved, the Court will be bound to infer that they are not unconnected and isolated acts, but acts which must have been committed in pursuance of an agreement made between the accused [p. 373, col. 1.]

Evidence of association to be of any value should suggest something suspicious in such association and no inference one way or another can be drawn from a mere casual meeting or meetings or conversation between the parties in a public place or park where mere acquaintances frequently meet and talk. [p 378, col. 2.]

The evidence of an approver has to be corroborated by some independent evidence. This rule is particularly necessary in cases of conspiracy to commit crimes where the crime of criminal conspiracy is established the moment an agreement between the accused persons to commit such crimes is proved. Evidence of a mere agreement can easily be concocted or manufactured, hence the need of independent testimony by way of corroboration is manifestly essential. To amount to corroboration the evidence must implicate the accused, i. e., it must confirm in some material particular not only the accomplice or approver's evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the accused committed it. The corroborative evidence need not shew positively that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial connecting him with the crime. It must be evidence which shews or tends to shew that the approver's evidence implicating the accused is true; it must be independent testimony on a material particular or material particulars demonstrating to the Court the truth of the approver's evidence implicating the accused. Evidence to amount to corroboration must be independent testimony and therefore the evidence of one approver cannot amount to corroboration of the evidence of another. Rex v. Baskerville (1), relied on. [p. 373, col. 2.]

Where there is a serious discrepancy between the evidence of the approver and that of witnesses, it makes it impossible for the Court to act upon such evidence either by itself or as corroboration of the approver's testimony.

The fact that an accused person tells a lie is not sufficient to convict him by itself, nor can it be corroboration of the approvers' statement. [p. 380, col. 1]

The opinion of an expert that one document has been type-written on the same machine as another document is not admissible under s. 45, Evidence Act. The Court may ask the witness points in favour of the view whether the two documents have or have not been type-written on the same machine, but must come to its own conclusion and not treat such assistance as an expert opinion, a relevant fact in itself. Jhabwala v. Emperor (2), relied on. Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated February 19, 1934.

Dr. K. N. Katju, Messrs. Hazari Lal Kapoor, S. B. L. Gaur, G. S. Pathak, Nanak Chand, K. D. Malaviya, Din Dayal, B. S. Darbari, Prabhat Kumar and S. N. Misra, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—In this case which has been referred to as the Agra Conspiracy Case all six appellants were charged with conspiracy, the charge being that between February 1931 and August 1932 at Agra, they jointly and severally agreed and conspired together with one another and with Dau Dayal, who is absconding, and also with Uma Shankar, Ram Nath and Vishwa Nath, approvers, and with other persons known or unknown and not before the Court, to do or cause to be done jointly and severally illegal acts, the illegal acts being to collect and possess firearms and ammunition and explosive substances, to commit attempts to murder, to commit dacoities and extortion which are offences under the Arms Act, the Explosive Substances Act, and the Penal Code. In the charge it was further alleged that in pursuance of the aforesaid conspiracy: (a) a revolver and an automatic pistol were stolen on February 19, 1931, and July 13, 1931, respectively; (b) a dacoity was committed in the godown of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram on March 14, 1932, in which firearms were used and a man was hurt: (c) another dacoity was committed on July 13, 1932, in the godown of one Jamna Das in which a man was killed; (d) an attempt was made on the life of S. O. I., Chatta, on April 1, 1932, by throwing a bomb behind his quarters; and (e) another attempt was made on the life of Anandi Lal on April 6, 1932, by placing a bomb at his house in Agra for the purposes of extorting money from him.

The appellant Bachcha Babu alias Kamta Prasad (hereinafter referred to as Bachcha Babu) was further charged: (1) That he abetted the commission of a dacoity before referred to at the house of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram on March 14, 1932, in which one Gulzari Khan received a bullet injury, the abetment being supplying arms to the dacoits which were used in the dacoity and subsequently recovered from his house contrary to s. 395-397, Penal Code, read with s. 109, Penal Code. (2) That he abetted the commission of a dacoity at the godown of Jamna Das on July 13, 1932, in which one Durga was killed by a revolver bullet, the abetment being supplying arms to the dacoits which were used in the dacoity and which were later recovered from his house contrary to s. 395-396, Penal Code, read with s. 109, Penal Code. (3) That on August 5, 1932, he was found in possession of a large number of weapons and arms which were recovered from a secret place in his house contrary to s. 20, Arms Act. (4) That on August 5, 1932, he was found in possession of two bottles containing picric acid and ammonia which are ingredients of a highly explosive nature under circumstances which raised a reasonable suspicion that they were not being kept for a lawful object contrary to s. 5, Explosive Substances Act. (5) That on August 5, 1932, he was found in possession of a pistol and a revolver which weapons had been stolen, well knowing that the same had been stolen or having reasonable grounds to believe that the same had been stolen contrary to s. 411, Penal Code.

The appellant Umrao Singh alias Nepali (hereinafter referred to as Nepali) was further charged: (1) That on April 1, 1932, at the Police Station, Chatta, in Agra City, he threw a bomb in a compound behind the said Police Station with intent to cause an explosion calculated to cause danger to human life or serious injury to property contrary to s. 4 (a), Explosive Substances Act. (2) That on July 13, 1932, he committed a dacoity in the godown of Jamna Das in which one Durga was killed by a shot fired by him.

The appellant, Rishi Nath was further charged that he on June 19, 1931, was found in possession of explosive substances in his shop in Kinar Bazar, Agra, which articles exploded and caused injury to his hand and that he was in possession of such articles under circumstances that raised a suspicion that they were not being kept for a lawful purpose contrary to s. 5, Explosive Substances Act. The appellant, Ram Singh was further charged that on July 13, 1931, in the house of his uncle Hakim Gyan Singh he stole a revolver belonging to Durvijey Singh who was staying there as a guest contrary to s. 380, Penal Code.

The appellant, Bengali Mal was further charged: (1) That on March 14, 1932, he committed dacoity in the godown of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram during which deadly weapons were used and Gulzari Khan received a bullet injury contrary to s. 395-397, Penal Code. (2) That on April 1, 1932, at Police Station, Chatta, he threw a bomb in a compound at the rear of the said Police Station with intent to cause an explosion and thereby endanger human life and property contrary to s. 4 (a), Explosive Substances Act. (3) That on April 6, 1932, he abetted the commission of an offence of extortion by supplying a typewriter upon which a threatening letter was typed and which was placed along with a bomb at the house of one Anandi Lal contrary to s. 387, Penal Code read with s. 109, Penal Code.

The appellant, Jwala, was further charged that on March 14, 1932, he committed dacoity at the godown of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram in which dacoity he was armed with deadly weapons and in which Gulzari Khan received a bullet wound. Before the learned Sessions Judge the appellants pleaded not guilty to all the charges. The appellant, Bachcha Babu was convicted on all the charges and sentenced to death under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with s. 395-396, Penal Code. On the charge under s. 20, Arms Act, he was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, on the charge under s. 5, Explosive Substances Act, to five years' rigorous imprisonment and on the charge under s. 411, Penal Code, to three years' rigorous imprisonment; the sentences to run concurrently. As he was convicted and sentenced for conspiracy, no separate sentences were imposed in respect of the charges of abetment of dacoities although he was found guilty and convicted in respect of each of the abetments.

The appellant, Nepali, was found guilty on all the charges and sentenced to death on the charge under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with s. 395-396, Penal Code. He was also convicted and sentenced to death on the charge under s. 395-396, Penal Code. On the charge under s. 4 (a), Explosive Substances Act, he was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The appellant, Rishi Nath was convicted on the charge of conspiracy contrary to s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. On the charge under s. 5, Explosive Substances Act, he was found not guilty and acquitted.

The appellant, Ram Singh, was convicted of conspiracy under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. On the charge under s. 380, Penal Code, he was convicted and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment; the sentences to run concurrently. The appellant, Bengali Mal, was convicted of conspiracy under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. On the charge under s. 395-397, Penal Code, he was convicted and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and on the charge under s. 4 (a), Explosive Substances Act, he was convicted and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment; the sentences to run concurrently. On the charge under s. 387, Penal Code, read with s. 109, Penal Code, he was convicted, but no separate sentence was given. The appellant, Jwala, was convicted on the charge of conspiracy and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and on the charge under s. 395-397, Penal Code, he was convicted and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment; these sentences to run concurrently. Against all these convictions the six appellants have preferred an appeal to this Court.

The case has proved to be a long and complicated one. In the Sessions Court 114 witnesses were called for the prosecution and the evidence of four other witnesses admitted. For the defence no less than 85 witnesses were examined and the evidence and arguments lasted, so we are told, 48 days. 253 exhibits were produced and proved before the Court. Before us the case has been argued on both sides with great force and we should like to express our appreciation of the ability and exemplary fairness displayed by all Counsel concerned. The appeal was a long and difficult one, but throughout we have received the greatest possible assistance from all Counsel in the fullest and frankest manner. The case for the prosecution was that Bachcha Babu was a dangerous revolutionary and that he together with the appellants and others had formed a conspiracy to promote revolutionary ideas and to assist in overthrowing the Government by force. Funds, however, were lacking for these unlawful purposes and it is alleged that these persons subsequently conspired together to steal arms and ammunition and by means of them commit armed dacoities for the purposes of obtaining money to carry out the above-mentioned revolutionary objects. Another method employed to obtain money, it is suggested, was extortion and in carrying out these various methods it is alleged that firearms and explosive substances were freely used and that in one case a person was seriously injured and in the other case actually murdered.

The existence of such a conspiracy, it is stated, had been suspected for sometime and the Police acting on information in their possession, raided the house of Bachcha Babu on August 5, 1932. Two previous searches of this house had been made, but nothing incriminating had been found, but on this last occasion there was found cunningly concealed in a space between a false and the real ceiling of the latrine a pistol, four revolvers, four knives, ammunition in a packet, percussion caps, a hilt of a knife of dagger with a broken piece of blade attached and two bottles. In other parts of the premises were found an air pistol concealed in some bedding, a large bottle containing liquid, pieces of glass, two torches, a bullet and a picture pierced with holes alleged to have been caused by target practice with an air pistol. The bottles were subsequently found to to contain picric acid and ammonia, substances which when mixed together form a highly explosive mixture and is frequently used for the purpose of making bombs.

On the premises were found Bachcha Babu, Vishwa Nath who subsequently became an approver, and one Sarju Prasad. These persons were immediately arrested and taken to the Kotwali and, according to the prosecution Vishwa Nath evinced an immediate desire to confess and there and then made a statement to the Police. Presumably in consequence of that statement Rishi Nath, Ram Singh and Uma Shankar were arrested the same day and in the evening about 9 P. M. Uma Shankar also made a statement to the Police. On August 7, 1932, Bengali Mal was arrested and on August 19, 1932, Ram Nath, who later became an approver, was arrested in his own house at Agra and made a statement to the Police the moment he arrived at the Kotwali. On October 4, 1932, Nepali was arrested at Bharan, his native village, and on November 16, 1932, Jwala was arrested at Bhind in Gwalior State. Sarju Prasad, though arrested in Bachcha Babu's house, was only detained three days and then released presumably for want of evidence. Uma Shankar, Vishwa Nath and Ram Nath having each expressed a desire to confess were placed before a Magistrate and their confessions were recorded on August 7, 8 and 27, respectively. It is to be noted, however, that Uma Shankar did not complete his confession on the August 7, owing, it is alleged, to the fact that he was too tired, but it was completed on the following day.

These confessions, it is suggested, made it clear that a conspiracy, as alleged, did in fact, exist. These confessing accused referred to a number of crimes which up to that time had never been satisfactorily cleared up and consequently investigation was continued with the greatest vigour. As stated previously, arrests were made and the facts relating to these previous undetected crimes were thoroughly inquired into. These crimes were: (1) The theft of a revolver from the house of Mr. Kehri Singh, Vakil at Agra, on February 19, 1931. Investigation showed that this revolver was amongst the weapons found at Bachcha Babu's house on the raid of August 5, 1932. (1) The theft of a revolver from the house of Hakim Gyan Singh on July 13, 1931. Investigation showed that this revolver was amongst the weapons recovered from Bachcha Babu's house. (3) On March 14, 1932, a dacoity had taken place in the godown of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram in Gali Bara Bhai, Agra. In this dacoity which was unsuccessful five or six dacoits participated and a number of shots were fired, one wounding Gulzari Khan Chaukidar in the left thigh. Bullets and cartridges were recovered from the scene of this dacoity and it is alleged that later investigation showed that these bullets and cartridges were fired from one of the revolvers found in Bachcha Babu's house. (4) On April 1, 1932, a bomb was thrown at the rear of the Police Station, Chatta, in the city of Agra. Explosive materials found on the premises of Bachcha Babu, it was suggested, might well have been used to make such a bomb. (5) On April 6, 1932, a bomb together with a threatening letter was placed in the house of one Anandi Lal. According to the Police, investigation showed that the letter which was typed, had been typed upon a typewriter belonging to Bengali Mal's father and to which Bengali Mal had access. (6) On July 13, 1932, a serious dacoity had taken place at the godown of Jamna Das in Gali Bara Bhai, Agra, in which Durga Prasad was killed.

In this dacoity firearms were used and bullets and cartridges found on the scene afterwards. It is alleged by the Police that investigation showed that these bullets and cartridges had been fired from a revolver which was recovered from Bachcha Babu's house during the raid.

As a result of these investigations into these various crimes and the approver's statements, the Police were satisfied that these were not isolated crimes, but must have been committed in pursuance of an agreement or conspiracy and consequently a charge of conspiracy under s. 120-B, Penal Code, was launched against the appellants who, with others, had been implicated by the confessing accused who later became approvers. In the event of the failure to prove this charge of conspiracy, the charges indicated previously were brought against the individual appellants in respect of the various crimes in which, it is alleged, they had participated. To establish a charge of criminal conspiracy the prosecution must prove an agreement between two or more persons to do or cause to be done some illegal act or some act which is not illegal by illegal means provided that where the agreement is other than one to commit an offence, the prosecution must go further and prove that some act besides the agreement was done by one or more of the parties in pursuance of it. Where the agreement therefore is one to do or cause to be done an act which is itself an offence, no overt act, i. e., any act done by one of the parties to the agreement in pursuance of it, need be proved; the crime of criminal conspiracy is established once such an agreement is proved.

In the present case the conspiracy alleged is one to commit a series of serious crimes and therefore mere proof of such an agreement between the appellants is sufficient to sustain a conviction. Proof of overt acts committed by the appellants or any of them is not strictly necessary on this charge, but needless to say proof that the appellants or some of them were concerned in the overt acts alleged would go far to establish that the agreement alleged was in fact made between them. Though proof of overt acts is not necessary in this case yet it may well be that if such acts are proved, the Court will be bound to infer that they are not unconnected and isolated acts, but acts which must have been committed in pursuance of an agreement made between the appellants such as that alleged.

To prove the case of conspiracy against the appellants the prosecution relied in the main upon the evidence of the three accomplices Vishwa Nath. P. W. No. 2, Ram Nath, P. W. No. 3 and Uma Shankar, P. W. No. 4, who became approvers in the case. There is no rule of law in India which prevents a Court convicting on the sole evidence of an approver, but adopting the practice which has for many years been followed in England no Court in this country will convict an accused person upon such evidence unless it is corroborated by some independent testimony. The reasons for this very salutary rule of English practice were given in the judgment of the Court in well-known case of Rex v. Baskerville (1), and these reasons apply in our judgment with equal, if not greater, force to the conditions existing in India. The necessity for corroboration of the evidence of an approver has been emphasised time and again in recent Indian decisions and this rule of practice has now become in India, though possibly not in England, as binding upon the Courts as a rule of law. Such a rule is particularly necessary in cases of conspiracy to commit crimes where the crime of criminal conspiracy is established the moment an agreement between the accused persons to commit such crimes is proved. Evidence of a mere agreement can easily be concocted or manufactured, hence the need of independent testimony by way of corroboration is manifestly essential.

In Rex v. Baskerville (1), previously cited the Court of Criminal Appeal in England considered what evidence could and could not properly be regarded as corroboration. In that case which has been followed and approved many times by this and other Courts in India, it was laid down that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony connecting or tending to connect the accused with the crime. To amount to corroboration the evidence must implicate the accused, i. e., it must confirm in some material particular not only the accomplice or approver's evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the accused committed it. The corroborative evidence need not shew positively that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial connecting him with the crime. It must be evidence which shews or tends to shew that the approver's evidence implicating the accused is true; it must be independent testimony on a material particular or material particulars demonstrating to the Court the truth of the approver's evidence implicating the accused. Evidence to amount to corroboration must be independent testimony and therefore the evidence of one approver cannot amount to corroboration of the evidence of another. The fact that a witness is an approver creates a suspicion in the mind of the Court and that suspicion cannot be removed by merely calling another approver. To hold that one approver could corroborate another would result in wiping out the salutary rule that independent testimony is required by way of corroboration of such evidence and this indeed has been conceded by the Crown in this case. The Government Advocate with his customary frankness admitted that he could not ask us to convict the appellants unless the evidence of these three approvers was corroborated by other witnesses who were not themselves in the alleged conspiracy. In the present case, therefore, the Court cannot convict upon the charge of conspiracy or any of the other charges upon the evidence of the three approvers unless there is independent testimony on a material particular or material particulars which, in our judgment, shews that the approvers' evidence implicating the accused in the conspiracy or in the other crimes charged against them is true.

It was contended, however, by the prosecution that there was in this case ample independent testimony of the character previously indicated which clearly shewed that the approvers were speaking the truth when implicating the accused in the various crimes with which they were charged. With these considerations in mind it will now be convenient to consider in some detail the various classes of evidence adduced by the prosecution to establish their case.

Before discussing the evidence of each individual approver it will be convenient at this stage to make some general observations upon the evidence of the three of them. All three showed a most extraordinary and immediate desire to confess, and it is difficult to believe that such a desire was genuine. Vishwa Nath, who was arrested at Bachcha Babu's house in the raid on August 5, 1932, made a statement that very evening to the Police, and although the terms of that statement were not before us, we can safely presume that it was in the nature of a confession because he was placed before a Magistrate on August 8, and his confession recorded. Uma Shankar was arrested later in the day on August 5, 1932, and likewise made a statement that very evening. His confession was recorded on August 7 and 8. So it will be seen that within three days of the raid which gave rise to this charge of conspiracy, two of the accused had actually confessed before a Magistrate.

Ram Nath was not arrested until August 19, but he admitted that he made a statement the moment he arrived at the Kotwali, and on August 24, his confession was recorded by a Magistrate. Further it is admitted that in the entry in the jail register these three persons were from the first described as approvers, and no satisfactory explanation has ever been forthcoming as to how this entry came to be made. It would appear that from the very outset these persons were to be regarded as approvers and therefore it has been suggested on behalf of the defence that these three persons were tools of the Police and were nothing more than Police spies. Again from the outset these three approvers were treated differently from the other co-accused. In evidence they admitted that they never wore fetters as the others did, and the learned Magistrate who committed the appellants, noted at the request of their Counsel that the approvers appeared in Court well dressed and well groomed and in a condition very different from the other appellants. According to the note, Uma Shankar was actually wearing a flower in his coat whilst the other accused were wearing fetters. This undoubted preferential treatment causes grave suspicion in our minds, and though the defence have not satisfied us that these approvers were nothing more than spies or informers, the prosecution have themselves to blame for such a suggestion being made by Counsel on behalf of the appellants. We must express our disapproval of such conduct on the part of the prosecution.

Further it is on the record that the warrant for the arrest of Ram Nath was actually issued on August 11, 1932; whereas he was not arrested until August 19, when the arrest took place at his house in the outskirts of the city of Agra. Ram Nath explains this failure to execute the warrant by saying that he had after the raid fled from his home to Neemuch. In cross examination, however, he could not say with whom he had stayed or whether his alleged host was a relative of a friend of his or not. In short, he could give no explanation of his stay at Neemuch, and we cannot accept his statement that he ever stayed at Neemuch or in fact ever left his home. It follows therefore that the failure to execute the warrant and to arrest Ram Nath until August 19, is wholly unexplained, and this delay and the overwhelming desire to confess the moment he arrived at the Kotwali raises in our minds most serious doubts as to the voluntary nature and genuineness of this confession.

If Ram Nath, who had been implicated by Uma Shankar, had not left Agra, the Police could have arrested him immediately. The fact that he was not arrested suggests that he was being used for some purpose.

Again all three approvers give the same reason for confessing, namely, a desire to speak the truth and to expiate their sins, an explanation which we find impossible to believe in the circumstances of this case. There is another extraordinary feature in these confessions which is obvious to any one on a most cursory reading of them. In each case the general scheme and order of the confession is the same. Each begins with the history of his childhood, boyhood and early education. Each then goes on to describe how he became interested in politics and how later he became involved in revolutionary politics. Then follows an account of his introduction to Bachcha Babu and then a full account of the part which he and others played in the conspiracy. How three young men with only very ordinary education came independently of each other to make detailed confessions in precisely the same manner following exactly the same order is difficult to understand. The similarity in the general scheme and order of these confessions is amazing, and we cannot believe that it is a mere coincidence. In our view there was a mind guiding the minds of these three confessing accused and that the general scheme and order of facts adopted by each emanated from that guiding mind and not from the minds of the approvers. No suggestion has been made against the learned Magistrate who recorded all three confessions, and therefore in our view the inference is irresistible that the approvers were carefully coached by some one before they were taken before the Magistrate.

A comparison between the confession of Uma Shankar and that of Ram Nath discloses further disquieting features. The gaps left by Uma Shankar appear to have been carefully closed up by Ram Nath whose confessno was recorded some three weeks pter. But it will be more convenient to discuss these features when dealing with the evidence of each individual approver. (After dealing with their evidence in turn, his Lordship proceeded). From the foregoing summary of the evidence of the three approvers it will be seen that all three deposed to a conspiracy as alleged by the prosecution and that Bachcha Babu was the leader of it. Uma Shankar and Ram Nath further depoed that the appellants Nepali, Rishi Nath, Bengali Mal and Ram Singh were members of this conspiracy and Uma Shankar further stated that Jwala was also in he conspiracy. All three deposed to the fact that Bachcha Babu kept arms, amunition and explosive substances on his premises and that such were kept for the purpose of dacoities and terrorism. Uma Shankar and Rishi Natn make it clear that it was Bachcha Babu who enginereed and provided arms for these dacoities.

Uma Shakar and Ram Nath implicate Nepali, Rishi Nath Bengali Mal and Ram Singh in the dacoity of July 13, 1932, at the godown of Jamna Das. Both also implicate Nepali and Bengali Mal in the bomb incident at Chatta thana though neither were concerned in the affair. They deposed that they were told of the incident by Bachcha Babu and other members of the conspiracy. They also implicated Ram Singh in the theft of the pistol from the house of his uncle Hakim Gyan Singh whilst Uma Shankar deposed further to the fact that it was Bachcha Babu who arranged for the placing of the bomb at Anandi Lal's house and actually handed the bomb and the typewritten letter to Dau Dayal who placed it there. Uma Shankar further stated that the letter had been typed by or with the assistance of Bengali Mal.

Objection was taken by Counsel for the appellants to the admissibility of the statements made to the approvers by one appellant implicating the others. In certain circumstances such statements might be admissible by reason of s. 10, Evidence Act. Having regard, however, to the view which we take of the evidence regarding the alleged conspiracy in this case it is unnecessary for us to decide whether such evidence is or is not admissible.

Apart from the evidence of the approvers, the prosecution called a large number of witnesses to establish either directly or by way of corroboration of the approvers' evidence, the guilt of the appellants. It was contended on behalf of the Crown that this evidence taken by itself or together with the approvers' testimony showed that there was a conspiracy as alleged and that the appellants were parties to it, and further that the individual appellants were guilty of the crimes specifically charged against them. The object of this evidence was to show that the various criminal acts alleged were not isolated acts independent of each other but were so linked up one with the other as to give rise to an irresistible inference that they were committed by persons acting together in furtherance of a common intention and object. In short, that there were common factors in all these criminal acts and that such common factors proved the complicity of Bachcha Babu in each of them, and the other appellants in some, if not all of them.

It is, therefore, necessary to consider this evidence in some detail to ascertain whether it establishes the guilt of the appellants independently of the approvers' evidence or, if it does not, whether it is sufficient corroboration of the approvers testimony to warrant a Court acting upon the latter. (After examining the evidence of some of the witnesses his Lordship proceeded). Mr. Scott also gave evidence with a view to showing that the letter found with bomb at Anandi Lal's house on April 6, 1932, was typed on a typewriting machine proved to have been in the possession of Bengali Mal's father and to which Bengali Mal had access. Evidence of this kind cannot be regarded as expert evidence as it has been laid down in the well-known Meerut Conspiracy case: Jhabwala v. Emperor (2), that the opinion of an expert that one document has been type-written on the same machine as another document is not admissible under s. 45, Evidence Act.

The Court may ask the witness points in favour of the view whether the two documents have or have not been type-written on the same machine, but must come to its own conclusion and not treat such assistance as an expert opinion a relevant fact in itself. We called for and saw the original letter placed with the bomb and letters admittedly typed on this type-writing machine. Further we caused various letters of the alphabet to be typed in our presence on this machine and examined and compared them with the letter placed with the bomb. Again we found similarities and differences and we are not satisfied that the incriminating letter was typed on the type-writing machine proved to have been in possession of Bengali Mal's father. In any event even if the letter had been typed on this type-writer the prosecution would still have to prove that either Bengali Mal typed or caused it to be typed or permitted the use of the machine. There is no evidence of any kind before us suggesting either of these alternatives.

Mr. B. N. Pal, P. W. No. 98, an authority on explosives was called to prove that substances said to have been found near the Chatta Thana after the explosion were fragments of an explosive bomb and that picric acid and ammonia mixed together form a highly explosive substance. Even if this evidence is accepted, it proves nothing, for it in no way connects Bachcha Babu or any other of the appellants with the actual bomb which was thrown at the rear of the Chatta Thana. Bachcha Babu may have kept ammonia and picric acid for the purpose of making bombs, but it in no way proves that the actual bomb which exploded at the Chatta Thana was made by Bachcha Babu or out of materials in Bachcha Babu's possession.

Upon the evidence already discussed other than that of the approvers, we are satisfied that arms, ammunition and explosive substances were found at Bachcha Babu's house and that they had been secreted there by Bachcha Babu for some unlawful purpose. We are further satisfied that two of the weapons found on the premises were weapons which had been stolen from the houses of Kehri Singh and Hakim Gyan Singh and that Bachcha Babu either knew that they had been stolen or had good grounds for believing that they had been stolen. We are not satisfied, however, that Bachcha Babu instigated the thefts of these revolvers or that they were stolen in pursuance of any conspiracy. Though the mode of concealment convinces us that these weapons, ammunition and explosives were intended for some unlawful purpose; the evidence does not satisfy us that there was any connection between these arms, ammunition and explosives and the two dacoities and the bomb incidents at the Chatta Thana and the house of Anandi Lal.

In short, the evidence already discussed other than that of the approvers, does not of itself prove a conspiracy in which Bachcha Babu was the central figure and further affords no corroboration of the approvers' evidence that such a conspiracy existed. This evidence does not establish any common factors between the arms, ammunition and explosive substances found at Bachcha Babu's house and the various criminal offences which it is alleged are the overt acts of this conspiracy.

A large number of witnesses were also called with regard to the various overt or criminal acts alleged. These were called with a view to proving the factum of each particular overt or criminal act and to identify the persons concerned in the commission of such act. It was the submission of the prosecution that this evidence also showed that these acts were the result of a conspiracy, as a number of the appellants were identified as taking part in the various crimes and that in each crime a connection with Bachcha Babu was established. This according to the prosecution went beyond the realm of coincidence and permitted of only one inference, namely, that Bachcha Babu and the appellants were acting together with a common intention and object and that these crimes were committed in pursuance of such common intention or object. Further this evidence was also tendered to prove the guilt of the individual appellants in respect of the specific crimes which were charged against them.

Again it is necessary to examine this evidence to ascertain whether it establishes a conspiracy and the participation of the various appellants in it and in the overt acts alleged to have been committed in pursuance of it, or if it does not, whether it amounts to sufficient corroboration of the approvers' evidence to sustain a conviction for conspiracy or for any of the other crimes charged against the appellants. This class of evidence is concerned in the main with three incidents: (a) the unsuccessful dacoity at the house of Manorath Bhagat Dhyan Ram on March 14, 1932; (b) the bomb explosion at the Chatta Thana on April 1, 1932; and (c) the dacoity attended with murder at the godown of Jumna Das on July 13, 1932. It will be convenient therefore to deal with the evidence with regard to each incident separately to ascertain whether the appellants or any one of them were concerned in each particular crime. (a) Dacoity at house of Manorath Bhagat Dhyan Ram on March 14, 1932.

That such a dacoity took place is beyond question and is not challenged by the appellants. The witnesses, Gulzar Khan, P. W. No. 21, Deo Narain, P. W. No. 10, Sohanpal, P. W. No. 20, Inderjit, P. W. No. 33 and Sukhdeo Prasad, P. W. No. 12, prove it beyond doubt. In this dacoity revolvers were fired and Gulzar Khan was hit in the left leg. This witness later identified Jawla as one of the dacoits at an identification parade in Bhind jail. Deo Narain also identified Jwala at Bhind jail and Bengali Mal at an identification parade in Agra jail. The witnesses Sohanlal, Inder Jit and Sukhdeo Prasad failed to identify any one.

The identification of Jwala by two witnesses and Bengali Mal by only one witness might, if the identification was satisfactory be sufficient to convict them of the dacoity particularly when they have been both implicated by approvers. An examination of the record, however, shows that these identifications were far from satisfactory. The identification proceedings at Agra were carried out in the presence of Mr. Triloki Nath, a Magistrate of the First Class, and in his report and evidence he stated that Deo Narain, though he identified Bengali Mal correctly, made one mistake identifying one non-suspect. In our judgment it would not be safe to convict Bengali Mal on this evidence alone or upon the approvers' statement corroborated only by such an identification. (After further examining the evidence, the judgment proceeded). There is, therefore, a very serious discrepancy between the statements of the approvers and the evidence of these witnesses which makes it impossible for us to act upon such evidence either by itself or as corroboration of the approvers' testimony.

Raghbar, P. W. No. 17, saw the party that night and in jail identified Uma Shankar. He, however, failed to identify him in Court and consequently his evidence is worthless. Sham Lal, P. W. No. 35, deposed to the fact that he spoke to Ram Nath and Rishi Nath late in the evening upon which the dacoity took place. The point at which he met them was a matter of a mile and a half or so from the scence of the dacoity. There appears to be no reason why this witness who knew Rishi Nath and Ram Nath well should have remembered this incident. But even if it took place, it does not in our view amount to corroboration of the approvers' statement. He might well have met these persons at the time he did; but even if he did, it does not in any way corroborate the approvers' statement that Rishi Nath and Ram Nath were present earlier in the evening at the scene of the dacoity a mile and a half away.

In our judgment the evidence of these eye-witnesses of the party proceeding to and from the dacoity at Jumna Das's godown is worthless and is neither direct proof that the appellants or any of them were concerned in the dacoity nor corroboration of the approvers' statement. It is evidence that could easily be procured after Ram Nath's confession, and we have no hesitation in rejecting it. In our judgment, therefore, it has not been proved by the prosecution that any of the appellants were concerned in the dacoity in which murder was committed at the godown of Jumna Das on July 13, 1932.

No eye-witnesses were produced to identify any persons connected with the placing of the bomb and letter at the house of Anandi Lal on April 6, 1932. That such a bomb and letter was placed there, is abundantly proved by Kastur Chand, P. W. No. 39, Constable Mahandra Singh, P. W. No. 27 and Sub-Inspector, Mohd. Ali Khan, P. W. No. 36. As we have stated previously, we are not satisfied that the letter was typed on the machine owned by Bengali Mal's father to which Bengali Mal had access. Previous letters demanding money by threats had been received by Anandi Lal who had reported the matter to the Police and in this case an attempt was made to connect Bachcha Babu with these letters. Anandi Lal, P. W. No. 37, deposed that after he had received two of the letters, a man stopped his car who he was told was one Tek Chand. The latter asked him if he had received any letters, and on being told that he had warned him that he had better pay as the letters came from a very dangerous man whom he later named as Bachcha Babu. Anandi Lal never told the Police of this incident, although he had already reported to the Police the receipt of the letters and it is difficult, therefore to believe that this incident ever took place. The learned Sessions Judge accepted this evidence, but in our view even if it were true, it is inadmissible against Bachcha Babu or any of the appellants. It is not alleged by the prosecution that Tek Chand was a conspirator, and therefore we cannot see how anything he said could be evidence against Bachcha Babu or any of the other appellants. In our judgment the prosecution has wholly failed to prove any connection between the appellants and the placing of the bomb at Anandi Lal's house or the letters demanding money by menaces which preceded it.

A number of witnesses were called to show that the appellants were frequently seen together during the period it was alleged that the conspiracy existed.

Sharif-ud-Din, P. W. No. 100, Mohd. Husain P. W. No. 101 and Shujat Husain, P. W. No. 102, deposed to having seen Bachcha and various members of the alleged conspiracy from time to time in Hewett Park in deep conversation and later identified a number of the appellants in jail. Ladli Prasad already referred to, also, refers to association between Bachcha Babu and some of the other appellants and reference is made also to such association in the evidence of a number of other witnesses. It is unnecessary to consider this evidence in any detail, because in our view it cannot assist the prosecution. It is not denied that the appellants knew each other and they might well have met in the park or elsewhere in the cool evening to converse without being guilty of conspiracy or having any unlawful purpose. Evidence of association to be of any value should suggest something suspicious in such association and no inference one way or another can be drawn from a mere casual meeting or meetings or conversation between the parties in a public place or park where mere acquaintances frequently meet and talk. It is not suggested by any of these witnesses that there was anything suspicious or strange or secret in the way these persons met and spoke. It is true that some witnesses said that Bachcha Babu and his friends in the park stopped their conversation when the witnesses approached, but there is nothing strange in this. There might have been 101 reasons other than the existence of a conspiracy which would induce Bachcha Babu and his companions to stop conversing whilst these witnesses were within earshot. In any event we find it difficult to believe that these witnesses could remember such incidents particularly when they attached no importance whatsoever to them when they occurred. Evidence of this kind is easily procurable and it is significant that none of these witnesses ever reported anything suspicious in the conduct of Bachcha Babu or any of the appellants until after the raid on August 5, and investigation into this alleged conspiracy had commenced.

In our view, therefore, the prosecution have wholly failed to establish the conspiracy alleged by them. The evidence called independent of the approvers proves nothing at all neither does it afford any corroboration of the statement of the approvers. Having regard to the circumstances in which these approvers first confessed and the obvious discrepancies between the confessions themselves and between the confessions and the subsequent evidence which they gave, we are not inclined to give any great weight to their evidence but whatever weight we give to it we cannot act upon it alone in the absence of corroboration. Having regard to the nature of the approvers' evidence it would require very strong and cogent corroboration before, we would regard it as safe to convict these appellants of conspiracy. There is no such strong and cogent evidence by way of corroboration; in fact there is no corroborative evidence worth the name at all. Further, in our view the prosecution have wholly failed to establish that any of the appellants were concerned in the criminal acts charged against them in this case excepting always the charges brought against Bachcha Babu in connection with the possession of arms, ammunition and explosive substances discovered at his house on August 5, 1932.

In conclusion, it is necessary for us briefly to consider the case against each appellant.

Bachcha Babu.—For the reasons already given the prosecution have failed to prove that Bachcha Babu was guilty of the conspiracy alleged. They have further failed to prove any connection between this appellant and the two dacoities of March 14, 1932, and July 13, 1932. The convictions, therefore, for conspiracy and abetment of these two dacoities cannot stand. For the reasons already given we are satisfied that the appellant was in unlawful and secret possession of a large quantity of arms, ammunition and explosive substances in circumstances which created offences under s. 20, Arms Act, s. 5, Explosive Substances Act and s. 411, Penal Code. He was, therefore, in our view, properly convicted by the learned Sessions Judge on these charges.

In the result we set aside the conviction and sentence of death passed upon this appellant for conspiracy contrary to s. 120 B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge. We further set aside the convictions on the two charges of abetment of dacoities for which no separate sentences were imposed upon him by the learned Sessions Judge. We, however, uphold the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 20, Arms Act, and the conviction and sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 5, Explosive Substances Act, and the conviction and sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 411 Penal Code. The sentences will run concurrently as directed by the learned Sessions Judge. To this extent the appeal of Bachcha Babu is allowed.

Nepali.—As we are not satisfied that the prosecution have proved the charge of conspiracy, the conviction and sentence of Nepali for conspiracy cannot stand. Further, in our view, it has not been proved that this appellant was concerned in the Chatta Thana bomb incident of April 1, 1932, or the dacoity at Jamna Das's godown on July 13, 1932, and the convictions and sentences in respect of these charges are, therefore, in our judgment not justified. We, therefore, allow the appeal of this appellant and set aside the convictions and sentences of death passed upon him for conspiracy contrary to s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and for dacoity with murder under s. 395-396, Penal Code, and the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 4 (a), Explosive Substances Act. We direct that this appellant be set at liberty forthwith unless required by the authorities upon any other charge.

Rishi Nath.—As we are not satisfied of the existence of conspiracy, his conviction under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge is not justified. In his case there is a further reason why he should be acquitted. A body of evidence was called on his behalf which proved beyond doubt that this appellant was not in Agra between about May 20, 1932 and June 20, 1932, yet Ram Nath approver spoke of meeting him on a number of occasions during this period and of introducing him about this time to Bachcha Babu. The learned Sessions Judge accepted this alibi evidence and rightly so, as it appears to us to be convicing, straight forward and truthful. This evidence makes it clear that Ram Nath is either most inaccurate in his testimony or deliberately untruthful. Rishi Nath further called evidence to show that he was away from Agra on the night of July 13, 1932, when the dacoity was committed at Jamna Das's godown. This evidence was rejected by the learned Sessions Judge and it is not necessary for us to discuss it in any detail. But it does raise in our minds very grave doubts about the accuracy of the approvers' statement that Rishi Nath was connected with the dacoity of July 13, 1932. However it is for the prosecution to prove the case and as the case against Rishi Nath stands entirely upon the evidence of the approvers, his conviction cannot be sustained.

We have not discussed the evidence which was tendered to show that this appellant was in unlawful possession of explosives on June 19, 1931, and therefore guilty of an offence under s. 5, Explosive Substances Act. The learned Judge was not satisfied that the undoubted explosion which took place on that day on Rishi Nath's premises was due to explosives. In his view it might have been caused by petrol vapour as alleged by the accused. He, therefore, acquitted the accused upon this charge and, in our view rightly. In our judgment, evidence relating to this incident cannot therefore be used upon the charges of conspiracy. In the result we allow the appeal of this appellant and set aside the conviction and sentence of 10 years' rigorous imprisonment for conspiracy under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and direct that he be set at liberty forthwith unless he is required by the authorities upon any other charge.

Ram Singh.—This appellant told an obvious lie as to his movements on the night of the dacoity on Jamna Das's premises and a body of evidence was called to prove this. However the fact that an accused person tells a lie is not sufficient to convict him by itself, nor can it be corroboration of the approvers' statement. For the reasons we have already given we are not satisfied that the conspiracy is proved, nor are we satisfied that this appellant was the person who stole the revolver from the house of his uncle Hakim Gayan Singh on July 13, 1931, and therefore the convictions and sentences upon these charges cannot be sustained. We, therefore, allow the appeal of this appellant, set aside the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charges and the conviction and sentence of one year's imprisonment under s. 380, Penal Code, and direct that this appellant be set at liberty forthwith unless he is required by the authorities upon any other charge.

Bengali Mal.—For the reasons stated we are not satisfied that this appellant is guilty of the charge of conspiracy. Nor are we satisfied that he was present at the dacoity of March 14, 1932, at the house of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram. Further, we are not satisfied that he threw or was concerned in the throwing of a bomb at the Chatta Thana on April 1, 1932. For the reasons we have already given we are also not satisfied that this appellant abetted the crime of extortion by providing a typewriter on which the letter to Anandi Lal accompanying the bomb was typed. In the result we allow the appeal of this appellant, set aside the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 395-397, Penal Code, and the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 4 (a), Explosive Substances Act, and the conviction under s. 387, Penal Code, read with s. 109, Penal Code, for which no separate sentence was given as the offence and punishment were merged with the conspiracy and direct that this appellant be set at liberty forthwith unless required by the authorities upon any other charge.

Jwala—As we are not satisfied that the prosecution have proved the charge of conspiracy, the conviction of this appellant under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge cannot be sustained. Further we are not satisfied that this appellant was present at the dacoity which took place at the godown of Manohar Bhagat Dhyan Ram on March 14, 1932, and therefore his conviction for that offence is also not justified. In the result we allow the appeal of this appellant, set aside the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 120-B, Penal Code, read with the other sections mentioned in the charge and the conviction and sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 395-397, Penal Code, and direct that he be set at liberty forthwith unless he is required by the authorities upon any other charge.

N. Order accordingly.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Petition No. 1303 of 1930
September 28, 1934
PAKENHAM WALSH, J.
SAVARALA VENKATASUBBIAH—PETITIONER
versus
KUMARA RAMIAH—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, Sch. II, r. 15—Decree on award—Revision, whether lies—Arbitrator basing decision on private enquiries and inadmissible evidence—Validity of award—Interference in revision.

It cannot be laid down as a general rule that the High Court cannot interfere in revision under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, with a decree passed in accordance with an award. Revision is permissible if the arbitrators or the Court have exceeded their jurisdiction or acted with material irregularity in exercising their jurisdiction. Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hasan (1), distinguished. Dabir-ud-Din v. Amina Bibi (2), Aramanai Rajagopala v. Aramani Rangasami (3) and Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Firm Kidai Pershad-Cheddi Lal (4), relied on.

Where the arbitrators in arriving at their decision were influenced by private inquiries about the case, their conduct amounts to misconduct and the award will be invalid Palavesam Chettiar v. Narayana Aiyar (5), Neba Ram v. Khota Ram (6), Ram Chander v. Hans Ram (7) and Marali Visram v. Sheriff Dewji (8), relied on.

Where the arbitrators acted upon a very material document which was, however, not proved to be genuine:

Held, that the award was bad and a decree based thereon could be set aside in revision. Sanyasi Rao v. Venkata Rao (10) and Dobson v. Groves (11), referred to.

C. R. P. under ss. 115 of Act V of 1908 and 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Madanapalle, dated December 14, 1929, and made in O. S. No. 35 of 1929.

Mr. S. A. Seshadri Ayyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. R. Arunachalam, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This revision petition is against an arbitrator's award to which objection was made in the lower Court but which was confirmed. The plaintiff in O. S. No. 35 of 1929 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Madanapalle brought a suit against the defendant on three items: (1) for 12 measures of paddy delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant's brother-in-law, the defendant having promised to pay for the same; (2) for a debt of Rs. 86-11-0 due by the defendant to the plaintiff in respect of tamarind and sugarcandy trade with regard to which the defendant executed a letter dated August 25, 1927; and (3) for three measures of Koru paddy cultivated in the manyam land of the plaintiff. The matter was referred to arbitrators who awarded the full sum to the plaintiff. Objections to the award were put in but were disallowed.

A preliminary objection has been raised that there is no power of revision in this Court in cases where the lower Court has confirmed the decision of the arbitrators and in support the well-known Privy Council case Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1), is quoted. At first sight this seems to be a very strong case. The question of jurisdiction of the Court had been raised there as an issue but was referred with the rest of the suit to the arbitrators. The arbitrators having found wrongly on this point that the Court had jurisdiction, the Court accepted the award. It was held that as the arbitrators had jurisdiction to decide the law wrongly and the Court accepted the award, it could not be challenged in revision. But, if that case is looked into closely, it will be seen that the arbitrators' action had not fallen under any of the clauses of r. 15 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, the Court was bound to accept the award and did not act either without jurisdiction or with material irregularity in exercising its jurisdiction by doing so. This case has been considered in this connection in Dabir-ud-Din v. Amina Bibi (2), where it was held:

"It cannot be laid down as a general rule that in no case in which an award has been filed and decree passed in accordance therewith, can the High Court interfere under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code. Revision is permissible in cases in which the arbitrators or the Court may have exceeded their jurisdiction or acted with material irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings."

Similarly it was held—though there mark was obiter—in Aramanai Rajagopala v. Aramanai Rangasami, 31 Ind. Cas. 458 (3), with reference to the same case:

"There is no appeal against a decree based upon an award, but if it can be shown that the lower Court acted without jurisdiction or acted with material irregularity in dealing with the award, it would be open to the High Court on a proper case being made out to revise such an order."

A number of cases have been quoted before me in which the High Court has so interfered. One of them, Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Firm Kidai Pershad-Cheddi Lal, 64 Ind. Cas. 363 (4), is on its facts a close parallel to the present. There, an arbitrator received documents from one party and based his award upon those documents without giving the other party an opportunity of seeing those documents and of meeting the inferences deducible therefrom. It was held that a revision lies against a decree passed upon an award, where the Court which passed the decree has committed an error in procedure or has misused the jurisdiction. In Palavesam Chettiar v. Narayana Aiyar (5), it was held that arbitrators cannot import their own personal knowledge unless empowered to do so. That is exactly the view taken in Neba Ram v. Khota Ram (6). In Ram Chander v. Hans Ram (7), it was held:

"Where it appears from the award that the arbitrator in arriving at the decision was influenced by secret enquiry about the case made by him after recording the evidence and by the opinion of third persons about the merits of the case, his conduct amounts to judicial misconduct and vitiates the award."

In Marali Visram v. Sheriff Dewji (8), the Privy Council case is also quoted and it was held, leave being given to convert the appeal into an application under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code, that the conduct of the arbitrators was so unauthorised with regard to procedure from first to last by any law that the Court could allow the application. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.
